British Colonial Office Names Two Africans to Important Posts

Nov. 21, 1942

56

LONDON—The Colonial Office has just appointed two outstanding Africans to prominent positions in colonial administration. They are K. A. Busia, who had returned to the Gold Coast to prepare a thesis for his Oxford PH.D, and Ameshadai Adu, brilliant professor of chemistry at Achimota College. The two scholars are to be district commissioners.

Busia was destined for a distinguished academic career right from the beginning of his elementary school days. At the Mfantsipim School, on the Gold Coast, where he studied, he took the junior and senior school certificates with honors. In the teachers' training class, which he joined afterwards, he came top of his class in the final examinations. Success followed successs, for he was invited to join the staff of Teachers' Training College in Wesley College. In 1935 he resigned and went to Achimota College as part-time teacher and student. Here he took his London BA in history, and won the coveted Gold Coast Government Scholarship to Oxofrd. While at Oxford, he took an honors degree in modern greats, and immediately started to prepare a thesis for the Oxford Ph.D.

DISPROVES THEORY

Busia's career contradicts the belief that the African has to pass thru several generations of semi-literacy before he finds himself in the modern intellectual world, for he is the first of his family to be able to read and write. Education, in the modern sense, was introduced into his home as late as 1917. He has younger brothers and sisters now studying at Achimota College, who are said to be equally promising. Busia had a comparatively short stay of only two and a half years in England. But during that period he had a crowded and useful life apart from his academic studies. He spoke at several meetings before large audiences in England, and was associated with a number of Christian organizations.

Busia was frequently "on the air," broadcasting on current affairs to Affica. A pamphlet on West Africa and the War is a contribution from his pen.

Busia is an Ashanti, and his family is one of the oldest in that historical region of West Africa. They have, for centuries ruled and played an important part in the northern provinces of the Ashanti Kingdom. Busia himself is in direct line of succession for the "Golden Stool." His appointment as a district officer will, therefore, enable him to use the political tradition and wisdom which he has inherited from his forefathers.

HOBBY IS MUSIC

He is a personal firend of the present King of Ashanti. At his present age of 27, it is safe to say that he is one of the most influential young men in Ashanti. His principal hobby is music, and he pays special attention to native music, which he hopes will figure prominently in the world some day. Busia has a wide knowledge of English literature. During his connection with Achimota he lectured in English to the university classes. He is a young man of rare personal qualities.

It is generally agreed that one of the most brilliant students who has ever lectured Achimota College is Ameshadai Adu. He was born on the Gold Coast, and his folk are well-known cocoa farmers and merchants in the eastern province of the Gold Coast.

EXTENSIVE TRAVELS

His uncle, Quashie Idun, who read law at Cambridge, was appointed a magistrate about four and a half years ago. On leaving elementary school, at the age of 16, Adu was able to take his school certificate with exemption from the London Matriculation, and his inter-science degree (London) in four and a half years. Later, he was awarded the Achimota Scholarship to Cambridge, where he took an honors degree in chemistry.

Adu traveled extensively in Europe during the student days and devoted particular attention to peasant agricultural problems in southeastern Europe. At the outbreak of war he returned home and was appointed to the faculty of Achimota College as professor of chemistry. This position he held until his appointment as district officer. Like Busia, Adu interested himself in international affairs, and attended several conferences in England and on the continent of Europe. Ameshadai Adu and Robert Gardiner led the African delegation to the World's Christian Youth Conference in Amsterdam.

Notables In Tribute To Noted African Educator

SALISBURY, N. C.—Notables of world-wide fame joined last week in tribute to the leading African of modern times, the late Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey, famed educator and humanitarian, at a dedication of a memorial stone at Livingstone college.

Dr. Aggrey, who died in New York City in 1927, was a graduate of both Livingstone college and Columbia university (M.A.). The memorial stone here was erected by contributions from African students in Great Britain and America and other friends of Dr. Aggrey.

A glowing tribute to the life and work of the African leader was made by Lord Viscount Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States.

Lord Halifax said:

"No doubt remains that men of every race found in Dr. Aggrey something that gave life to their own deepest hopes and feelings. He was an African, and proud of his heritage; he was eager, as he himself said, to be a first class Negro;' he had no desire to be a third-class European. Among his sayings, none seems better to be remembered than his image of the black and white keys on a piano keyboard. 'You can play a tune of sorts on the black keys,' he said, 'but for harmony you must use both the black and the white.'

"'For harmony you must use both the black and the white'—this was indeed the core of Dr. Aggrey's wisdom, and because of that he won the love and affection of all. 'And so, old friend,' wrote Sir Gordon Guggisberg, late governor of the Gold Coast, when he heard of his death, Rest in peace. You have laid the foundations for the road along which your beloved Africans are marching.' In his honor Sir Ransford Slater, Guggisberg's successor, issued an Extraordinary Gazette, declaring that the passing of Dr. Aggrey was 'a severe blow to both government and people.'

"Such words were said because these men, the colonial officers charged with responsibility towards Africa and deeply conscious of the weight of that responsibility, were the white keys playing in harmony with Aggrey's black. They shared with him the faith that 'the infinite personality of man can only come from the magnificent harmony of all human races,' that 'no nation can find its own salvation by breaking away from others,' that 'we must all be saved or we must all perish together.'"

"It is to me this type that we must look for aid from the race which he adorned in building the new world so that it will include all peoples, all religions, all colors and all social and economic types."

The British Embassy sent a message to be read at the dedication by Dr. Edwin W. Smith of England, author of "Aggrey of Africa" and "The Golden Stool," and former president of the Royal Anthropological institute of Great Britain. Nwia Kofi Nkruma, president of the African Students' association, cut the sod to be sent to Dr. Aggrey's ancestral home for burial.

Robert Kweku Atta Gardiner of the Universities of Cambridge and London, Colonial Research scholar at the University of Oxford, and representative of the West African Students' Union in England, who recently arrived in this country, delivered the major memorial address. He comes from the same village in the Gold Coast—Anamabu—where Dr. Aggrey was born.

The monument was accepted in a brief speech by Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes. Prof. Howard W. Odum, director of the Institute for Social Sciences at the University of North Carolina, also made a brief address. Mrs. Aggrey unveiled the monument.

The Failure Of Segregation

The statement that the "policy of segregation could not be carried out to its logical conclusin, because the interests of the Europeans and Natives were interlocked," which was made by Mr. D. L. Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs early this week at Kingwilliamstown, has undoubtedly upset the minds of the advocates of this policy. But Mr. Smit will certainly be congratulated by all those who believe in inter-racial co-operation, those who believe that there can be no peaceful development of this country until white and black have learned to work together, not as masters and servants, but as partners in the business of civilising the African continent. Whether many Europeans will agree with him or not, we are definitely sure that Mr. Smit in stating that the policy of segregation has failed was not actuated by selfish motives but moved by an ardent desire to give white South Africa the benefit of his knowledge and experience. For the fact stands out clearly that as Chairman of the Natives Representative Council, Mr. Smit has acquired a deeper knowledge of African affairs than any of his predecessors. He knows the conditions under which Africans live and labour, not as told by the officials of his Department, but by the spokesmen of the African people.

It is not surprising therefore, that he has now publicly declared that the segregation policy of the Union "cannot be carried out to its logical conclusion, because the interests of the Europeans and Natives are interlocked." What has brought about the failure of the policy of segregation is the inadequacy of land set aside for African occupation. The Natives Trust and Land Act has hopelessly failed to effect a territorial separation of the races, and has thus failed to justify the political and economic segregation of the Africans. Because of the congestion in the so-called Native reserves, in spite of the efforts of the Trust to improve the situation, the influx of Africans into urban areas still remains a difficult problem for the Municipalities to solve. The truth is that total segregation of the races at this stage is practically an impossibility. It might have been feasible at the time when it was advocated by Dr. Philip, but it is out of the question under the conditions existing to-day.

Mr. Smit is urging Europeans to improve the economic conditions of the urban Africans, "to pay them better wages and to see that they are better fed and given amenities essential to urban dwellers." The failure to do this, he says, will prevent them from fulfilling their trusteeship as the ruling race. To this plea, we hope the employers of African labour in industry and commerce, will not turn a deaf ear. The raising of the African standard of living will not in any way endanger the security of the white race. On the contrary it will stimulate the expansion of industry and commerce.

Another important point to which Mr. Smit has drawn the attention of the white public is the fact that "Natives are hedged round with too many restrictive laws," and that "artificial restrictions are placed upon their activities." There can be no doubt that in mentioning these disabilities, Mr. Smit wanted the public to realise that reform in this connection was urgently needed. He wanted them to react in such a way as to enable the authorities to bring about the necessary reforms.

Mr. Smit's Indictment Of Restrictive Laws

Speaking at a Municipal luncheon given by the Municipality of King William's Town at the Commercial Hotel, King William's Town on Monday, October 12, 1942 Mr. D. L. Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs, who was the guest of honour said that he was sorry Colonel Reitz had been prevented by illness from being present. He had asked him to convey to the audience his sincere regret and his good wishes for the prosperity and future progress of the town. He also desired him to tender the Government's deep sympathy at the loss of so many of their sons in the great struggle in Libya. "Their sacrifices have not been in vain and we know that these young men have maintained the highest traditions of your Border districts—and that having given all they have gained all."

Continuing Mr Smit said: "To me, Mr Mayor, the meeting with so many old friends at this luncheon has been a great pleasure, particularly as I was born in your hinterland; and since my earliest years, I have regarded King William's Town with a feeling of veneration as the place where our administration in this territory began; and there is nobody who has cause for more abundant gratitude to the people of this town for their hospitality and kindness to me and the officers of my department, and for the sympathy we have received in our Native administration.

NATIVE ADMINISTRATION

"And speaking of Native administration, Mr. Mayor, I am reminded that it was at the embryo city of King William's Town in 1835 that that picturesque soldier Sir Harry Smith—then a Colonel—was appointed here with his beautiful Spanish wife to take charge of Sir Benjamin Durban's new experiment in Frontier policy, of bringing the Natives under the influence of British laws and attaching them to the Colony by a common interest and feeling with British subjects, and thus to establish a barrier of civilisation between the Natives beyond the Kei and the European settlements. The policy was to break down the power of the chiefs and to introduce habits of civilisation and industry by 'humane coercion and example' as Smith put it, and so convert a vexatious enemy into peaceable and useful subjects."

"To carry this story a little further, Mr. Mayor, you will remember how with an escort of red-coated soldiers, Smith announced himself to an assembly of chiefs and councillors at Fort Cox as their great "Inkosinkulu." and how on a later occasion in his full regimentals from a throne in a large room in the Reverend John Brownlee's house (the present residency) he installed a number of chiefs as Magistrates and hung big seals of office round their necks, after reading them his famous lecture on

Notables In Tribute To Noted African Educator

SALISBURY, N. C.—Notables of world-wide fame joined last week in tribute to the leading African of modern times, the late Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey, famed educator and humanitarian, at a dedication of a memorial stone at Livingstone college.

Dr. Aggrey, who died in New York City in 1927, was a graduate of both Livingstone college and Columbia university (M.A.). The memorial stone here was erected by contributions from African students in Great Britain and America and other friends of Dr. Aggrey.

A glowing tribute to the life and work of the African leader was made by Lord Viscount Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States.

Lord Halifax said:

"No doubt remains that men of every race found in Dr. Aggrey something that gave life to their own deepest hopes and feelings. He was an African, and proud of his heritage; he was eager, as he himself said, to be a first class Negro;' he had no desire to be a third-class European. Among his sayings, none seems better to be remembered than his image of the black and white keys on a piano keyboard. 'You can play a tune of sorts on the black keys,' he said, 'but for harmony you must use both the black and the white.'

"'For harmony you must use both the black and the white'—this was indeed the core of Dr. Aggrey's wisdom, and because of that he won the love and affection of all. 'And so, old friend,' wrote Sir Gordon Guggisberg, late governor of the Gold Coast, when he heard of his death, Rest in peace. You have laid the foundations for the road along which your beloved Africans are marching.' In his honor Sir Ransford Slater, Guggisberg's successor, issued an Extraordinary Gazette, declaring that the passing of Dr. Aggrey was 'a severe blow to both government and people.'

"Such words were said because these men, the colonial officers charged with responsibility towards Africa and deeply conscious of the weight of that responsibility, were the white keys playing in harmony with Aggrey's black. They shared with him the faith that 'the infinite personality of man can only come from the magnificent harmony of all human races,' that 'no nation can find its own salvation by breaking away from others,' that 'we must all be saved or we must all perish together.'"

"It is to me this type that we must look for aid from the race which he adorned in building the new world so that it will include all peoples, all religions, all colors and all social and economic types."

The British Embassy sent a message to be read at the dedication by Dr. Edwin W. Smith of England, author of "Aggrey of Africa" and "The Golden Stool," and former president of the Royal Anthropological institute of Great Britain. Nwia Kofi Nkruma, president of the African Students' association, cut the sod to be sent to Dr. Aggrey's ancestral home for burial.

Robert Kweku Atta Gardiner of the Universities of Cambridge and London, Colonial Research scholar at the University of Oxford, and representative of the West African Students' Union in England, who recently arrived in this country, delivered the major memorial address. He comes from the same village in the Gold Coast—Anamabu—where Dr. Aggrey was born.

The monument was accepted in a brief speech by Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes. Prof. Howard W. Odum, director of the Institute for Social Sciences at the University of North Carolina, also made a brief address. Mrs. Aggrey unveiled the monument.

The Failure Of Segregation

The statement that the "policy of segregation could not be carried out to its logical conclusin, because the interests of the Europeans and Natives were interlocked," which was made by Mr. D L. Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs early this week at Kingwilliamstown, has undoubtedly upset the minds of the advocates of this policy. But Mr. Smit will certainly be congratulated by all those who believe in inter-racial co-operation, those who believe that there can be no peaceful development of this country until white and black have learned to work together, not as masters and servants, but as partners in the business of civilising the African continent. Whether many Europeans will agree with him or not, we are definitely sure that Mr. Smit in stating that the policy of segregation has failed was not actuated by selfish motives but moved by an ardent desire to give white South Africa the benefit of his knowledge and experience. For the fact stands out clearly that as Chairman of the Natives Representative Council, Mr. Smit has acquired a deeper knowledge of African affairs than any of his predecessors. He knows the conditions under which Africans live and labour, not as told by the officials of his Department, but by the spokesmen of the African people.

It is not surprising therefore, that he has now publicly declared that the segregation policy of the Union "cannot be carried out to its logical conclusion, because the interests of the Europeans and Natives are interlocked." What has brought about the failure of the policy of segregation is the inadequacy of land set aside for African occupation. The Natives Trust and Land Act has hopelessly failed to effect a territorial separation of the races, and has thus failed to justify the political and economic segregation of the Africans. Because of the congestion in the so-called Native reserves, in spite of the efforts of the Trust to improve the situation, the influx of Africans into urban areas still remains a difficult problem for the Municipalities to solve. …nesty and religion and high morals required them to take the Oath of Allegiance to His Majesty the King.

"Sir Benjamin Durban's experiment failed for want of support from the British Government.

"We have tried out many other experiments in Native administration since then; but we have a long road to travel still, and our ultimate success will depend upon the sympathy and good sense of our European citizens. During the past few years we have been engaged in a policy of segregation, but the interests of the Europeans and the Natives have become so interlocked and the pathway is beset with so many practical difficulties that I do not think we shall ever be ab'e to carry it to its logical conclusion.

"But at the same time, owing to the generosity of the Government, a great deal of good work has been done since the so-called segregation laws were passed, to improve the condition of the Natives—not only in the purchase of more land for Native settlement but in providing large sums of money for Native housing and education, and we look forward to a period of great progress and a gradual improvement in the attitude of the White man towards the Black in the next decade. And Mr. Mayor, we have been greatly encouraged in our work by the liberal attitude and help we have received from King William's Town. Your location is an example that we hope will be followed by other municipalities in the Eastern Province, and the work you are doing for the social welfare of your Native community is deserving of the highest praise.

MATTER OF GRAVE CONCERN

"But, Mr. Mayor, we need to go a step further than that. The economic condition of the Natives in most of our urban centres is a matter for grave concern, and until we improve the economic standard of Natives in the towns—until we are prepared to pay them better wages, to see that they are properly fed and to give them the decent amenities that are essential to the urban dweller, we shall never fulfil the trusteeship that has been laid upon us as the ruling race.

"I know I am treading on dangerous ground, Mr. Mayor, but in our administration we hedge the Native round with too many restrictive laws, and for the protection of our own interests we impose colour bars and deny him the right to take his place in our industries as a skilled worker, and in other ways we place artificial limitations upon his activities.

"These things, Mr. Mayor, are unjust and we should take courage in … hands and abolish them all.

"The Government has recently appointed a Commission to enquire into the health of the people and to make recommendations for the establishment of a National Health Service—but in so far as the Natives are concerned, while better hospital facilities are urgent and necessary, such measures are merely palliatives and will not bring the millenium we seek unless they go hand in hand with better wages, better food and better housing.

"I know that progress along these lines must be slow, but we look to you as citizens who have always played an important part in our Administration to help us in educating public opinion to a more liberal outlook.

"In Native Affairs we have made King William's Town the centre of our administration for the Cape Province south of the Orange River, and we are glad to count you among our friends.

"Today, Mr. Mayor, I opened the Forbes-Grant secondary school in your Location that was built with funds provided by my Department—and I have much pleasure in announcing that it has been decided to grant a sum of £5,000 to your Hospital Board to enable them to erect at the Grey Hospital a hostel for Native nurses, so that your Hospital may become a central training institution for young Native women from this and the surrounding districts.

"I thank you, Sir, for your hospitality, and I assure you that this function will always remain with me as a very pleasant memory," Mr. Smit concluded.

Dr. Butler, Other Notables Join in Praising Late Educator; Libations Offered to Gods

DEC 19 1942

SALISBURY, N. C.—The high character and outstanding work of the late Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey, West African educator, were recently extolled at a memorial service for Dr. Aggrey by Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to Washington; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University; Kweku Attah Gardiner, visiting scholar of Oxford and Cambridge Universities and representative of the West African Students Union of Great Britain; Dr. Edwin W. Smith, author of "Aggrey of Africa"; Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, and others.

The ceremonies, which were held in the auditorium of Livingstone College and the nearby cemetery on Thanksgiving Day, consisted of the reading of the special messages of Lord Halifax and Dr. Butler, and addresses by other speakers.

At the cemetery libations were offered to the gods according to traditional African ritual, cutting of the sod and the taking of a piece of earth in which the remains of Dr. Aggrey lie for burial in his native land.

In his tribute, Lord Halifax said: "No doubt remains that men of every race found in Dr. Aggrey something that gave life to their own deepest hopes and feelings. He was an African, and proud of his heritage. He was eager, as he himself said, to be 'a first class Negro'; he had no desire to be a third class European . . ."

Dr. Aggrey was born in 1875 on the Gold Coast, West Africa, where he received his early education. He came to the United States and continued his studies at Livingstone College, and Columbia University, from which he received the master's degree and completed the written work for his doctor's. In the meantime, he had served on two educational commissions in Africa and was appointed vice-principal of Achimota College on the Gold Coast. He died in America in 1927, shortly after his arrival on a visit.

Britain and the Herrenvolk Theory.

It may seem strange that in the midst of our tangle of perplexities and responsibilities of war, and the complete upturn of our own life and vast uncertainty as to the conditions of our post war existence, we should be asked to turn our thoughts elsewhere just now. Yet it is just because we are at war, and because the struggle centres around a theory of racial discrimination which would place one people over all others, that we British folk are being compelled not only to defend but also to examine ourselves.

How do we stand in this matter of Herrenvolk overlordship? As…

…we stake life and livlihood upon the struggle against all that Hitler stands for, are we ourselves clean handed?

No one who follows at all carefully the record of questions and answers in the Houses of Parliament can fail to see that our representatives are concerned that this question be thrashed out. We, their constituents, must ask ourselves how we may in our humbler stations strengthen the hands of Govenment if, as appears to be the case it finds itself involved in complaints and accusations concerning oversea territories where we bear rule. Certain it is that both the Colonial Office and the India Office are deeply concerned. When they speak, through Lord Cranborne or Mr. Amery, will they do so as we would wish them? Can we make sure that they so speak?

In certain countries, as for example, India, now our fighting allies, there is no doubt at all that our difficulties spring from roots deep down in a certain Herrenvolk theory. And it is interesting, just in passing to realise that the Indian phrase which we have made our own, proudly taking it as descriptive of ourselves, is an exact translation of the German phrase. Herrenvolk and Sahiblog mean exactly the same thing! They mean master-people. And no one who has had any experience of a certain type of pukka-Sahib can doubt that grave dangers beset any nation placed by circumstances in power over another race, temporarily helpless and obsequious. It would be strange indeed if we British had been able to escape all these dangers. Thackeray did not exaggerate when he painted the picture of Jos. Sedley in Vanity Fair. That was a member of a Herrenvolk at the height of its vanity and error. A loathsome spectacle? Certainly. And today almost impossible of recurrence. Yet it is the fruit and product of the seed sown by the Jos. Sedley (and not in India only) that is giving so much anxiety in our garden of empire today.

And not only out there somewhere in the East. Here at home it is not necessa… to do more than remind ourselves that discrimination based on a "white V. colour"…

Nor, as a nation, do we realize just what the influences are which have brought about in certain places the desertion of a principle for which our parliament still quite clearly stands. Yet these influences are known to many.

Perhaps the point can be best made by an illustration, the truth and appropriateness of which can be called in question by no one.

Today we have in New Zealand a Maori …pulation happily absorbed into the life … the country and barred in no way from … opportunities and its responsibilities … representative office it is quite imma… whether one is Maori or of British descent. Yet just one hundred years ago an attempt was made by certain financial and industrial interests to cancel the guarantee given by the British Crown to the Maori people. …

…theory still gives pain and bitter memory to very many. It is simply mentioned here in order that we see our own part in this as a bit of a very far-reaching problem which arises to confront us as we proclaim antagonism to the Herrenvolk theory of Hitler and this nordic school of anthropology. For we have to remember that in proclaiming that antagonism we imply that we equally proclaim our attachment to a principle of free and equal treament for and among all men, irrespective of colour or intellectual attainment.

We know that this principle is that on which our British Parliament does stand. Only the other day it was restated by the Under-Secretary for the Colonies in the House, and stated quite clearly. What we do not realize is that the principle is being set aside in certain territories with disastrous results in present anxiety and discontent and even more disastrous possibilities for the years ahead.

British Experts Study Plans

SEP 5 1942

By GEORGE PADMORE
(London Correspondent)

LONDON, Sept. 3. (Censored)—Plans for colonial reconstruction of the Empire have been the subject of discussion in the House of Commons and among colonial experts since the collapse of British power in the Far East.

Realizing that Africa is destined to constitute the main territories in the empire in the future, post-war schemes for developing these rich colonies are being worked out by a special committee set up by the colonial office under the chairmanship of Lord Hailey, former governor in India.

"The old idea of 'empire' is absolutely dead, and with it the belief that men of one pigmentation of skin are ipso facto superior to those of other skin pigmentation," writes leftist millionaire publisher Edward Hulton in his weekly, Picture Post. "Our government should, incidentally, now make a formal declaration that we honor Chinese civilization and deplore all loose talk about 'little yellow men,' even as applied to the Japanese," says Editor Hulton.

POST-WAR CONTROL OF "BACKWARD RACES"

Passing on to discuss the future of Africa, Hulton says, "In the future, the 'backward peoples' must be ruled, not merely so that their own interests are 'paramount'—as in the present colonial office phrase; the natural resources of, say, nortehern Rhodesia, must be kept in that country for the good of its inhabitants and not drained for the benefit of share-holders in London.

"All trade and development in backward areas will have to be under government control, even regardless of the measure of nationalization or government control, which is established in this country. And if western Europe becomes a federation, a federal organization must administer the former colonies of the European Powers—including the British. Under the aegis of this body, the so-called 'backward nations' must be schooled, finally to take their place as equals at the counsel table of the federation. Thus the age of 'empires' will give place to the new age of free federation and equal partnership in the enjoyment of the age-old bounty of nature and the new possibilities of science."

BROADCAST ON FUTURE OF AFRICA

Broadcasting on the future of the colonial empire, Under-Secretary of State Harold MacMillan assured the British people that despite reports to the contrary, "the colonial empire is not going to break up. Indeed, it is only really just beginning. We must see to it that the comradeship and partnership, which are growing up between us during the war, continue into the day of peace. For do not let us think they will be easy days; they will be difficult and exacting days. And the whole concern—the colonies and ourselves—must stand together, for security, for trade, and for a common ideal and purpose of life. The pioneer days lie behind. The great days lie ahead.

"For there is a great job to be done. We have to press forward with education, health services, transport, roads, railways, agriculture, mining, industry. Those are the material things. But they can only prosper if they are based upon a real understanding of the heart and mind."

Year Of Toil And Sweat At Fort Cox

JUL 1 1 1942

ANNUAL REPORT

At the annual prize-giving function held on Wednesday, June 17 the Actin the course of his annual report said :—

The past year has been a year of toil and sweat. We have also not been spared the blood and tears and it is with deep regret that we have to record the untimely death of one of our staff, young Lieutenant H. B. Stevenson of the South African Air Force, who was killed in an air crash in East Africa.

The health of the students has been excellent throughout the year. The number of students reporting sick has again been negligible. The school physician, Dr. R. T. Bokwe, is to be congratulated on this fine record.

NEW VILLAGE BUILT

The students have worked well and willingly throughout their course. They have perhaps worked harder than any previous batch of students. They have had to work overtime practically every day and they have sacrificed many of their Saturday afternoons, devoting the time to work. All this was due to extra work the school was asked to undertake as a war measure to increase food production for man and beast. The school also undertook to build 30 cottages for some 30 Native families from Graaff-Reinet who have recently been settled on the Cwaru farm adjoining Fort Cox. Over 400,000 bricks had to be made. Stone for foundation had to be quarried and carted and the houses had to be built as short a time as possible. Work on the Cwaru settlement commenced at the beginning of August last year, and by the end of the year the whole settlement was completed and the settlers, comprising some 160 men, women and children, were in residence. Lectures and an extensive programme of farm work had to be carried out at the same time.

This extra work has been all to the advantage of the students. Most of them are now expert brick-makers and builders. They have seen all records in crop production surpassed by over 100 per cent. during the last two years. The school's annual normal production in the past has been in the region of 500 to 600 bags of grain The past year it will be well over the 1,200 mark. We have already reaped 100 bags of wheat, 330 bags of kaffircorn, and it is estimated that there will be over 700 bags of mealies. some 200 bags of soya beans and ordinary beans, already reaped but not threshed.

Besides the grain, hundreds of tons of silage, cowpea fodder, greenfood, lucerne hay, etc., has been produced for stock. More than the school's requirements of potatoes, Jerusalem artichokes and vegetables have also been won from the soil during the year.

In spite of a heavy programme of work the students have done well at soccer, rugby, cricket and tennis, holding their own against most of the big neighbouring institutions. For the first time Fort Cox students managed to win that most exciting event, the relay race, when competing against Fort Hare, at For Cox Native Agricutural School Principal (Mr. A. L. Vanderplank) in Lovedale, Healdtown and St. Matthews at inter-institution athletic sports competition held at Lovedale in April last.

TRAINING OF TEACHERS

JUL 1 1 194

The number of applications received for the next course are numerous. It is the intention of the Department of Native Affairs to have a number of teachers trained at Fort Cox in the near future. Facilities are being made to accept some 8 or 10 prospective teachers for the two-year diploma course next term and a similar number of existing teachers will be accepted for a one-year certificate course in agriculture. They will be knocked into shape at Fort Cox and it is hoped that they will be better qualified to teach agricultural subjects, including vegetable gardening, in a practical and useful manner to numerous children at the rural schools in the reserve. They will be treated as ordinary students at Fort Cox and will follow the present syllabus of the two-year diploma course with slight modifications to bring in club work, preparation of food, marketing, etc.

THE DIPLOMA COURSE

No further changes were made in the training of diploma students. It is hoped to adjust the vacation periods in the near future and we wish to abolish the Christmas holidays altogether as they correspond with the most important crop production period of the year when weed growth etc., has to be controlled. It is also our intention to make a change in the long winter vacation period as well, allowing only half the number of students to be away at a time. This will mean extra work and fewer holidays for the students, but it will also mean greater efficiency in instruction in their important agricultural project work training.

The senior students were again divided into groups of eight, each group operating on a set of farm projects. The size of each of these project units is based on the amount of land and stock which the average African farmer in the Ciskei and elsewhere can command. Only simple equipment, such as the ordinary African farmer can afford, was used in working of these projects.

The report gave details of each project and proceeded :

If only the average African farmer or small holder could reap half Fort Cox students this year on their similar small holdings they would be approximately three to four times better off than they are at present. The Ciskei would be turned into a granary and a country literally flowing with milk and honey. The malnutrition bogey would disappear overnight. Villages would spring up where only bleak denuded locations exist today. King William's Town, the capital of Ciskei, would recapture her past glory through the possession of a flourishing hinterland. Why cannot such a state of affairs be brought about? Our soldiers, both South Africans and Africans, up North are facing greater and sterner problems than the domestic issues on the home front and they are winning through gloriously. Is it not discipline, organisation, morale which is leading them on to victory? Let us bring in a little more discipline, organisation and the correct spirit of progress to enable us to win through to a not less glorious victory against want, misery malnutrition and disease. Many of our soldiers after the war will require and deserve inspiring and fruitful work. Let them turn their tanks into tractors and and their guns into ploughs to enable every citizen of this country to win through to peace and plenty, security for all.

It can be done; it must be done; it will be done should be the resolve of every South African and African, otherwise we may in the not too far distant future see our beautiful country turned into just another African desert brought about by all the overstocking and bad farming methods at present tolerating in the country generally and in the African areas in particular.

Women Home Demonstrators

Besides training men, two women home demonstrators were trained with marked success during the year. Before coming to Fort Cox they had taken a course for departmental visiting teachers or Jean teachers held at All Saints in the Transkei. It is hoped to extend this course in the near future so that women can be trained to carry out useful work, including vegetable gardening, cookery, poultry and pig-rearing and child welfare amongst the womenfolk in the African areas. This work by trained women at their people's homes is already showing excellent results.

A very successful short course for African women was held during the past year. A record number of 75 women attended. Applications for another women's short course to be held next year are coming in well. They already exceed the number received last year.

Two well supported farmers' days were held during the past year, one for women and one for men, well over 1,000 people being present. These days are becoming more and more popular, due largely to the official support given by the Chief Native Commissioner, who always comes out to address the farmers on these occasions and also to the leading Africans who make a point af attending to express their views on agricultural and living problems affecting the welfare of their people. One leading African recently remarked that Fort Cox is one of the few centres of African education where learning is not confined only to the students but to the parents as well.

Kaffircorn.—Some 40 strains of kaffircorn varieties from all over the Union and beyond its borders have again been tested out, with more and more promising results. It is due to these experiments which have been in operation for the past four years, that it is possible to report such excellent yields from all our lands planted to this crop. 14½ bags to the acre were obtained from some of our dry lands this year—£16 worth of kaffircorn per acre at present day prices. We hear that African farmers who obtained this heavy yielding tested seed from the school last year are also reaping good crops.

Soya Beans.—Soya beans, which have been tried out in various ways for the past few years, are now being planted on a comparatively large scale. 35 acres were planted to this crop last season and over 200 bags of 200lbs. each are expected when they are threshed. This wonderful bean will in future be used to balance our poultry rations in the place of meat meal, which is now difficult to obtain. It is also intended to use it to balance our cow rations for milk production in the place of monkey-nut meal, which is also scarce. They have already been used to fortify the mealie and other unbalanced African foods with excellent results. Good biscuits costing 2d. per lb. have been made with soya bean meal, mealie meal, ordinary fat or lard, bicarbonate of soda, syrup or molasses and a little salt.

Feeding School Children

Interesting experiments in the feeding of school children have been carried out at one of the rural schools near Fort Cox. The parents supply the mealies or kaffircorn. These are ground and fortified with 20 per cent. soya bean meal at Fort Cox. This meal is then made into porridge and "marewu," which is prepared and consumed by children at the school on three days each week. On the other two days the children cook and eat stews made from vegetables they themselves grow in their school gardens. This experiment was carried out in collaboration with Dr. Bokwe, Assistant District Surgeon, Middledrift, who weighs and examines the children from time to time. His report on the experiment was a very favourable one. It is intended to carry out further feeding schemes with equal quantities of skim milk and soya bean-yellow mealie meal porridge made into a nourishing gruel. The food will be prepared at Fort Cox and sent to surrounding schools. Each child will be given 1pint of this fortified food each day. Additional cows have already been purchased to enable a start to be made on the feeding of some 300 school children in the near future. The cream taken from the milk will be more or less replaced by the fat from the soya bean. The cream cheque will go a long way towards making this a self-supporting feeding scheme.

A big programme of development work was carried out throughout the year. Over [illegible] acres of land was levelled and graded for irrigation purposes by the Trust engineering section. The students levelled, graded and finally water-levelled and planted 4 acres to lucerne.

Usual extension work, such as judging at shows and delivering of lectures and demonstrations in many areas of the Ciskei, was carried out by the school staff.

I thank the staff for their excellent work and willing service throughout the year. I especially thank Mr. Ross, the Acting Vice-Principal, for his wholehearted support in helping me to run the school.

I would also like to convey a message of greetings and goodwill from the school to those of our staff and ex-staff members who are in the fighting services. We envy them and are proud of their deeds

Strategy in Africa

By Wm. Philip Simms

OCT 20 1942

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The Negro republic of Liberia, sometimes called "the foster child of Uncle Sam," is about to join in the war on the side of the United Nations, according to Axis spokesmen, thus providing a base from which to attack Dakar.

According to a German broadcast, unconfirmed here, a division of American troops has arrived at Monrovia, the Liberian capital. Pro-Nazi Vichy officials say allied men and material continue to land at every available West African port. Judging by the commotion Berlin, Vichy and Rome are making a major allied offensive is expected in Africa shortly.

Liberia, however, is not a particularly good springboard. It lacks the harbor facilities so essential to the quick handling of shipping. However, the British colony and protectorate of Sierra Leone adjoins Liberia on the north, and its capital, Freetown, is one of the best ports in the region. Freetown is about 500 miles south of Dakar.

• • OCT 20 1942

Then there is Gambia, another British colony and protectorate. Gambia actually forms an enclave in French Senegal, and Bathurst, Gambia's capital, is scarcely 100 miles from Dakar, the capital of Senegambia. Bathurst has long been a British air base. Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh once landed and took off there.

Taken together, therefore, Liberia, Sierra Leone and Gambia offer considerable strategic advantages. There is ample ground space and anchorage for large-scale military, naval and air operations, with plenty of room on high ground for personnel.

Gambia has an area of 4000 square miles, being somewhat smaller than Connecticut. It straddles Gambia River, the only stream on the west coast navigable by ocean steamers 200 miles up throughout the year. Bathurst has about 10,000 population, faces the river and has plenty of deep water.

Freetown, capital of Sierra Leone, on the other hand, is quite a metropolis. It has upward of 55,000 inhabitants. It used to be dubbed "white man's grave," because of malaria and other tropical diseases. Since the turn of the century, however, conditions there have greatly improved.

Liberia has a more healthful climate. It is within five degrees of the equator, but the country is mostly plateau averaging around 1500 feet. Monrovia has about 12,000 population. Almost all of the 20,000 or so Americo-Liberians live there or along the coastal fringe, leaving the hinterland to the 1,500,000 natives.

Berlin radio reports that President Roosevelt's special envoy, Lester A. Walton, has conferred with Liberian President Edwin J. Barclay and that a statement is momentarily expected announcing "adherence to the United Nations."

Mr. Walton is a former Negro newspaperman of international reputation. He covered the Geneva Conferences at which the League of Nations evolved a plan to save Liberia from bankruptcy or worse. His stories were among the best published in this country.

Liberia was first known as the "grain coast" because of a special kind of pepper which grew there, called "grains of paradise." In the early 1820s an American organization set up a colony there for freed slaves. At first called Christopolis, the colony was later renamed Liberia and this, in turn, became a republic.

Even so, Liberia's pathway has always been thorny. Few American Negroes have gone there to live as her sponsors intended. After more than a century, fewer than 25,000 are there today. Financial worries continued to pile up until the depression hit her in 1933, when the United States and the League had to go to her rescue. The alternative was the loss of her independence and a future under British or French mandate.

U. S. Troops In Liberia

Quite aside from the military significance, interest attaches to the sending of American troops to Liberia because of the strange background of this far-off Negro Republic.

Liberia, as a Negro Republic, had its inception in the minds of a group of fanatics more than a hundred years ago. Living in the North and knowing nothing about the Negro, these fanatics conceived the idea that it would be a grand thing to create a Negro Republic in Africa and bring about conditions under which the Negroes in the South could go back to their native land.

Thus Liberia came into being and forthwith plans were made for carrying the Negroes of the South back to Africa. But, to the amazement of the fanatics, the Negroes did not want to go and those actually departing were infinitisimal in number. The whole thing proved a relatively empty gesture, based upon a false hypothesis.

And, it might be observed, that this is the trouble with all the reformers who wish to deal with the Negro situation from the outside. They don't know what it is all about and usually fall into serious error, as was the case in the founding of Liberia, which country has never attracted Negroes from the United States and which has led a stormy and disappointing existence under natives, who constitute the major part of the population.

Padmore Assails Abuses Of Britain in Africa

56

Hard to Put Faith in World Crusade In Face of Them, Author Declares

JUL 25 1942

LONDON—"How can we expect other peoples to believe that Britain stands for a better world when injustices like these remain in the British Empire?"

George Padmore, Negro author of several books on imperialism and colonial problems and newspaper correspondent, in the New Leader of May 9, continues his expose of today's British policy in Africa, even though the United Nations, of which Britain is a member, have declared their purpose to achieve the liberation of the oppressed and exploited under the Hitler system.

Mr. Padmore says:

Get 30 Cents a Day

"Gold and diamond mining, and more lately maganese, have begun to create an industrial proletariat, whose wages are in the region of 30 cents per day, or less. Together with this gradual proletarianisation, it looks as though all the other evils concomitant with the growth of industrialisation in Africa will come to West Africa, unless something drastic is done to assist the native peoples to secure better wages and conditions of work. This, however, in present conditions seems a most unlikely eventuality, and the plans suggested both by Dr. Leys and Dr. Hinden, both of whom are quite clear in their minds as to the evils which British imperialism has wrought in Africa, but neither of whom seems to wish to put an end to that imperialism, are utterly inadequate.

"Both have ideas for alleviating the disabilities of the African natives, but they want to achieve these humanitarian ends within the framework of the existing social order, which is impossible.

"Dr. Leys believes that a 'dispatch' to the House of Commons will secure the necessary amelioration, based upon the abolition of racial discrimination, which he imagines can be achieved with due regard for vested interests.

Provides Big Salaries

"Dr. Hinden advocates a wider Colonial Development and Welfare Fund, which, to date, has given most of the colonies nothing more than a few labour advisers, whose aim is to obstruct the natural development of militant trade unionism among the native workers.

"The money which the scheme has declaredly put aside for development purposes is merely being spent in providing salaries for white officials and so-called experts. Where any sums are spent on agricultural research, they are done so in the service of the white planters. If Dr. Hinden would say who is to administer her Development and Welfare Fund, we might perhaps get somewhere, but unless she does so, we can only assume that Whitehall bureaucrats are to be its administrators.

"It is peculiar that most British Left-Wing intellectuals who see the dire results which British colonial policy (supposedly the best in the world has achieved, nevertheless refuse to see that the only possible and lasting solution is the complete liquidation of the system of imperialism which has given rise to the conditions which they deplore."

Demand Abolition Of Pass Laws In South Africa

NEW YORK—Following receipt of information in this country to the effect that the South African Government has decided to recognize African trade unions and to relax the obnoxious pass laws in industrial centers such as Johannesburg, Protoria, Bloomfontein, etc., the Council on African Affairs here forwarded a communication to Colonel Reitz of the South African government, demanding complete abolition of "pass laws" which serve to hinder the freedom of movement of African people.

The council stated that "pass laws" do violence to African peoples and are in conflict with the role of South Africa in today's struggle for freedom against all fascism."

HISTORY OF PASS LAWS

Referring to the history of the "pass laws," the New York council declared:

"The history of the pass laws in South Africa reveals some of the bitter experiences of African people.

"Originally instituted in 1809, the first S. A. Pass Regulation was intended to 'fix' the residence of the Hottentots, then inhabiting the Cape Province.

"Despite the nomadic life of the Hottentots, individuals who had no pass were regarded as vagrants and local authorities could contract them into service with anyone whom they pleased.

"As the white settlers moved into the interior of South Africa from the coastal areas, continuous clashes took place with the African Bantu inhabitants and a further use was found for the pass regulation to prevent Xhosa tribes from occupying the border districts.

VAGRANCY ACTS

"In the Cape Province, the movement of Africans was controlled through the operation of Vagrancy Acts. As a result the law compelling the carrying of passes is now less in evidence there.

"In the northern provinces of South Africa, however, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, pass laws have always been rigid. Africans cannot travel without passes and can be flogged as well as imprisoned for failure to produce them on request by the police.

WHAT ARE THE PASSES?

"The 'passes' which Africans are forced to carry include the following: a receipt for payment of the annual Poll Tax of $5, a 'monthly' pass or Native Service Contract which must be franked by the employer each month with a 2/- (50 cent) revenue stamp, a 'night special' pass authorizing Africans to be on the streets between the curfew hour, 9 p. m. and 4 a. m., and a 'traveling' pass authorizing movement for unemployed Africans.

EXEMPTION IS DIFFICULT

"Although exemption from the necessity of carrying passes can be obtained from the Native Affairs Department in practice it is difficult for any large number of Africans to obtain the necessary educational qualificatons. Such exemption is in itself only another pass, failure to produce which leads to arrest.

NUMEROUS ARRESTS

"Colonel Deneys Reitz, minister of Native Affairs, who has championed the abolition of the pass system, estimated recently that in the Transvaal province alone between 19[illegible] and 1941 no fewer than 297,0[illegible]9 Africans were arrested under the pass laws: 283,823 prosecuted and 273,790 convicted while probably five times that number were accosted by the police.

AFRICANS FIGHT FOR THEIR FREEDOM

"Africans themselves have played a significant role in helping to bring about the removal of pass laws in the cities and are now campaigning for their removal in rural areas as well. The All African Convention, a coordinating body of existing African organizations, since its inception in 1935 has waged a bitter fight against the pass laws.

"Particularly active has been the African National Congress. one of its affiliated bodies, under the leadership of Dr. A. B. Xuma, who studied medicine in the United States and is now president-general of the African National Congress. Many [illegible] trade unionists have actively supported these efforts and have themselves strongly [illegible]dicted the pass system."

MISS THOMAS FIRST TO BE SO HONORED

OCT 24 1942

32 - Year - Old Justice Is Graduate of College In England

OCT 24 1942

IKEJA, Nigeria—(ANP)—Miss Stella Thomas has been appointed a magistrate by the British government, according to an announcement this week. Miss Thomas is the first African woman to be so honored, and has already begun her new duties here.

56

The new justice, who is just 32 years old, went to England in 1925 to be educated at Portway college in Reading. She was the first African woman to be called to the English bar after completing law studies at the Middle Temple. A brother, Stephen, now magistrate at Abeokuta, was also a student there.

OCT 24 1942

The father of Miss Thomas was elected a president of the Lagos Chamber of Commerce a few years ago. Most of the other members of the chamber are British. A younger brother, Peter, was the first African from Nigeria to join the RAF. He won his wings soon afterward.

Confab Considers Post War Problems Of Africa

WESTERVILLE, O. —(ANP)—Africa, one of the major "prizes" at stake in the present war, was the topic of a seven-day church conference on African affairs which closed here Thursday. The conference which brought together officers, and authorities on Africa at historic Otterbein College, was sponsored by the Africa Committee of the Foreign Mission Conference of North America to "take stock" of mission work in Africa, and plan for its further unification.

Dr. Emory Ross, organizer of thee conference, declared the basic problem in Africa to be, "as in America and in many other parts of the world, that of race and color adjustments."

Announcement by the Phelps-Stokes fund, long serving Africa and the American Negro, of appointment of the "American Committee on Africa, the War, and Peace Aims," came during the conference. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, president of the Fund, declared:

"There are many reasons why the United States should be interested in Africa. Among these are the facts that the United States has large educational, philanthropic, religious and commercial interests in Africa; and that Negro Americans not only constitute one-tenth of the population of the United States, but that they are about one-tenth of all persons of African descent in the world."

Post-war plans for Africa by the conference include a new emphasis on adult education; adequate elementary schooling by governments and missions for every African child; and the organization on a union basis in Africa of schools of medicine, theology, agriculture, and education on a college and university level.

Jan Smuts' Post-War Rule Feared by Liberty Lovers

Nov. 21, 1942

Noted Reactionary Forges to Front as Foes of Imperialism Mass for Fight

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The role of South African premier and Field Marshal Jan Christian Smuts in the reconstruction period of peace after the war has risen to trouble the minds of the leaders of the democratic front in the nation's capital, according to a usually reliable source.

Of late, several prominent members of President Roosevelt's administration have been building up sentiment within the United States and in foreign countries with a view to according a larger degree of economic and political freedom to the colonial peoples than now exists under the imperialism of the European nations, Britain, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Portugal.

Wendell L. Willkie, although unattached to the government, is known to be one of imperialism's most avowed enemies. Under-secretary of State Sumner Welles, Vice-President Henry A. Wallace and other influential figures in and out of Washington share Mr. Wilkie's views. They desire that their interpretation of the war aims of the United States, as set forth in the Atlantic Charter, should become a "World Charter" designed to build a world of free men, regardless of race, color, creed or national origin.

But the appearance of General Smuts, an avowed enemy of the non-white peoples, particularly the black and brown peoples of Africa where, in his own country, the Union of South Africa, race prejudice and discrimination are more rampant and vicious than in our own states of Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama, has inspired all but a hopeless future. Smuts, they feel, has an all-powerful influence on the British ruling class and the masses.

One of the staunchest supporters of the now defunct League of Nations, Smuts is said to be scheduled to play a most important part in the formulation of the policies of the coming peace conferences. As a matter of fact, it is believed that while in London the other day, he spent a good deal of time discussing the problems of peace, a move which the leaders of African thought are known to fear as an ominous sign of things to come.

Peace, according to the Boer leader, they say, would be a peace excluding the African peoples from any decent place in national and world affairs. It is recalled that after the expulsion of the Italians from Ethiopia, Smuts put up a terrible fight with the government at Whitehall demanding that Ethiopia should be made a colonial possession of Britain. White leaders in Washington and colored leaders in many lands are definitely against the influence of this "doddering old man" in the shaping of the new world order.

Status Of African Chiefs

"West African Pilot"
Lagos, West Africa

THE Honourable G. Moore of the Gold Coast Legislative Council, delivering an address at Accra recently, touched upon the question of the status of African Chiefs in our new civilisation and [illegible] it as being that of puppets who have no will of their own, but are subject to the whims of District Officers. He called for a change and suggested that the Chiefs themselves should take the lead.

Nana Sir Ofori Atta, K. B. E., Omanhene of Akim Abuakwa, one of the leading Chiefs of the Gold Coast Native States, naturally defended this criticism, but could not but agree that the Chiefs have lost some of their former functions and prerogatives as a result of contact with European civilisation, although they still retain certain rights.

We sympathise with the views of Mr Moore and also with the defence of the Honourable Nana, because what obtains on the Gold Coast also obtains here. We agree that a change of front is essential. African Chiefs should be allowed to function and direct their own States themselves, especially now that many of them are enlightened.

The role of Administrative Officers should be reduced to that of advisers, and never as lords and masters. And incidentally, this demand is not only being made here and in other African territories alone. It is being made in England, in the Socialist circles especially, and we hope the powers-that-be will comply.

Four Freedoms For All Races

IN HIS Flag Day address to the world, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt re-emphasised that the Four Freedoms which he enunciated some time ago—freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from want and freedom from fear—are for all races and creeds, without any distinction or modification.

He said that if the peoples of the world lack these freedoms, they would lack all those things that make life itself worth living and would wither away and die. But if they possess them, life would blossom in all its radiance and man would enter into his golden age, the age of plenty and contentment.

"West African Pilot"

We agree with the views propounded by the President of the United States of America. As an idealist and also a practical man, he has put into practice in a limited fashion these things which he preaches and he has succeeded to do far more than he would otherwise have been were he to work with his eyes close to these truths. That is why we share with him his high hopes for a better world after this war.

Lagos, West Africa

But we know that it is not going to be smooth sailing to achieve the dreams of Mr Roosevelt. Reactionaries will soon be at work, trying to destroy this edifice which is being built with the blood and tears of men. We must oppose them as ruthlessly as we fight against the Nazis. In other words, we must be prepared for a grimmer fight after this war is won by the United Nations.

According to the report, some weeks ago, a woman gave birth to twins.

After some days, one of them died and was buried.

56a

The father who was to go on a journey shortly, asked his wife to take care of the other baby and then bid the household farewell.

JUN 2 5 1942

The mother was alleged to have thrown the other baby into a bush after the departure of her husband.

But, as luck will have it, Mr Ogunkoya the father of the school boy in question, passed by the bush and heard the baby crying.

He traced the baby and brought it to the Shagamu Native Administration Dispensary from where the child was taken to Ijebu Ode African Hospital.

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

LONDON (Special)—In recent appointments of Africans to positions of responsibility in their respective provinces, Great Britain's colonial office moved this week to integrate the African into the government of Africa. Native Africans so honored are: Koffie Busia, graduate of the Universities of London and Oxford, and Ameshadai Adu, brilliant professor of chemistry at Achimota College, Gold Coast, West Africa.

These two scholars are to be Assistant District Commissioners. Mr. Busia showed promise of a distinguished academic career right from his elementary school days. Success followed success, for he was invited to join the staff of the teachers' training college as a part-time teacher and student. Here he took his London bachelor of arts degree in history and won the coveted Gold Coast Government scholarship to Oxford.

While at Oxford Busia took an honors degree in philosophy and economics and immediately started to prepare a thesis for the Oxford doctorate of philosophy.

Koffie Busia's career gives the lie to the fallacy that the African has to pass through several generations of semi-literacy before he can take his place in the modern intellectual world. The circumstance which gives Busia's story such notable interest is that he is the first of his family to be able to read and write. Education in the modern sense was introduced into his home as late as 1917.

NOV 1 4 1942

Direct Succession for Golden Stool

Koffie Busia is an Ashanti and his family is one of the oldest in that historial region of West Africa. They have played an important part in the northern province of the ancient Ashanti kingdom. Koffie Busia himself is in direct line of succession for the "golden stool." His appointment as an Assistant District Commissioner will, therefore, enable him to use now the political tradition and wisdom inherited from his forefathers. He is a personal friend of the present King of Ashanti. At the age of 27, he is undobutedly one of the most influential young men in Ashanti.

The most brilliant student that has ever entered Achimota college is Ameshadai Adu. He was born on the Gold Coast and his family are well-known cocoa farmers and merchants in the eastern province of the Gold Coast. His uncle, Quashio Idun, who read law at Cambridge University, was also appointed a magistrate some four and a half years ago.

On leaving elementary school at the age of 16, Adu was able to take his school certificate with exemption from the London matriculation and his inter-science degree (London) four and a half years later. He was then awarded the Achimota scholarship to Cambridge University, where he took an honors degree in chemistry.

Adu traveled extensively in Europe during his student days and devoted particular attention to present agricultural problems in Southeastern Europe. At the outbreak of war he returned home and was appointed to the faculty of Achimota College as professor of chemistry. This position he held until his appointment as District Officer.

NOV 1 4 1942

Like Busia, Adu interested himself in international affairs and attended several conferences in Britain and on the continent.

There can be no denying the effectiveness of these two appointments. It is praiseworthy that the administration has taken two such men into its confidence. These appointments take priority over any other the colonial office has hitherto given to Negroes. By recognizing the administrative ability of these two young Africans, the colonial office is using local skill and initiative.

Ceremonies In Memory Of Late Kwegyir Aggrey

NOV 14 1942

SALISBURY, N. C.—The first African funeral rites ever performed in America will be observed at Livingstone College here by African students this year on Thursday, November 26, in connection with the celebration of Aggrey Day—a day of thanksgiving and remembrance of the late Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey.

This announcement was made this week in New York by the director of information of the African Students' Association.

DR. JAMES EMMAN AGGREY

At this ceremony which is to be conducted under the joint auspices of the West African Students' Union of Great Britain and the African Students' Association of the United States, libations will be offered to the gods, according to traditional African ritual, the sod will be cut, and a piece of the earth in which the mortal remains of Aggrey lie will be taken by the students and sent to Africa for burial in Aggrey's ancestral home on the Gold Coast.

LIVINGSTONE TEACHER

Dr. Aggrey was born on the Gold Coast, West Africa, in 1875. He became successively pupil and teacher in a mission school and later interpreter on Scott's expedition to Ashanti in 1900.

He was a graduate of Columbia University, and afterwards professor at Livingstone College, N. C., for over twenty years.

NOV 14 1942

He was also a member of the Phelps-Stokes Educational Commissions to Africa, and later became vice principal of Achimota College on the Gold Coast.

In 1927 Aggrey came back to America to see his family and to spend his first leave of absence. He died suddenly in New York City in the summer of that year.

GREAT INFLUENCE

The influence of Aggrey on the African people is tremendous. His ideals influence many British colonial officials in formulating wise educational and social policies in various parts of Africa.

Achimota College on the Gold Coast, Yaba College in Nigeria, Makerere College in Uganda, Fort Hare and Lovedale Colleges in South Africa, and Gordon College in the Sudan are some of the great educational institutions which were either founded or completely reorganized through the influence and initiative of Dr Aggrey.

Throughout his life he was identified with the movement for intelligent cooperation between the white and the black races and the cultures which they represent.

His famous parable of the piano keys, in which he taught that only when the black and the white races work together with mutual self-respect and interdependence will there be lasting peace and perfect harmony in the world, is accepted by all who are interested in inter-racial understanding.

NOV 14 1942

BRITONS TO ATTEND

British officials and representatives of many American organizations will be present. Nwia-Kofi Nkruma, president of the African Students' Association, will cut the sod.

Kweku Atta Gardiner, of the universities of Cambridge and London, colonial research scholar at the University of Oxford, and representative of the West African Students' Union in England, who recently arrived in this country to attend the function, will deliver the major memorial address.

New Deal For Africans

The great speech made by Dr. F. V. Machado, the Portuguese Minister of Colonies in Lourenco Marques last week, was remarkable in many respects. First and foremost it stressed on the necessity of protecting African workers in that Colony against abuses and exploitation.

"It is necessary to protect the Native against all abuses and guarantee him abundant food, hygienic living conditions, help in sickness and adequate clothing."

Aug. 29 1942

In this respect Dr. Machado voiced a truth that has always been advocated in these columns. That in order to get the best out of the African people, the first responsibility of those who seek their services is to ensure that their conditions of service are hygienic, healthy and economically sound. You get nothing from labourers who are toiling under unhygienic and repressive conditions. Satisfied and protected labourers are capable of giving of their best services which redound to the good of the country concerned.

Dr. Machado went further and pointed out that "if we wish to civilise the Native, we must instil in him the moral notion that he has no right to live without work."

This is sound commonsense. Many employers realise its significance. The difference comes in when this philosophy is interpreted into practical politics. For instance, many employers who employ hundreds of African labourers have only one aim in mind: to get every ounce of energy from the labourer without giving him anything concrete in return for the services rendered.

This attitude has made itself manifest to the labourer in many ways. The indifference shown by these employers to their labourers' efforts creates in the minds of the servants a distaste for work. They become resentful and unresponsive. They have been made to feel that they work only to enrich the white man. They get nothing in return for faithful services rendered. They see no moral right in working under such conditions.

They have not been instilled with the "moral notion that they have no right to live without working."

Dr. Machado seeks to cure this malady by calling upon the white people to face this truth and to put it into practice. A man who looks after the interests of his labourers wins their goodwill. In working for him they learn to love their work.. They see the necessity of working; for the benefits of good work are ever before them. In this way both employer and labourer understand each other and the community benefits.

The results of idleness are apparent to all. People who idle about while others are occupied soon get into mischief. They have no moral backbone which is inculcated in every man who works and thus has self-respects. Our people must realise this. Indeed, we doubt if they are not even now aware of the pernicious influence of loafing. We are not here going into the question of why people loaf at all. Some are forced by dismissals or lack of employment to do so. But we are referring to those who indulge in the habit of loafing because it suits their natures.

We are pleased that Dr. Machado's appeal for a more progressive Native policy for Portuguese East Africa. has also been in the forefront in the struggles of those who have the interests of the Africans at heart. The present elections for the Senate, House of Assembly and the Natives' Representative Council are fought on these grounds.

Leaders of all shades of opinions realise that this question is one of the most vital confronting this country. Great and many have been the efforts made by these men and other to educate the white public to the fact that in their African fellow-citizens they have an untapped reservoir which would be of immense value to the country. This reservoir only needs to be tapped with sympathy, understanding and help in order to give of its best.

A repressed African community retards the progress of the country. It menaces European security and cripples the efforts of the country's would-be saviours.

Ethiopian Women Raped Wholesale By Italians; Abdomens Bayoneted

OKLAHOMA CITY (ANP)—Ethiopian women were ravished and raped on a wholesale level by the brutal Italians and then had to suffer excruciating pain as their rapists tore op en ther abdomens with blades and bayonets to prevent childbirth, declared Nebraska Williams, world-famous globe-trotter, who arrived here last week.

Williams, who claims to have traveled 36,491 miles in 51 countries, told a harrowing tale of the brutality of Italian soldiers toward Ethiopian women.

OCT 10 1942

Babies Split Apart

"When births did occur," Williams said, "the babies were split apart."

Many times, Williams asserted, he had to cover his wife's eyes to shut from view the dead bodies lying about the streets.

Upon his arrival here, Williams and his wife were greeted at the state house by James E. Berry, lieutenant-governor, acting in place of their chief executive. His wife is Shena, the daughter of an African king.

The world traveler is 38 years old and has been traveling ever since he won a trip by walking from Shreveport, La., to Boston, Mass., in 84 days.

During his travels he said he visited Ethiopia and was in that country when the war broke out, and saw first hand the brutal Italians at work.

Blacks Sterilized

German Gestapo "artists," he said, were no less cruel. Williams told of the many times he was arrested and held for investigation, and how he witnessed the crude sterilization process of all black people in Ethiopia.

There were, however, pleasant experiences in his wanderings, he stated, and one of these were the meeting he had with Mohandus Ghandi, the great Indian leader. Williams said the Indian who speaks perfect English expressed a healthy interests in Negroes. There is no race discrimination in India, he told us.

Gandhi, he went on, has a rare collection of snakes which he proudly showed to him. The Indian leader is fond of collecting the reptiles.

The twice married globe trotter said he met his present wife near Capetown, South Africa, five years ago, when she rescued him from a twinc ine. one of the most dangerous thing in the country. The tree coils about the human body whenever it is touched and escape is almost impossible.

He was called to the home of the king, he explained, and was made welcome by the royal family. After a short courtship he gained permission to wed the princess who speaks 14 languages.

Williams claims to have worn out 816 pairs of shoes during his travels His present wife has worn out 123 pair. When they travel by boat they walk the equivalent distance around the deck.

OCT 10 1942

The first Mrs. Williams and a dog companion died in Russia in 1937, he said. after travelling 23.000 miles.

PREMIER SMUTS COULD HAVE SAID MORE.

Premier Smuts of South Africa told a joint meeting of the lords and commons in London a few days ago that the defensive stage of the war has been concluded and that the moment has come for the united nations to assume the offensive.

OCT 24 1942

"Once the time has come to take the offensive and to strike while the iron is hot, it would be folly to delay, to overprepare and perhaps miss the opportunity; nor are we likely to do so—of that I am satisfied," he said.

There is, of course, much truth in Premier Smuts' analysis. He is right when he says that the enemy has mobilized all his resources and cannot increase them and that we are still growing in strength. All this, and much more that is favorable to our side, is true.

Premier Smuts, however, seems to have overlooked one important point. When the assault upon the enemy is launched there will be heavy losses and a need for vast numbers of men to maintain our strength. If the attack takes place outside Africa there will be few, if any, of Premier Smuts' countrymen to share the risk and the burden, for the South African contingents are permitted to fight only in Africa. For them the war is an African war and nothing else.

The address was intended to be heartening but it would have been a good deal more so if Premier Smuts had pledged himself to attempt to persuade his countrymen to accept full partnership in the joint effort. South Africa fought in Europe in the last war and was duly rewarded with territorial concessions, in spite of the dominion's record of discrimination against the native black men. If South Africa hopes to play a part in the writing of the next peace treaty she must expect to play her full part in the joint effort.

South African Racial Caste System

AUG 22 1942

AUG 22 1942

ANALYSED BY PROFESSOR HOERNLE

AUG 22 1942

Addressing a large gathering of Bantu, Indians, Coloureds and Europeans at the Bantu Social Centre last week, Professor R. F. A Hoernle of the University of the Witwatersrand, in an address on Race Relations, described the racial structure of the Union as a racial caste system. The population was divided into three racial strata, with the European at the top, then next to him the Indian and Coloured and at the base was the African.

The European strove to keep on top and to ensure his remaining in this position he had devised such contrivances as Segregation by which he kept the non-Europeans down. Indians and Coloureds kept above the Bantu and tried to assimilate themselves as closely as they could into the European stratum whilst the segregated Bantu were trying to push their way up.

Within each racial caste there was what Professor Hoernle called 'social mobility' — that is, the possibility of an individual rising from the lowest wrung within the racial caste to the highest and also falling from the highest to the lowest. But as between race and race this was absent. An African, no matter how well educated and well-to-do was always regarded even by the poorest European as below him. There was no bar to parallel rising, provided the racial caste remained intact.

It was in such a situation that the Institute of Race Relations, of which Professor Hoernle is President found need and scope for its work The Institute set about to alter the prevailing racial-caste attitudes, for said Professor Hoernle, "No man o woman of a liberal and humane outlook can be content or at ease in a society of this type. People like me cannot live in South Africa without heartbreak." Although the Institute's point of view had never been put so candidly, Professor Hoernle believed that the preceding had in it the spirit of the Institute.

BREAKING CASTE SYSTEM

The greatest difficulty came about in discovering how to set about breaking down the racial-caste barriers. There was particular need for the education and conversion of the ruling race. The Institute sought to undermine the evil of the racial caste system. This meant that Europeans needed more education and the Institute had found that the best way of doing this was not to launch a frontal attack against the Union's racial caste system, but to attack it by indirect methods. Frontal attacks, said Professor Hoernle, arouse feelings self-preservation in the White race which has exclusive political and economic power. Europeans, continued Professor Hoernle, had a vested interest in the racial caste system and it was knowledge of this fact that made the Institute of Race Relations not blow out forcefully against prevailing conditions.

One of the weapons the Institute used to combat the evil of the racial caste system was furnishing the White public with facts. By way of example, the Institute had striven to point out that the so-called high percentage of Bantu crime was reduced to low proportions when analysed. Such analysis revealed that very many so-called crimes were merely convictions for technical offences. It revealed also, that the amount of Bantu crime in proportion to the size of the population was even with that of other racial groups or sometimes less.

Professor Hoernle concluded his remarks with a plea to his audience to join the Institute of Race Relations, assuring the Asiatics that the Institute took a keen interest in their problems too. Replying t questions, Professor Hoernle denied that maldistribution of wealth is the cause of racial friction. He suggested that South Africans grow into the prevailing attitudes—adding that fundamentally, the Afrikaner's at- titude to the non-European is similar to the Englishman's: the only difference being that the Afrikaner is vocal in his opposition to the non-European whilst the English man achieves the same end by other methods.

AUG 22 1942

Mr. Donald Mtimkulu, Master of the Adams High School, in thanking Professor Hoernle for the address, said that he too had believed that a re-adjustment of our economic system was the solution to South Africa's main problems, but that after the Professor's address he was to think over this again—adding that the African community sometimes shows impatience instead of patience and clear study of facts, Mr. Thomas, Head Master of the Greyville Indian School seconded Mr. Mtimkulu's motion of thanks.

Native Chiefs Put On Governor's Executive Council

OCT 31 1942

By GEORGE PADMORE
(Courier Foreign Correspondent)

LONDON, Oct. 29—(Censored)—With war clouds gathering over the British West African colonies of Gambia, Sierra Leone, Gold Coast and Nigeria, due to their proximity to Dakar, which is being reinforced by Vichy against invasion, the British authorities are taking steps to avoid a repetition of what happened in Malaya and Singapore, where the natives were apathetic.

OCT 31 1942

In order to mobilize the full support of the natives through their chiefs and other influential leaders, the British Colonial office has announced that two Africans have been added to the executive councils of the Governors of Nigeria and the Gold Coast. This is the first time since the conquest of West Africa that blacks have served on the executive councils of these colonies.

The same procedure has been adopted in India, where 11 Indians, all selected by the Viceroy, serve on the Executive Council.

The Executive Council is considered a sort of cabinet, but the Governor of a colony, like the Viceroy in India, is under no obligation to accept the advice of its members. It is purely an advisory council.

CHIEF GETS ARMY POST

Sir Ofori Atta, the leading Paramount chief of Akim Abuakwa, who was knighted by the late King George V for his services in the last World War, and a moderate lawyer, K. A. Korsah, are the two Gold Coasters selected by Governor Sir Alan Burns to serve on his council.

OCT 31 1942

At the same time, the most influential chief of the war-like Ashanti tribe in northern Gold Coast by the name of Ossi Agyoman Prompeh, Knight of the Order of the British Empire, has been given the rank of honorary colonel in the African Home Guard.

CHARTER OF FREEDOM FOR ALL COLORED RACES

Commenting on the wisdom of this move by the British authorities at Whitehall, the Daily Herald, the organ of the British Labor Party, has issued the following statement:

"Not only Britain, not only the Dominions, but the "Empire"—the Colonial Empire—is in this war up to the hilt.

"Think of the splendor of the resistance of Malta; of the gallantry and efficiency of the West African and East African regiments in the Abyssinian campaign; of the spontaneous contributions to the war effort of all the colonies scattered across the globe.

"It is a big debt that we owe the colonies. It is a debt that we can repay after the war. In two ways—in economic aid against the difficulties they face, in swifter progress towards self-government.

"We do progress, but still too slowly. Lord Cramborne has just announced that unofficial members—some of them Africans—have been added to the Executive Council of the Governors of Nigeria and the Gold Coast.

ASK CHURCHILL TO STATE POLICY

"It is a step forward—a real step—a break with the tradition of purely official government. But still not enough. There is need for more imagination, more boldness.

"Perhaps at the moment, the need is above all for a courageous declaration of policy: for an announcement to the world that in all our colonies, without exception, the goal of our policy is complete self-government, full 'Dominion status.'

OCT 31 1942

"We fight for fredom. Let us have a Charter of Fredom—freedom in co-operation—for the whole Colonial Empire."

Many radical and progressive members of Parliament are urging Prime Minister Churchill to issue a declaration, granting the colored races of Asia, Africa and the West Indies full self-government and democracy on the basis of the Atlantic Charter and President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms.

AMERICANS IN AFRICA WARNED ON CONDUCT

Ban on Talking to Moslem Women Heads Rules for Forces

NOV 9 - 1942

ALLIED NORTH AFRICAN HEADQUARTERS, Nov. 8 (U.P.)—American forces now landing by the thousand in scattered areas of North Africa carry booklets warning them against talking with Moslem women, because the fate of the entire campaign may depend on their conduct in this respect.

The booklet, similar to one issued to the United States troops going to the United Kingdom, contains a geographical sketch of the landing area the customs of the inhabitants, their living conditions and a long list of do's and don'ts.

The most serious warning in the booklet is in Chapter 14, which says:

NOV 9 - 1942

"There is no Arab custom which must be respected more completely than their attitude toward women. The most innocent word addressed to a Moslem woman is considered an insult bitterly resented by all Moslem men. If anything is said or done by you which would make the Moslem men feel you have shown disrespect for their women, there will be no limit to their righteous indignation.

"Regarding Moslem women you must put aside all your own preconceived notions and ideas. You must remember your conduct in this matter may decide the fate of this campaign."

NOV 9 - 1942

Elsewhere the booklet emphasizes that the Americans must not think of themselves as conquering heroes, but as good-will ambassadors, ever bearing in mind that the French and Americans are traditional friends.

Hospitalisation For Non-Europeans

Aug. 29, 1942

In his report on the scheme for free hospitalisation in the Transvaal now made available for publication. Mr. H. F. Pentz, Transvaal Provincial Secretary, referring to African and non-European hospitalisation, argues that consideration should be given to starting the nucleus of a medical school for Non-Europeans at Durban.

The training of Non-European nurses and midwives should be undertaken there on an extensive scale.

The provinces had said that the demand for Native hospitalisation had become so great as to involve them in expenditure quite beyond their capacity to defray without resorting to heavy additional taxation on the European population.

That was felt to be inequitable, and the Government should treat the question in a manner similar to its treatment of Native education.

Adequate Native hospitalisation was not beyond the financial resources of the Transvaal, if one were able to assume that its present sources of revenue could not only be maintained but might be expected normally to increase pari passu with the additional expense entailed by the development of Native hospitalisation.

The well-being of the Native population was of prime concern to the Government. Upon the health and well-being of the Native depended practically all Union industries, and the insurance of the Natives' health was one of the best investments in this country.

Expenditure as between the Transvaal and the Government should be on the £ for £ principle, and the Government should pay a special subsidy to the Provinces of 2s 6d. per Native patient day.

Maternity work should be undertaken by the Transvaal Provincial Council in respect of Non-Europeans in urban areas, but there should be a specific subsidy from the Government.

Colour Prejudice

OCT 1 - 1942

On the subject of the colour bar the Welfare Department states :—

" To assist coloured Colonial people to take a full part in the work and life of this country is to combat colour prejudice, but here again official acts can avail little without popular sympathy, and without the help of coloured people themselves. Colour discrimination is very much in the minds of the men and women of the coloured races living in this country, and they have a lively sense of the injustice of prejudices which so often single them out for special treatment for slights and insults just because they are of a different appearance from the majority of the people in these islands.

" The League of Coloured Peoples under the vigorous leadership of Dr. Harold Moody has as one of its aims the protection of coloured people from discrimination. Its membership comprises natives of this country as well as coloured persons themselves, and its monthly publication exposes incidents of racial discrimination and attempts to bring the whole question of colour prejudice to the notice of the British public.

" It is difficult to assess the extent or strength of this prejudice. Its existence is largely based on a tradition and attitude of mind that is out of tune with political or economic realities. Ideas of domination have already given way to those of co-operation and partnership, and in the economic field clearly the question of competition which was the mainspring of colour feeling in ports such as Cardiff and Liverpool, no longer exists. Traditions die hard, but there is every hope that Colonial people in this country can by their example and their share in common tasks and dangers help to give this dangerous and false bogey a death-blow. Possibly antipathies based on psychological factors as well as mere ignorance enter into this question of colour prejudice, but we have a human duty as well as an urgent political interest to be generous and reasonable in our dealings with our fellow-citizens from the Colonial Empire who for one reason or the other are living and working in this country."

OCT 1 - 1942

Work among Colonial people in the United Kingdom is financed from the Colonial Office Vote provided by the Treasury as part of the social services of this country, and there is no question of contributions from Colonial Governments. (Aggrey House and the W.A.S.U., which were not set up by the Colonial Office, receive contributions from certain Colonial Governments.) Treasury sanction for such expenditure was given at the end of last year.

Britain Moves Two Africans To High Positions

Scholars Get High Posts In Administration

NOV 4 - 1942

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

LONDON — (ANP)— Britain's colonial office has recently appointed two outstanding Africans to prominent positions in the realm of colonial administration. They are Koffie Busia, B. A., (Lond.) B. A. (Oxon), and Ameshadai Adu, brilliant professor of chemistry at Achimota college.

These two scholars are to be assistant district commissioners. Mr. Busia showed promise of a distinguished academic career right from his elementary school days. At the Mfantsipim school on the Gold Coast he took the junior and senior school certificates with honors. In the teachers training class which he afterwards joined Busia came out top in the final examinations.

Success followed success, for he was invited to join the staff of the teacher's training college as a part time teacher and student. Here he took his London bachelor of arts degree in history, and won the coveted Gold Coast Government scholarship to Oxford.

56a

NOV 4 - 1942

HONOR STUDENT

While at Oxford Busia took an honors degree in modern greats (philsosphy and economics) and immediately started to prepare a thesis for the Oxford doctorate of philosophy.

Koffie Busia's career gives the lie to the fallacy that the African has to pass through several generations of semi-literacy before he can take his place in the modern intellectual world. The circumstance which gives Busia's story such notable interest is that he is the first of his family to be able to read and write. Education in the modern sense was introduced into his home as late as 1917. He has younger brothers and sisters now studying at Achimota college who are said to be equally promising.

Busia had a comparatively short stay of only two and a half years in Britian. But during that period, he had a crowded and useful life, even apart from his academic studies. He was greatly admired in intellectual circles for his amiable accomplishments. He spoke at several meetings before large audiences, and associated fully with a number of Christian organizations. Mr. Busia frequently spoke on the air, broadcasting on current affairs to Africa. A pamphlet on "West Africa and the War" is a contribution from his pen.

GOLDEN STOOL

NOV 4 - 1942

Koffie Busia is an Ashanti, and his family is one of the oldest in that historical region of West Africa. They have played an important part in the northern province of the ancient Ashanti Kingdom. Koffie Busia himself is in direct line of succession for the "golden Stool."

His appointment as an assistant district commissioner will therefore enable him to use now the political tradition and wisdom inherited from his forefathers. He is a personal friend of the present king of Ashanti. At the age of 27, he is undoubtedly one of the most influential young men in Ashanti.

His principal vocation lie in music and he plays the piano well. He pays special attention to native music, which he hopes will figure prominently in the world some day. Mr. Busia has a wide knowledge of English literature, and during his connection with Achimota, he lectured in English to the university classes.

He is a young man of rare personal qualities. No one who has been incontact with him can fail to recognize his dynamic and impressive personality.

MONUMENT UNVEILED TO AGGREY IN SOUTH

Lord Halifax and Dr. Butler Send Tributes to Negro Educator

Nov. 27, 1942

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Nov. 26—A monument to Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey, West African Negro educator, who died in New York City in 1927, was dedicated today at Livingstone College, Salisbury, N. C., from which Dr. Aggrey was graduated forty years ago and where he taught for twenty years.

56a

Tributes to "Aggrey of Africa," who devoted his life to the cultural development of West Africa in its relations with the United States and Great Britain, were sent by Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University. Dr. Aggrey studied at Columbia for the M. A. degree twenty years ago.

The dedication ceremony included native African funeral rites in which a piece of sod was cut from Dr. Aggrey's grave to be sent to Africa for burial at his home on the Gold Coast, where he was born in 1875. The monument was unveiled by Dr. Aggrey's widow, Mrs. Rose Aggrey, and was a gift of the Western African Students Association of Great Britain and the African Students Association of the United States.

Dr. Aggrey served as a member of two Phelps-Stokes education commissions to Africa and was assistant vice principal of Achimota College of the Gold Coast.

Speakers included Dr. Edwin W. Smith, biographer of Dr. Aggrey and former president of the Royal Anthropological Institute of Great Britain; the Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund of New York, and Dr. Howard W. Odum of the University of North Carolina.

"The World To Come"

Aug. 8, 1942

Mr. H. R. Abercrombie of Pretoria, the author of "Africa's Peril," a book in which he urged the formation of a European League against the rising tide of liberalism in South Africa, has recently published another book under the above title, dealing with the world after the war. With his ideas concerning Europe, America and Asia, it is not our intention to deal. We are only concerned with his suggestions regarding the future of the African continent.

In this book, Mr. Abercrombie advocates the creation of the United States of Africa under white domination. The Africans, he says should be segregated, but does not state what amount of land should be allotted to them. He advocates for their disenfranchisement and the establishment of "Bungas throughout the segregated areas of Africa."

There can be no doubt that in the opinion of Mr. Abercrombie, Africa should become the home of the white man, and that the African should remain for all times the hewer of wood and the drawer of water. For he visualises the time when "few male Natives but plenty of females are seen in the white towns of Africa," when "male Native domestic labour would be replaced by female labour," when "the Native Labour offices in the segregated areas will provide such labour," when "the compound system on the mines would have been extended to such industries as have been allowed to employ Native labour" and when "the Native townships of Johannesburg and Pretoria would be used as compounds" for Africans employed in industries and who would "return at regular intervals to their homes."

The Anti-African attitude of Mr. Abercrombie does not surprise us at all; for he is by nature a hater of Africans but what suprises us is his belief that Africans, living under the conditions which he has laid down, would be willing to live in peace and harmony with Europeans. This belief is undoubtedly due to the fact that he is ignorant of the existence of race-consciousness among Africans and of the progress they have made in many directions. He is not aware that the new African has aspirations which he is determined to realise in spite of the puny efforts of those who would like to see him herded in reserves and compounds for the benefit of the white race.

The policy which Mr. Abercrombie advocates is incompatible with the principles of democracy for which the African to-day is shedding his precious blood in the Western Desert. Indeed it is not saying too much to aver that this policy savours of Hitlerism against which the freedom loving people of the world are up in arms. Surely Mr. Abercrombie does not expect that Black men who are to-day fighting for democracy would willingly submit to a policy which denies them the rights of citizenship in their fatherland. Does he expect that Democracy can exist side by side with autocracy and tyranny in Africa? If he does. then he does not want to rid the world of the evils that bring about conflict and strife. His "World to come" will not be different to the world in which mankind lives to-day.

"The world to come" must be made safe for all races to live their lives to the full, and it must be a place free from all the conditions that cause friction among the races and nations. In it there should be no exploitation of one race by another. But all should co-operate in the development of industry and commerce, and be free from fear of want, starvation and oppression. It is for the creation of such a world that the forces of Democracy are engaged in a life and death struggle with the forces of Nazism and Fascism. But the destruction of these forces on the battlefield is not enough; they must be destroyed in the hearts and minds of men, if the world is to have permanent peace.

Fortunately for Africa and unfortunately for Mr. Abercrombie, broad-minded men the world over are working for the creation of a world in which justice and liberty will rule supreme after this struggle. Mr. Abercrombie can rest assured that his voice is that of one crying in the wilderness.

A Native's First Day At The Reception Depot

Aug. 8, 1942

(By Ndlovu)

I was privileged recently to visit a large Reception Depot in the Transvaal, where all recruits from every corner of the Union make their debut into the South African Native Military Corps.

As my car drove slowly through the entrance of the Camp I passed long queues of recent arrivals.

There the recruits stood in suits, coats, shoes, blankets and hats of all sizes and shapes and bearing the signs of having seen better days. They looked a rugged lot, these volunteers with their tattered clothes. There was an air of strangeness about them, wondering what the new adventure will bring them, as they stood holding their papers tightly with both hands.

These men came from all walks of life. There were men from the reserves, from the farms and trading posts, ministers, teachers and ex-policemen, young and old alike, but all with one mind to become "Springbok Soldiers."

An officer told me that if a Native wished to volunteer for the Army he went to the Native Commissioner in his district who arranged all his papers and his preliminary medical examination, and then accompanied him to the Reception Depot.

The new recruit is met at this Camp by a genial old "Induna" who is a highly respected member of the Baralong. No matter what time the recruit arrives, the Induna is there to meet him and give him a welcome with tea, blankets and sleeping accommodation.

This stage in his military career is filled with excitement, for he receives his greatcoat, a fine-looking hat, 2 lovely pairs of boots, 2 bush shirts, trousers and socks, knife, fork and spoon, in fact a complete trousseau. He just can't wait for, as soon as his kit is checked, he grabs his bag and with little ceremony discards his tattered clothes, such to the amusement of his onlookers and gets or endeavours to get dressed.

Some have their boots on their wrong feet, others have the tunics back to front while others do not know what to do with the tunics, but there was great fun, thrills and peals of laughter, what a life!

When dressed they jump on to the Parade Ground and shout strange words of command and go through very involved turns.

But whats this! an N.C.O. shouts to them to fall in—their first order. But it is an interesting order for they now meet a representative of the Governor-General's National War Fund. This officer interviews each man and goes into his financial matters. If the man earned more money prior to enlistment, the fund endeavours to make up the difference and grants subsidies and gratuities.

After this interview another officer, kind and helpful in his ways, explains what the men are to do, how they are to behave towards their fellowmen an towards their superiors; explains their pay and how to go about receiving it; how to write letters and how to have them addressed.

A large lorry draws in the centre of the square. They are told to get their billycans and fail in again — what can this mean. All eyes are glued on the first man to put forward his can. Then with a loud haw! he opens his mouth and lifts the can. Yes! this is his national brew—"real Kaffir beer."

The day draws on. He is shown how to stand, to walk and to turn, how to march and salute and to time his movements with that strange formula 1—2—3 up, 1—2—3 up, 1—2—3 up and "ama—left" and "ama right."

The fresh open air makes him hungry and gives him a healthy appetite, and towards evening when the days work is over he receives a meal fit for a prince, meat, soup and vegetables, bread and tea and—as much as he likes.

And, as the stars come up and the moon lights up the darkened sky, he dances his tribal dance to the clapping of hands.

He is tired and lies down to rest wrapped in his warm blankets. He lies awake and recounts in his mind all the happenings of his first day in the Army. His eyes soon close and then with one more 1—2—3—he is fast asleep.

SOUTH AFRICA

Legal Development

NOV 9 - 1942

A Jim Crow law was refined last week in Natal, South Africa. Sentence of four months' imprisonment for a native woman was upheld by the Natal Supreme Court; but the court suspended sentence of her partner, an R.A.F. man. Their offense: illicit sexual intercourse. In South Africa, Natal is one of the provinces where intercourse between blacks and whites is taboo. The law has previously provided equal punishment for both.

NOV 9 - 1942

Judge-President Roy Hathorn, with the concurrence of all other Natal judges, ruled that visiting troops hereafter involved in such cases shall be given suspended sentences. The Judge-President's reasons: 1) it is hard for them to realize the criminal nature of their offense in Natal; 2) temptation is strong in local shebeens (speakeasies); 3) it is undesirable to imprison soldiers needed for fighting the war. Since native offenders are presumed to know the law, they will continue to go to jail.

Gov. Eboue Loyal to Free French

U. S. Soldiers In Equatorial French Africa

Nov. 20, 1942

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — News reports channeled via Washington tell of the entry of American troops into Brazzaville, Equatorial French Africa. Subsequent photographs showed that the first consignment of soldiers to reach that interior point were white Americans. The doughboys must have been treated to a surprise. For when they marched into the Chan region they discovered that the vast territory unfolded beneath their eyes with a city in which architecture was modern and guarded by an army whose prowess was evident from the marvelous physique and appearance of its soldiers, was presided over by a black governor-general, a Frenchman in every sense of the word.

Gov. Felix Eboue, whose loyalty to the democratic ideal and devotion to what he regarded as the true France, led him to throw his interests and the country he dominated in with the "Free French" and against the Vichy government, is a native of the west. He was born 54 years ago in the South American French colony of French Guiana. Sent to Bordeaux, France, to school by his parents, the government attracted by his bright mind, sent him to Paris to take his college course and to choose a career. Eboue chose the School of Colonial sciences.

Opportunity and promotion came rapidly for him. For 22 years after 1911 when he first arrived in Africa, he served in French Equatorial Africa. Then he was sent to the Guaralupe in the French West Indies as governor only to be recalled in 1936 and given command of the great Chad province where he had begun his civil duties as a youth.

Under his command Free French Africa has proven to be an important link in the United Nations' defense program. Numerous modern airfields have been built. Hundreds of airplants have been ferried through the interior of Africa thus avoiding the long arduous trip by boat around Cape Good Hope. This great inland country by the Free French was the only tangible possession which the Free French had.

Gen. Charles de Gaulle was the nominal head of the Free French and he made trips to Brazzaville, its capital. He did not remain there partially because the political headquarters of all the banished kingdoms was in London and partially because there was a certainty who was in charge in Brazzaville and that was the man who had decided its destinies in favor of America and England, Gov. Eboue. The army itself is led by Gen. Leclercq, a white Frenchman, and most of its officers except the non-commissioned are French. It is a large and important force capable of inflicting heavy blows upon the axis now that the battle of North Africa has been launched.

One of the most important things which the American soldiers will discover is not only that these black men in the interior of Africa are real Frenchmen in under the leadership of Eboue, many far reaching social changes every sense of the word, but that involving the health and welfare of the people have been undertaken and are being put into effect with great results. At every stop, however, Gov. Eboue has sought to preserve African customs and institutions weaving the benefits into African culture and background as it existed.

Government And Segregation

Oct. 24, 1942

Despite the abnormal times in which they are made, statements such as the clear-cut condemnation of Segregation by Mr. D. L. Smit before the Bhunga recently deserve seriously to be taken to heart.

The Secretary of Native Affairs, following on General Smuts's warning that "Segregation had fallen on evil days" said that Segregation could not be carried to its logical conclusion because the interests of Europeans and Bantu were interlocked.

This official recognition of the tragic blunder of denying fellow-citizens avenues of and scope for development because of the colour of their skins is welcome in so far as it is an official admission that the policy that is being pursued regarding the African is wrong and unjust and as indicating need for a recasting of attitudes held as fixed in the past.

South Africa cannot be a happy country where four-fifths of her population are kept in economic and political bondage. And keeping such a large portion of the population at the bottom is wasteful, one way, and dangerous on the other.

The ruling sections have to spend much energy, time and money in devising and enforcing systems of controlling the African. Much of this valuable time, money and energy certainly could be used in combating Malnutrition and Poverty, not only among Africans, but among poor Whites themselves. And whilst that control is a wasteful practice on the side of the White man, in the African it breeds feelings of frustration, suspicion and unnecessary fear.

The happy geographical position of our country and its wealth, real and potential, all suggest that we have no need for frustration, suspicion, fear or hatred.

It is most re-assuring, therefore, that highly-placed Government officials, whose words are treated with respect by citizens, take it upon themselves to educate the country on the need for a more equitable re-adjustment of relations between the races.

In quite a number of other things the Government has given a lead which the country has followed with good results for all. That the Government should play a prominent role in educating the White public on the uselessness of maintaining Segregation is another field where only good can result.

German Prisoner Admits Taking Rare Ethiopian Papers

Nov 26, 1942

NOV 26 '42

By CHATWOOD HALL

KUIBYSHEV, U. S. S. R.—(A. N. P.)—A signed statement from one Dr. Norman Foerster, captured Nazi storm troop officer, admits that among the booty plundered from the library of the Ukranian Academy of Sciences in Kiev were "rare Ethiopian, Persian and Chinese manuscripts." This finding of the Ethiopian manuscript, along with manuscripts, of high Persian and Chinese culture and civilization, is evidence of the simultaneous development of the Negro nation along with other lands.

The Germans obtained these priceless objects as vandal booty whereas the Soviet Ukraine treasured and preserved them as priceless cultural objects.

Although Dr. Foerster doesn't mention it in his statement, this writer knows that the Nazi barbarians took Pushkin's autographed first editions from Poltava library.

Segregation Unjust----Says Secretary For Native Affairs

The following is the full text of the speech Mr. D. L. Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs delivered at a Municipal luncheon given by the Municipality of Kingwilliamstown on the 12th of October 1942 and at which Mr. Smit was the guest.

Mr. Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I thank you for the honour you have done me and for the welcome you have given to this toast.

I am sorry Colonel Reitz has been prevented by illness from being present. He has asked me to convey to you his sincere regret and his good wishes for the prosperity and future progress of your town. He also desires me to tender to you the Government's deep sympathy at the loss of so many of your sons in the great struggle in Libya. Their sacrifices have not been in vain and we know that these young men have maintained the highest traditions of your Border districts—and that having given all they have gained all.

To me, Mr. Mayor, the meeting with so many old friends at this luncheon has been a great pleasure, particularly as I was born in your hinterland; and since my earliest years, I have regarded King William's Town with a feeling of veneration as the place where our administration in this territory began; and there is nobody who has cause for more abundant gratitude to the people of this town for their hospitality and kindness to me and the officers my department, and for the sympathy we have received in our Native Administration.

And speaking of Native Administration, Mr. Mayor, I am reminded that it was at the embryo city of King William's Town in 1835 that that picturesque soldier, Sir Harry Smith—then a Colonel—was appointed here with his beautiful Spanish wife to take charge of Sir Benjamin Durban's new experiment in Frontier policy, of bringing the Natives under the influence of British laws and attaching them to the Colony by a common interest and feeling with British subjects, and thus to establish a barrier of civilisation between the Natives beyond the Kei and the European settlements. The policy was to break down the power of the chiefs and to introduce habits of civilisation and industry by "humane coercion and example" as Smith put it, and so convert a vexatious enemy into peaceable and useful subjects.

To carry this story a little further, Mr. Mayor, you will remember how with an escort of red coated soldiers, Smith announced himself to an assembly of Chiefs and Councillors at Fort Cox as their great "Inkosinkulu", and how on a later occasion in his full regimentals from a throne in a large room in the Reverend John Brownlee's house (the present residency) he installed a number of chiefs as Magistrates and hung big seals of office round their necks, and after reading them his famous lecture on honesty and religion and high morals required them to take the Oath of Allegiance to His Majesty the King.

EUROPEAN GOOD SENSE

We have tried out many other experiments in Native Administration since then; but we have a long road to travel still, and our ultimate success will depend upon the sympathy and good sense of our European citizens. During the past few years we have been engaged in a policy of segregation, but the interests of the Europeans and the Natives have become so interlocked and the pathway is beset with so many practical difficulties that I do not think we shall ever be able to carry it to its logical conclusion.

But at the same time, owing to the generosity of the Government, a great deal of good work has been done since the so-called segregation laws were passed, to improve the condition of the Natives—not only in the purchase of more land for Native settlement but in providing large sums of money for Native housing and education, and we look forward to a period of great progress and a gradual improvement in the attitude of the White man towards the Black in the next decade. And, Mr. Mayor, we have been greatly encouraged in our work by the liberal attitude and the help we have received from the citizens of King William's Town. Your location is an example that we hope will be followed by other Municipalities in the Eastern Province, and the work you are doing for the social welfare of your Native community is deserving of the highest praise.

OF GRAVE CONCERN

But, Mr. Mayor, we need to go a step further than that. The economic condition of the Natives in most of our urban centres is a matter for grave concern, and until we improve the economic standard of Natives in the towns, until we are prepared to pay them better wages, to see that they are properly fed and to give them the decent amenities that are essential to the urban dweller, we shall never fulfil the trusteeship that has been laid upon us as the ruling race. I know I am treading on dangerous ground, Mr. Mayor, but in our administration we hedge the Native round with too many restrictive laws, and for the protection of our own interests we impose colour bars and deny him the right to take his place in our industries as a skilled worker, and in other ways we place artificial limitations upon his activities.

[Here Mr. Smit gave as an illustration the "forest of laws," governing the African.]

These things Mr. Mayor, are unjust and we should take our courage in our hands and abolish them all.

The Government has recently appointed a Commission to inquire into the health of the people and make recommendations for the establishment of a National Health Service—but in so far as the Natives are concerned, while better hospital facilities are urgent and necessary, such measures are merely palliatives and will not bring the millenium we seek unless they go hand in hand with better wages, better food and better housing.

I know that progress along these lines must be slow, but we look to you as citizens who have always played an important part in our Administration to help us in educating public opinion to a more liberal outlook.

RUBBER MAKES LIBERIA
MAJOR ALLY OF U. S.

WASHINGTON

Since 1925 when an American rubber firm leased a 77,000-acre tract from the Liberian Government for the cultivation and production of rubber, the only free State in the huge continent of Africa has continued to grow in importance.

Nov. 14, 1942

Since the shortage of rubber in this country is becoming more and more acute, Liberia and its experimental plantations are becoming increasingly important as a source of raw materials.

The town of Marshall is the most important rubber port. However, extensive improvements have been made there because the country has no good natural harbors. Big ships have to anchor at least two miles off shore to load and unload their cargoes.

Production Increasing.

In 1935, the rubber exported by Liberia totalled between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 pounds, a small fraction of the world production. However, the figure jumped to 14,000,000 in 1941 and it is the promise of greater rubber production which makes the African Republic important to the United States.

At the same time, with American troops in Liberia the military aspect of the republic grows in stature. It is close to the area of Senegal, where the French fleet rests at Dakar, the best port on the West Coast of Africa.

Nov. 14, 1942

The future of Liberia is definitely tied up with the future of the United Nations, but the important factor is that friendly relations between Liberia and the United States have been solidified by the present world crisis.

Fine Display By Native Military Corps At Brakpan

Aug. 1, 1942

A large and representative audience had an opportunity of witnessing an excellent Military Display at Brakpan last Saturday afternoon, performed by the Native Military Corps for funds for Medical aid for Russia.

The Mayoress of Brakpan, Mrs. Ash, welcomed Civic Dignitaries and High Military Authorities. Among those witnessing the display were Col. Van Dam, Officer Commanding the Witwatersrand Command accompanied by Col. Hendry; Col. Mockford, Assistant Director of the Non-European Army Services, accompanied by a Staff Officer; Col. MacGavin Greig, Officer in Charge of the N.M.C. Training Area, Welgedacht; Col. Fulford Officer Commanding 1st Battalion N.M.C.; Captain Botha of the Native Military School and his Staff; Councillor and Mrs. Gidley-Moore; Councillors Smiley and Elton; Mrs. MacGavin Creig and her daughter.

The opening item was a P.T. Display. Forty men clad in snow-white athletic shorts, swung into the arena singing their own marching song as they entered, moving along with ease and with a swinging gait. The outstanding feature of this item was the fact, that for 20 minutes, the platoon went through some very intricate movements without a single word of command or signal from the leader. It was a perfect expression of precision, timing and co-ordination of team work. The exercises terminated with a song, and the smiles on the faces of the men showed that singing and exercise go well together in building up a healthy outlook.

A drill squad then marched on to the grounds headed by a Brass band. The platoon was drilled by a Native N.C.O. Sgt. Lonsdale, who, put them through their paces in perfect "Grenadier" style. Their marching and drill was a pleasure to watch.

A party of Stretcher Bearers from a Medical Training School, then gave a demonstration of stretcher drill and first aid work under active service conditions. The Native stretcher bearers, have now become famous "Up North", and three of their number have received the Military Medal for bravery. These men went about their work quickly and efficiently and demonstrated various positions of working in the field.

Aug. 1, 1942

Col. Van Dam and his Staff Officers then inspected a Guard of Honour which was accompanied by a Drum and Bugle Band for the Retreat Ceremony.

The Drum Major, Samson Nkosi, a warrior, standing 6 feet tall, and a perfect specimen of manhood was the centre of attraction. He swung his mace in the traditional "guardsman" fashion, and did it perfectly. He and his band were a credit to the Battalion and to the Native Military Corps. It was altogether an excellent performance.

WHO SHALL BE SENATOR?

(BY JULIUS LEWIN)

(The writer of the following article is Lecturer in Native Law and Administration in the University of the Witwatersrand. He is the author of that well-known pamphlet "Africans and the Police").

Tuesday next, September 1, is nomination day for the elections now taking place under the Representation of Natives Act. These elections are a matter of the utmost importance to Africans everywhere in the Union. Although only a small number of Africans have the right to cast a vote, everyone has a right to approach and to influence those with whom the heavy responsibility of voting actually rests.

Aug. 29, 1942

Who are the voters? For the election of Senators and members of the Native Representative Council, the votes are cast by certain voting units. These are tribal Chiefs, location Advisory Boards, and Electoral Committees which have been specially formed for the purpose. A Chief can cast his tribe's vote how he pleases but if he is a wise man, he will consult his councillors and tribesmen before finally making up his mind. The Advisory Boards in the towns usually consist of only six members who must hold a meeting to decide how to cast their Board's vote. In a few districts in the Transvaal, such as Pietersburg, Letaba, Rustenburg, and Potgietersrust, there are Local Councils with a right to vote as a unit. But the most important voting units of all are the Electoral Committees in every district, because their blocks of votes are larger in value than any of the others. These Committees have been elected at ward meetings called by the Magistrate. Unfortunately, in many districts the people hardly heard of the meetings, with the result that the attendance was very small. So now the one or two men who were put on the Electoral Committee at such meetings, have to decide how to cast a big block of votes.

In Natal and in the Cape Province the present Senators will probably be returned unopposed. The really interesting elections are those taking place in the Transvaal and Orange Free State (which form one constituency) and in the Transkeian Territories; and most of the present M.R.C.'s are also having to face a contest.

By now the names of the candidates are well-known but perhaps their policies are not. Of the Council elections I know too little to write with confidence: what follows applies only to the Senate elections. The candidates are all busy visiting the members of the voting units with a view to getting their support. Some candidates have employed a number of African Agents who are now actively at work in their employer's interests. It is, however, rather foolish to listen to agents or to accept their arguments. An agent cannot make promises that bind his master. Moreover, being a man who is paid to do this job, an agent is inclined to say anything that will influence votes; what he says in another man's ear can never be tested and it is not necessarily the truth. Africans should remember that in European political elections no attention is ever paid to what an agent says.

The best way to judge a candidate is by his manifesto. By far the most impressive manifesto I have read is that issued by Mr. J. D. Rheinallt Jones, the present Senator for the Transvaal and O. F. S., who is again standing for election. It is a sixteen-page pamphlet which reports to the people what the writer has done during the last five years in Parliament, and what his future policy is.

The first subject is land. Mr. Rheinallt Jones knows that there are many complaints about the way the Government is dealing with Trust land. He knows how many people are complaining. They have to pay rent; the plots are too small; they are forbidden to cut trees; and so on. He condemns the charges on wood and he is strongly of opinion that no European should be employed by the Trust who cannot treat the people properly or who will not respect their Chiefs and Headmen. He considers that more Africans should be trained and employed for responsible posts under the Trust. There is no doubt that Mr. Rheinallt Jones is right about the unsatisfactory state of affairs, especially in the Northern Transvaal. He and his wife have made a special study of land problems and his word carries great weight with the Native Affairs Department in these matters. I notice that he also writes with sympathy about the position of farm labourers and what can be done to improve it.

The next big subject on which Mr. Rheinallt Jones explains his own policy is education. He gives facts and figures to support his criticisms. Then he advocates a ten-year plan. By this he means that we must demand enough money, schools and teachers so that in ten years' time—and not later—every single African child will be in school. It will, of course, be necessary to train more teachers for all the new schools and to pay them higher salaries. When there are enough teachers and enough schools, then education must be made both free and compulsory. This is a practical plan which must be put before Parliament next session.

Mr. Rheinallt Jones deals with many other subjects such as the colour bar, workers in industry, compensation for miners, housing, health, and trading rights (especially in the Orange Free State), but I have no space to quote his views on all these things. Yet I must mention that he says that in the future Africans should not be limited to choosing only Europeans to represent them on public bodies.

Readers of this manifesto (and any voter can get a copy by asking for it from P. O. Box 97, Johannesburg) can judge for themselves what this man stands for. He is a modest man who does not blow his own trumpet. He simply lets his past record speak for him. He makes no wild promises, as some candidates do. He does not utter a single word of abuse against his opponents in this election. He does not depart from his usual habit of dignity and good manners to all men, even in the midst of an election. He merely says, quite simply: "Your representatives in Parliament are now heard with respect, and your cause has gained by that. Do not send to Parliament any man who will fail to retain that respect."

Aug. 29, 1942

Those are wise words. Let every African on every voting unit consider them carefully. The candidate with the loudest voice and the noisiest manner is not necessarily the best man. The candidate who promises Heaven on earth will not be able to fulfil his promises. The candidate who pays the most agents to speak for him is a man who feels a weakness in his own heart. Mr. Rheinallt Jones is not such a candidate. He is a straight-forward, honest man who has devoted nearly all the years of his adult life to the service of the African people. His work in the Senate has won for him an honourable place there. Africans must send him back to that place to carry on in the future the good work that he has done in the past.

Africans Embrace Americans' Ways

Coastal Strip Expected to Bear Label 'Yankee Belt' After the War

Nov. 19/1942

By Joseph Morton

Somewhere in Africa (delayed), (AP).—After the war I suppose they will call it the "Yankee Belt."

It will be a strip 10 or 15 miles wide, starting on the Atlantic Coast and running in straight, unbending lines from one "Little America" to another until it reaches the Red Sea. There will be millions of black-skinned Africans in it, each telling the other he's "in the groove," asking if he's had his quinine today, speculating on who'll win the World Series, and humming a tune from a Broadway show.

Foundation Laid

The foundation already has been laid—along the route followed by America's great aerial supply line to the Middle East, India and Russia. Thousands of Americans, myself among them, are at work in it; hundreds of thousands will traverse it in months to come. Each will leave, consciously or unconsciously, something for Africa to remember him by.

The belt, aside from its American characteristics, will be one of the most densely populated regions of Africa. The infusion is under way now. Word has seeped back into the darkest part of the interior that the Yanks have brought jobs, and money, and fun.

U. S. Coins Accepted Media

American coins will be an accepted media regardless of the political ties of the colony or state. In the case of one country, they even will be legal tender by an act of the government.

There will be countless Africans with good American names. The house boy, Musa, will be used to signing "Johnny Jones"; Little Viani will be convinced she is getting along better as Mary Smith.

You will see "bush" boys working on airliners, driving trucks and road graders and putting aside a few cents each month for books like "The ABC of Diesel Motors." The lad who was carving ivory last week will be busy with a set of carpenter's tools and possibly carrying a union card in his pocket.

Will Become Commonplace

For every white man's shower bath along the line there will be a thousand tin cans with holes in the bottom—and Africans under them. The G-string will be smiled upon; skirts, trousers and shoes no longer will be a privilege of the "educated." One will see corn on the cob, mosquito netting in native homes, and women talking about "my latest operation."

The boys will be playing the puzzling combination of rounders and cricket and calling it by its right name—baseball. They'll be asking for Milwaukee beer at Uncle Sam's bar or the White House. Shooting craps over behind the garage and writing fan letters to Bill Robinson.

My Sundanese friend, Fadul Mohammed, who has waited on tables in five countries, will no longer be unique with his "sunny side up" and "okey dokey." And the big Gold Coast policeman will have stopped poking his nose in the bus, pointing a finger and asking: "Who dat man?" Instead, he will say: "May I see your pass, please?"

"Fellow-Americans"

It is from these Americans, and millions more, that the "Yankee belt" is being forged. Every dollar spent in wages, every discarded bit of clothing, every strange imported product is playing a part. Already the Ubangi, the Sudanese, the Nigerian and many others greet travelers as "fellow-Americans." Their way of life has acquired a new preamble. It seems to be:

"We dress as you do, eat as you do, work as you do and get paid as you do. What else matters."

Social Reconstruction And Natives

Bishop Deprecates Industrial Colour Bar

In his charge to the annual synod of the Anglican Church in the diocese of Johannesburg, last Sunday morning the Rt. Rev .G. H. Clayton, among other things dealt with the Church in relation to social reconstruction. The Bishop asked the synod to think briefly of some of the things which were wrong with present-day society in Johannesburg and the Reef.

He was glad to find that deficits on the Native Revenue Account would in future be made up out of the general rates, and that grants-in-aid to Native charities also would be paid out of general rates by the City Council of Johannesburg.

"We may be thankful for a step taken in the right direction, for it is a recognition of the responsibility of the whole community for the poorest section of its members," he said.

The acceptance of that responsibility must carry those who desired an improvement in social conditions to go a good deal further. For instance, there were not nearly enough schools, and hardly half the Native children in the city went to school at all.

"It would be difficult to estimate the extent to which that has been responsible for the growth of a class of young criminals," continued Bishop Clayton. "If the Native children do not go to school, they obviously loaf about the locations. You can only deal with the problem of the criminal class by a long-range policy. At present, even with the low average of Native wages, the teachers' salaries are not sufficient to attract an adequate supply

AMENITIES

"In the meantime, everything possible should be done to provide essential services and the amenities of life for those who still live in the slums; and they are not only Natives.

"There are more than 40,000 Native domestic servants in Johannesburg, a very large proportion of them in the northern suburbs. A full and satisfactory life demands the opportunity of people meeting each other and forming some sort of a community for sport, education, and for social intercourse.

"There can never be anything but a sense of frustration and a calamitous wastage of human powers unless the colour bar in industry is removed. It is heartbreaking for a man to know that thus far he can go and no further. Moreover, the industrial development of this country clearly demands it.

"At this time of the day it cannot be seriously contended that Native people must for ever be the hewers of wood and drawers of water, to what is in effect an aristocracy of race. This is consonant with Nazi ideals: it cannot be our ideal.

"I have merely tried to indicate some of the implications of the Christian principles: the details are for experts. We are not experts in virtue of being Christians, but it is very desirable that more Christians should become experts.

"It is in the interest of the whole country that all the inhabitants should live together in unity, and have a chance of satisfying their needs, whether economic or psychological."

New Native Policy Seen In Africa

Nov. 28, 1942

Unionists Open "Awake South Africa" Program

JOHANNESBURG, S. A. (ANP) The Democratic league, a European organization founded several years ago to curb the spread of Nazi and Fascist doctrines in South Africa, but which closed its membership to non-Europeans, last week announced, a new campaign, "Awake South Africa," a move designed to arouse both the people and the government of the country to the urgent need for organizing all resources for the use of all men and materials to win the war.

The league, founded by European trade unions, indicated in its new stand that South African labor unions might be given more recognition and that there might be liberation of the organization's policy toward natives.

League members, who declare they are speaking for the welfare of Africans, reveal that it is their desire to accept them as members.

QUESTION CAUSE

Africans, confronted wth policies of exclusion of this type, have been said to have voiced the question as to whether or not South Africa is worth fighting for under existing conditions.

One of the league's demands is for a mass fighting force to Europeans and non-Europeans with good pay for all soldiers, the training of 100,000 war workers, a fair wage for all workers, and the removal of oppressive laws against non-Europeans.

Nov. 28, 1942

HOLD MEETING

Explanation of the "Awake South Africa" program as offered in a mass meeting recently emphasized in detail just what it would mean, not only in arming non-Europeans and the removal of such discriminatory treatment as the pass laws and the poll tax involve, but in the removal of the color bar in industry so that Africans may be given the opportunity to give better service to the country than they can now give, being confined to the lowest level of the labor market as unskilled workers.

Wages of Unskilled Labourers in Johannesburg

Oct. 1, 1942

WAGE BOARD'S RECOMMENDATIONS

THE Wage Board's recommendations were gazetted on 7th August. They cover 34 industries and include municipal unskilled workers, of whom Johannesburg employs 11,000. The Johannesburg City Council decided by a majority of 22 to 7 to oppose the recommendations.

The Wage Board's decisions were, as always, arrived at after prolonged investigation and hearing of witnesses, and the decision of the Council has been strongly criticised as the following extracts from letters to the Press shew.

From the Chairman and Hon. Secretary of the Joint Council of Europeans and Africans : These recommendations, covering the unskilled workers in 34 different industries, amongst which are included municipal employees, recommend a wage of 25s. per week for the first six months, 26s. per week for the following 12 months, and thereafter 27s. per week. The final wage would therefore be £5 17s. per month after 18 months.

By a vote of 22 to 7 the City Council decided to oppose these recommendations, not on the ground that the proposed wages are too high, but because Government employees are not subject to similar wage regulation and for fear of an influx of Natives into Johannesburg. The Durban Municipality is already paying its unskilled Native labour £6 per month, and had not found the "influx" unmanageable. Quite apart from the fact that the Natives (Urban Areas) Act gives local authorities very drastic power to deal with such an influx, we wish to point out that this fear—a bogey continually and conveniently displayed—is an exaggerated one and in conflict with the necessity for increased industrialisation—a necessity recognised in the third interim report of the Industrial and Agricultural Requirements Commission, which emphatically stresses the need to decrease the Native agricultural population.

Oct. 1, 1942

Before the committee recently appointed to investigate the alleged increase in crime, evidence from all sources showed low wages to be an important contributory cause of crime. The Urban Native Juvenile Delinquency Conference, convened by the Municipality as far back as 1938, expressed its conviction that juvenile delinquency can be diminished by bringing Native wages into closer relationship with the cost of living. The alternative, the findings gravely state, "is greater poverty and increased delinquency." The whole burden of Miss M. Janisch's Study of Income and Expenditure, published by the Municipal Non-European and Native Affairs Department, is that wages cannot cover essential expenditure. Food alone, based on a minimum diet for a family of five, would cost £4 8s. per month, according to expert calculation. General Smuts stated that "all evidence goes to show that, in general, the African cannot support his family in most places on the wages he is getting."

The City Council has never opposed the contention that Native wages are too low. Before the Smit Commission the City Council led evidence to demonstrate that low wages are the root cause of much that is undesirable in urban Native life. Mr. Immink, the chairman of the Native Affairs Committee, has repeatedly stated that a Native family cannot live on less than £6 2s. 6d. per month. Yet now, when the Wage Board proposes some increase for unskilled labour, it is the Municipality that objects and strives to put the brake on urgently necessary progress. The Joint Council does not believe that the City Council, in taking this step, is representing the reasoned views of the citizens of Johannesburg, who have come to realise that on the welfare of the Native depends the progress of the White section, and that, increasingly, European industry depends on the consuming power of Africans.

From the Secretary of the S.A. Trades and Labour Council, National Executive Committee : Our first and foremost duty is towards the low-paid worker of whatever race or colour, and to that end the wages of unskilled workers should be considerably increased. Once these wages have been, say, at least doubled, local markets for most of our newest products will be created. . . our definite object will be the advancement of wages of poorly-paid workers towards the levels of better-paid workers—which, by the way, has been the foundation of successful production plants and industries in the U.S.A., where the disparity between wages of unskilled and semi-skilled workers and skilled workers is very small indeed. Italics ours.

From the President and Chairman of the Methodist Men's League (Jeppe Circuit Branch): The league supports the adoption of the minimum wage of £1 7s. per week (effected in three stages as gazetted), and hopes that the Johannesburg City Council, together with the Provincial Councils and the Government, will set an example to employers throughout the country.

We believe, as Christian citizens, that the excuse of additional expense should be disregarded, and this urgent reform introduced at once. If we are not prepared to pay for more just conditions, then all hope of a better order vanishes. As citizens, we all desire economic justice for the Native, and as members of the Methodist Men's League we are prepared to pay our share of the cost.

ARMING THE AFRICANS

New York Age
Nov. 21, 1942

WHEN AFRICA became the leading theatre of the war with the United Nations opening their offensive by seizing the French colonies in Africa, the question of using the vast man-power of that country in the fight to defeat the Axis powers became one of paramount importance. Some time ago the Council on African Affairs which has headquarters in this country, memoralized Sir Stafford Cripps and General Jan Smuts strongly urging "extensive use of African roops, and the fullest use of African resources to combat the Axis." But so far, nothing definite has been done in this direction.

NOV. 21, 1942

The French most liberal of all the European countries in their treatment of the natives, have many thousands of native soldiers already trained, and they could be used as a nucleus around which a vavst army of native soldiers could be built to defend that tontinent. Whileevery one cheered the step taken by our country in seizing those parts of Africa under Nazi domination, a far greater feeling of confidence in the aims of the war would be established in the minds of all peoples of color if the African natives were given a greater part in the war program.

To our mind Africa offers a better opportunity for development of its natural resources as a result of the war than any other part of the world. Whether this development will continue to take the form of exploitation or whether the natives of that continent will be permitted to share its benefits is the real test of the much talked of Four Freedoms and democracy for which we are fighting.

Segregation: Its Anatomy And Characteristics

To-day I should like to throw light on the matter of segregation in order to bring out certain aspects which are not usually borne in mind when general discussions on segregation are held. We shall find that although segregation exhibits certain constant characteristics there are variations in the kind and form of segregation.

Geographic Segregation

This is usually called territorial segregation. The Native Urban Areas Act belongs to this species of segregation because it separates in the towns black and white residential areas. The Land and Trust Act of 1936 also demarcates separate areas in the rural districts for Natives and Europeans.

9/29/42

Mechanical Segregation

When you undertake a train journey you will find that you and the Indians and Coloureds are accommodated in the reserved coach and thereby separated from the rest of the passengers. In some cities, in fact most cities here, there are separate seats along the road and separate seats in the buses for European and Native passengers. Thus you may be going along the same route and in the same bus but as a Native, you must sit in a different corner of the bus or in a different section of the train. This is what is meant by mechanical segregation.

9/8/42

Institutional Segregation

Our separate school system is an example of this type of segregation. For schooling purposes the races are accommodated in different institutions. Our church system is also of a like nature. When it comes to hospitals you either have different hospitals altogether or different wards of the same building. Where that is the case, the system belongs to the classifications indicated above.

Ceremonial Segregation

Here we have two interesting cases as illustrations. The first concerns the admission into lounge-rooms, Dining rooms and restaurants of European establishments of Native nurse girls, Native waiters and servants in uniform. In the trains bedding boys may frequent service coaches with European passengers. The other case is that of admitting into European hotels and restaurants a Native as a distinguished guest of honour. The colour bar is only relaxed for that person or those persons whom the white group considers necessary for its good.

Cultural Segregation

As a rule, Africans are excluded from libraries and theatres. Even when there is no law or regulation against them visiting some of the libraries, custom and social pressure from the dominant group work against the Africans. Africans are discouraged from visiting art galleries in the cities. Their low earnings prevent their having easy access to current periodicals, magazines and books of interest. All this tends to give the Africans an arrested cultural development.

Functional Segregation

There are certain occupations from which Africans are by law excluded. We all know about the Mines and Works Acts of 1926 popularly called the Colour Bar Act. Other jobs and occupations are by custom considered peculiarly the monopoly of the black man. Likewise Government and administration are not the function of the black man. Here endeth our Anatomy.

Now here are a few questions for the reader. How far is identical treatment of all races posssible in our country? How far is separate treatment with fairness and honour possible? Where has segregation failed and where has it not failed? Is segregation entirely without advantage for the Africans?

Bozo South Africans

Ngomagqibelo

We live in times when we cannot afford to go about with lazy minds. In like manner, we cannot afford to go about thinking to no purpose. At one stage we must think out things; at another discuss them and finally resolve all that in action.

Very many thinkers at the Bozo Club these days are spending sleepless nights devising ways and means of assuring the African "Freedom from fear and want," promised the Democratic world by two of Democracy's three great leaders.

This is a most encouraging sign and we hope very much that these sleepless nights shall not have been spent in vain.

September 12, 1942

Particular attention just now is being focussed on the way in which the African has to approach conditions under which he lives. Some members of the Bozo argue that the philosophy of Mahatma Gandhi, shorn of its superstitious mysticism is a sound, practical, political philosophy for all races of Man that are denied human rights because of the pigmentation of their skin.

Other members of the Bozo base their hopes in a form of Nationalism which "glorifies the past" and in its cruder forms readily has room for sprouting theories of race superiority. In a country where problems of colour clash with unprecedented violence, and where each individual grows in an environment which impresses upon him his duty to his racial group and which gives such loyalty to the racial group the status of a moral sanction, it is easy to understand why Nationalism should appeal to elements that are more susceptible to the pin-pricks that characterise South African life.

This Nationalism has a form of negativeness, which is destructive to the interests of the community. Some of its more extreme votaries will readily fly into hysterics when mention of co-operation with the White South African is mentioned. These tried and devoted members of tha Bozo must not be blamed for this attitude before their point of view is appreciated.

We must acknowledge the fact that the African's contact with the Westerner has certainly brought him good, but the evil it has brought him is large enough not to be overlooked. We must realise, for instance, that the Westerner preaches the Brotherhood of Man in Christ, but segregates his darker Brother in Christ and denies him the human right of making his legitimate and distinctive contribution to human knowledge and the welfare, in general, of Mankind.

We must not, however, fall into the error of thinking South Africa is the only country where this is the case, and thereby allow past history to influence unduly our reactions and attitudes. Finding himself handicapped by artificial barriers, the member of the Bozo who resorts to negative Nationalism has a case to build in defence of himself. And if we mean good for our country, it is well to appreciate the causes that determine his attitude.

Then there are others who believe that it is possible for all the racial groups that comprise our population to live in harmony.

These great Bozo minds tell us that we need not lose our racial identity to become good South Africans. That we need not cast away cultural loyalties that we owe our group. That we need not be 'yes-men' to serve the group and also that we need not be radical to present our point of view.

They maintain that our own home-front must be well-organised. We must not be ashamed of setting out on a bold programme of organising the community. We must not be afraid of enabling the community to study their position clearly and to tell them exactly how they may fight their way out of the present tangle.

September 12, 1942

These members of the Bozo maintain that if Democracy is what we believe it is, the timidity that we find so prevalent among our intellectuals and the widespread laziness to act, must be shed off, once and for all time. Our intellectuals must be our spokesmen to the other and more advanced groups and assure those groups that the interests of our own group are not essentially in conflict with theirs and that the entire South African nation's interests lie in group solidarity, as opposed to group division.

At a later stage, these members of the Bozo Club say that we must progressively learn to regard ourselves as South Africans, and not as Bozoites, Orientals or Westerners.

African National Congress

The Executive Committee of the African National Congress will be held at Bloemfontein on August 29 and 30, and according to the General Secretary matters of national importance will be discussed. We have not got the agenda before us but we have every reason to believe that one of the items to be dealt with will be the reorganisation of Congress. That this is absolutely necessary no one interested in the growth and expansion of Congress movement can deny. Frankly speaking Congress is at present in a [illegible] of [illegible] because there is no discipline among its leaders, particularly in the provinces. No organisation can be healthy, strong and active whose leaders do not know the value of discipline and team work, and who think that the organisation exist for their benefit and self-aggrandisement.

That there are Provincial leaders of Congress who are not prepared to take orders from the Chief Executive of the African National Congress is common knowledge to all those who are interested in the affairs of this national organisation. In the Transvaal, for instance, the Provincial Congress is tackling matters of national importance which do not come under its jurisdiction. We understand that there are certain leaders who, without obtaining the sanction and approval of the National Executive, are negotiating with a certain group of Europeans with a view to bringing the Provincial Congress under the influence of a political body which these Europeans are establishing. If our information is correct, and we have every reason to believe that it is so, then the time has come when the people should be told whether or not the Provincial Congresses are independent bodies. And we hope this matter will be fully dealt with by the Executive which is meeting in Bloemfontein next month, and that a clear policy will be laid down which will make it impossible for provincial leaders to meddle with affairs which do not come under their jurisdiction.

While we do not question the wisdom of some of our leaders seeking the advice and guidance of Europeans championing the cause of African freedom, nevertheless we are of opinion that our national organisation should be independent of any European influence. It must be remembered that one of the chief functions of the African National Congress is to enable Africans, by means of national unity, to realise their national aspirations so as to contribute their distinctive share to the civilisation of the human race. The African National Congress is not only a political body fighting for the political emancipation of the African people, but it is also a national organisation whose aim is to bring about the spiritual and intellectual awakening of our race. The Congress is still a struggling institution, and it is our firm conviction that outside influences at this stage will be more detrimental than helpful to its national growth and expansion. Our people are still in a state of transition, and they need the leadership not of men who do not share their difficulties and disabilities but of men who share their language and customs, understand their character and sympathise with their national aspirations.

For these reasons we question the wisdom of placing our national organisation under the control of Europeans who may or may not, have their own axes to grind. But it must be clearly understood that we do not question the honesty and sincerity of those Europeans whose generosity and humanitarianism have impelled them to offer their services to the cause of African freedom. What we say is that, however sincere and honest they may be, they are not the proper people to control our national movement. They may have the brains, the knowledge and the experience in political and economic matters but on matters of national importance they have no qualifications. We cannot therefore, entrust them with the destiny of our race. That destiny must be worked out by our own leaders and thinkers. There is another matter which we suggest the Executive should deal with, and that is the enforcement of discipline and the creation of the spirit of co-operation among leaders of both the National and the Provincial Congresses. Team work is essential to the successful operation of the African National Congress in every sphere of our activities. The task of the President of the Congress is to enlist the active co-operation of his colleagues in the Executive and of the Provincial leaders and to teach them the value of consultation and co-ordination of efforts.

LIBERIA GRANTS U. S. AIRPORT CONTROL RIGHTS

The Chicago Bee

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 10—The government of Liberia has granted to the United States for the duration of the war the right to construct, control, operate and defend airports in Liberia and to assist also in the protection and defense of any part of the Republic which might be liable to attack during the present emergency, it was announced by the Department of State today.

An agreement was signed at Monrovia on March 31, 1942, by the Liberian secretary of state and Lieut. Colonel Harry A. McBride, special representative of the President of the United States, under the terms of which the United States was granted exclusive jurisdiction over airports fortifications and such other defense areas as may be mutually considered necessary.

The Republic of Liberia retains sovereignty over all such airports and defense areas, while the United States maintains jurisdiction over American military and civilian personnel stationed in Liberia.

Dec. 13, 1942

Plan Road Program.

At the same time, by an exchange of letters between President Barclay and Col. McBride, the United States agreed to extend certain defense aids to the government of Liberia, and to assist in the improvement and extension of its road system.

The strategic situation of Liberia on the west coast of Africa, and the consequent danger of attack or aggression by unfriendly powers, led the government of Liberia to request the government of the United States to give such aid as might be possible in order to safeguard the independence and security of the Republic. The traditional friendly interest of the U. S. in the welfare of Liberia resulted in the measures described above.

American forces, chiefly composed of Negro troops, are now stationed in Liberia in execution of the agreement. The German consul and his staff recently departed from Monrovia at the request of the Liberian government, thus eliminating Axis interests from the country.

Chicago Ill

The American minister to Liberia, Mr. Lester A. Walton, came to the United States in February, 1942, for consultation with this government on matters concerning Liberia, and is expected to return shortly to his post in Liberia.

American Negroes Demand That Africans Should Be Armed

West African Pilot

SEP 25 1942

NEW YORK, Sept 24.—According to "News of Africa," published by the Council on African Affairs, Africa's key position in the war is again emphasized by the present battle for Egypt in which Allied forces are fighting to keep the Middle East as well as all of Africa to the south, including Ethiopia, out of Axis hands

The Council on African Affairs urges that a second front be opened in Europe immediately in order to relieve Allied forces in North Africa and aid our Russian ally which is now bearing the brunt of Axis invasion.

SEP 25 1942

The recent completion of the first Trans African communication routes enhances tremendously Africa's importance as a supply route for the United Nations

These are two good roads running from British West Africa and Free French Equatorial Africa eastwards toward Ethiopia and the Indian Ocean.

Use of these routes will greatly facilitate transportation of materials to the Soviet Union, China and India and will release shipping for other urgent needs.

The occupation of Madagascar by British forces has encouraged the people of southern Africa in their preparations to resist any Fascist aggression.

Demands for unity of all the people behind Prime Minister Jan Smuts and for the immediate removal of all pro Nazi sympathizers in positions of authority are widespread.

SEP 25 1942

Most significant of all is the increasing realization among all sections of Africa's population that the security of the African continent demands that African peoples be armed to defend their homeland.

African peoples are asking that the principles of the Atlantic Charter be applied to Africa, and that they be given assurance that they are fighting for their own freedom by a definite promise of self determination by the powers controlling Africa.

FIGHTING TROOPS ND THE COLOUR BAR IN ENGLAND.

From a London Diary.

Weekly News

By CRITIC

OCT 10 194

Sir—Critic's remarks last week on the presence of coloured American troops in this country, and the methods of the military authorities in dealing with the 'promblem" are singularly opportune. His analysis of the situation is acute, but there is one point on which the writer would like to express some slight disagreement.

It is doubtful if any sociologist who has studied the question of colour prejudice in Britain would share his regret that so many coloured soldiers have been sent. In fact, their presence here presents a unique opportunity for the breaking down of certain strongly ingrained attitudes in this respect which we ourselves possess. There is little doubt that these attitudes are based largely on certain "stereotypes," or conventional ideas of the coloured person, for taking the population of these islands as a whole, it is doubtful if as many as 5 per cent. of us have ever had any personal contact with a coloured man or woman.

It is just possible that the main difficulties of the problem Critic describes could have been avoided by a more careful consideration on the part of the military authorities concerned. Was it absolutely essential, for example, that both white and coloured Americans should be posted and billeted in the same small towns? As the following few observations and enquiries show, the possiblities of friction and misunderstanding are aggravated greatly by such a situation.

It appears in a number of such cases that orders or requests have been issued by the American Military Authority to the townspeople to the effect that white and coloured troops should not be permitted in the same civilian canteens.

In some cases the townspeople have refused to comply with this. Partly as a result of this, the latter have become extremely annoyed at what is regarded as discrimination against the coloured soldiers. As a further result, scuffles between white and coloured Americans have occurred in public places when, for example, a number of the latter have entered or have tried to enter, dance halls or bars where the white Americans were already disporting themselves. Apparently, in one case the white Americans remonstrated with a landlady for serving coloured customers. The reply of the woman, as stated, is significant: "their money is as good as yours, and we like their company,"

Many of the townspeople, in fact, assert strongly that they "prefer" the coloured troops to the white. The effect of the "segregation" on "morale" is also interesting in some cases. A typical remark is "it seems silly to talk about democracy when we have white and black troops who will not talk or mix with one another."

The coloured soldiers are noted as being "too reserved," "careful," too self-controlled and disciplined, and the construction put on these "observations" is that the coloured have been "cowed" by past inter-racial experiences in the States. In short, there is an obvious and fairly definite tendency in many quarters towards championing the "cause" of the "Blackies" (note the diminutive) against the white Americans. The reaction of many of the latter is as might be expected. They appear to be at first very puzzled at events. They cannot understand the English attitude, more particularly the attiiude of English women, and are especially puzzled at the popularity of their coloured compatriots.

It is certainly to be hoped, as Critic suggests that the American authorities and our own will pay very serious attention to the matter in all its ramfications. The rough and ready fashion of telling our own troops male and female, that they are to adopt certain attitudes towards the coloured soldiers, is no solution. It is likely to enhance considerabl antagonisms, already incipient as a result difference in pay, towards the whi American, and will test to the breaking poi the democratic faith of the more ideologically minded.

Wages Of Africans

Since its establishment in 1932, "The Bantu World" has left no stone unturned in an effort to make the employers of African labour realise the importance of improving the economic status of the African workers. Its constant theme has been that the African is a fertile but uncultivated home market to which the eyes of the farmer, the manufacturer and the industrialist should turn, and pointing out that the opening up and the cultivation of this market will increase the prosperity of South Africa and enhance its position as the centre of Africa's industrial and commercial activities.

In this attitude "The Bantu World" has not been alone, for just recently the Johannesburg Joint Council of Europeans and Africans and the African Townships Committee submitted a joint memorandum to the Inter-Departmental Committee of Inquiry stressing the fact that it was their strong conviction that the primary essential for any improvement in the economic condition of Africans, both urban and rural, was the raising of wages.

There is no doubt that there are many Europeans in this city and elsewhere who have come to realise that the welfare of the European section of the community depends on the progress of the African. They also realise that if the purchas power of Africans is enlarg European industry is bound to expand. The same note was struck by the Secretary for Native Affairs, Mr. D. L. Smit, when he spoke in Kingwilliamstown last week. He said.

"The economic condition of the Natives in most of our urban centres is a matter for grave concern, and until we improve the economic standard of Natives in the towns—until we are prepared to pay them better wages, to see that they are properly fed and to give them the decent amenities that are essential to the urban dweller, we shall never fulfil the trusteeship that has been laid upon us as the ruling race."

It is greatly encouraging to see that a responsible Government official and other public bodies realise the need for ameliorating the economic condition of the African. It is not only for the benefit of the African that these conditions should be re-adjusted, but for the white community as well.

This fact has been so re-iterated in these columns in the past that there is no need to go over them again. It is only to be hoped that when so many responsible men and public bodies have pressed for increase of African wages, the public conscience will be roused and a nation-wide demand made to see that this pressure takes effect.

"The World To Come"

AUG 8 - 1942

Mr. H. R. Abercrombie of Pretoria, the author of "Africa's Peril," a book in which he urged the formation of a European League against the rising tide of liberalism in South Africa, has recently published another book under the above title, dealing with the world after the war. With his ideas concerning Europe, America and Asia, it is not our intention to deal. We are only concerned with his suggestions regarding the future of the African continent.

In this book, Mr. Abercrombie advocates the creation of the United States of Africa under white domination. The Africans, he says should be segregated, but does not state what amount of land should be allotted to them. He advocates for their disenfranchisement and the establishment of "Bungas throughout the segregated areas of Africa."

There can be no doubt that in the opinion of Mr. Abercrombie, Africa should become the home of the white man, and that the African should remain for all times the hewer of wood and the drawer of water. For he visualises the time when "few male Natives but plenty of females are seen in the white towns of Africa," when "male Native domestic labour would be replaced by female labour," when "the Native Labour offices in the segregated areas will provide such labour," when "the compound system on the mines would have been extended to such industries as have been allowed to employ Native labour" and when "the Native townships of Johannesburg and Pretoria would be used as compounds" for Africans employed in industries and who would "return at regular intervals to their homes."

AUG 8 - 1942

The Anti-African attitude of Mr. Abercrombie does not surprise us at all; for he is by nature a hater of Africans but what suprises us is his belief that Africans, living under the conditions which he has laid down, would be willing to live in peace and harmony with Europeans. This belief is undoubtedly due to the fact that he is ignorant of the existence of race-consciousness among Africans and of the progress they have made in many directions. He is not aware that the new African has aspirations which he is determined to realise in spite of the puny efforts of those who would like to see him herded in reserves and compounds for the benefit of the white race.

AUG 8 - 1942

The policy which Mr. Abercrombie advocates is incompatible with the principles of democracy for which the African to-day is shedding his precious blood in the Western Desert. Indeed it is not saying too much to aver that this policy savours of Hitlerism against which the freedom loving people of the world are up in arms. Surely Mr. Abercrombie does not expect that Black men who are to-day fighting for democracy would willingly submit to a policy which denies them the rights of citizenship in their fatherland. Does he expect that Democracy can exist side by side with autocracy and tyranny in Africa? If he does, then he does not want to rid the world of the evils that bring about conflict and strife. His "World to come" will not be different to the world in which mankind lives to-day.

"The world to come" must be made safe for all races to live their lives to the full, and it must be a place free from all the conditions that cause friction among the races and nations. In it there should be no exploitation of one race by another. But all should co-operate in the development of industry and commerce, and be free from fear of want, starvation and oppression. It is for the creation of such a world that the forces of Democracy are engaged in a life and death struggle with the forces of Nazism and Fascism. But the destruction of these forces on the battlefield is not enough; they must be destroyed in the hearts and minds of men, if the world is to have permanent peace.

Fortunately for Africa and unfortunately for Mr. Abercrombie, broad-minded men the world over are working for the creation of a world in which justice and liberty will rule supreme after this struggle. Mr. Abercrombie can rest assured that his voice is that of one crying in the wilderness.

Britain Will Provide For Better Education In The Colonial Empire

West African Pilot
Lagos, Nigeria
JUN 2 5 1942

LONDON, June 24.—Speaking on constitutional development in the Colonies today in the House of Commons, Mr Harold MacMillan, Under-Secretary for the Colonies, said that "partnership" was the long-term British policy in the Colonies, and this would be intensified after the war.

The whole position of the Colonies would be reviewed after the war, and the Colonial Empire considered as a whole, not in parts.

One principle which would guide British Colonial policy after the war would be that there should be no distressed areas anywhere in the Colonies.

He made out four points as follows:

1. Better education for the Colonial peoples, and opportunity to enter unrestricted into the public service of their countries.

2. Experts would be trained and provided for the Colonial Empire, and they would be available for service anywhere at short notice.

JUN 2 5 1942

3. A gigantic development of Trade Unionism.

4 The availability of capital investment for the development of the Colonies, to be provided for by both public investments and controlled private investments.

One of the speakers criticised the non-applicability of the terms of the Atlantic Charter to the Colonies, and suggested that steps should be taken to make a Declaration on the same lines — that is a Colonial Charter which would be solely for the Colonies.

Freedom Is Sought For Race To Enter Africa

OCT 2 - 1942

OCT 2 - 1942

NEW YORK—(ANP) — In a memorandum prepared for the Committee on African and Peace Aims, which has been considering Africa and its future from a post-war viewpoint, Dr W. E. B. DuBois remarks: "The great problem facing the world is to achieve such wide contact of human cultures and mutually beneficent intercourse of human beings as will gradually, by inspiration, comparison and wise selection evolve the best civilization for the largest number of human beings." To accomplish this purpose which involves international travel and exchange of views, he says that "there is a need of a great crusade, a religious mission."

In this connection, the report notes that it is hoped that these parts of Africa which place hindrance in the way of visits from overseas by entirely responsible educated American Negroes may be abolished. There is no serious troubles in most colonies, but the existing situation in this respect in the Union of South Africa, Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, pointed out, has caused a most unfortunate impression in thoughtful circles in this country.

It has only been with great difficulty, and due to the efforts of a few liberally minded statesmen, that it has been possible to make any exceptions to the Union's practice of excluding the residence of American Negro missionaries or the visits of American Negro students.

More than two years ago the African Methodist Episcopal church which has a large membership in South Africa and a number of churches there, supported through its missionary society, elected Rev Frank M. Reid of St. Louis a bishop and assigned him to South Africa. Bishop Reid has never been able to assume his post.

African Art

An exhibition of school children's work in Matabeleland recently held at Bulawayo excited great interest because it was, as the Bantu Mirror observes, the first example of an educational project in the colony in which the color bar was set aside. For the paintings that hung side by side were the work of European, African, Indian and colored children. The mission at whose instance the exhibition was organized sent also some collections of clay models and woodwork. Among the exhibits specially admired were the model of a "Head of an African Christ" and a painting of the death of Lobengula. The exhibition is an illustration of the new spirit in the attitude of the missions to native culture. It too often happened in the past that missionaries looked on the traditional African art with mistrust rather than sympathy and that they taught African children to imitate poor European work rather than to express themselves in their crafts. When Dr. Julian Huxley went to Africa to study African education for the colonial office in 1929, he lamented the results of this mistaken view. Since then there has been a great change, which is due partly to the development of a deeper interest in Africa, illustrated in the work of the Royal African Society.—The Manchester Guardian.

A Superstitious Fear

West African Pilot
Lagos, Nigeria

IN our issue of last Thursday, we published the report of how the father of one of the students of the Wesley School, Shagamu, was instrumental in saving the life of an unfortunate baby from an untimely death after only nine days of existence. According to the report, the baby was said to have been "thrown into a bush," no doubt, through a superstitious fear.

JUN 29 1942

A short while ago, we published an earlier report from the Eastern Provinces of how a husband and wife were together sentenced to death for causing the death of their twin babies.

JUN 29 1942

In our opinion, there is a deep-rooted superstitious fear right down in the minds of our brothers and sisters regarding twin babies. That, no doubt, has accounted very much for reports about twins being thrown away after birth.

We suggest that intensive propaganda be undertaken by the Medical Authorities throughout the country to remove this fear. Instead of looking upon twins with fear and suspicion, the illiterate folk should be educated, instead, to adore and love their twin children.

The days of superstition and fear are gone. We now live in the days of knowledge when illiteracy and all its concomitants are relics of the forgotten past. Something creative at least should be done to help in this matter, especially by the Church, the School, the Medical and Health Authorities, et cetera.

Taxation Of Prostitutes

West African Pilot
Lagos, Nigeria

ONE of the decisions of the Chiefs of the Northern Provinces at their recent Conference was the taxation of prostitutes and the chief reason given for this proposed measure was to reduce the number of women engaged in this "red light" profession.

JUN 22 1942

We do not know whether this measure will have the desired effect, because this "profession" appears to be one of the oldest in the world. Almost everywhere in the world, this menace of prostitutes rears its horrid head and, in some countries, notably in Japan, it has assumed the form of a public question and State-controlled brothels are there for patrons of the art.

JUN 22 1942

Whether the desired effect will be achieved or not, the North has surely given a lead to the other parts of the country in this respect. It is an example which Lagos and other important provincial centres can follow with good effect. Since no woman will like to be identified with this "profession," it is sure that the number of those who will want to be so taxed will dwindle considerably.

JUN 22 1942

The position of this "red light" profession has now deteriorated, especially in the last few years. We hope that this dose of medicine will serve as a cure, and ultimately as a prevention, of one of the grossest evils that threaten the lives of men and women today.

Inclusion Of Africans In Economic Missions Is Urged In United States

West African Pilot -- Lagos, Nigeria

JUL 7 - 1942

NEW YORK (BM).—The following is a summary of the text of a letter addressed to the US Government by the Council on African Affairs urging the Administration to include Negroes on Economic Missions to South Africa:

"The Council on African Affairs hails the decision of the United States Government to send a special Economic Mission to the Union of South Africa which will seek means to develop the vast material resources of that country to aid the war effort of the United Nations," said Dr. Max Yergan, Executive Director of the Council on African Affairs, in a letter to the President just released here.

JUL 7 - 1942

"The Council urges the appointment of Negroes to this Mission which is headed by Colin Wickersham, of the War Production Board, and Hickman Price, of the Board of Economic Warfare."

Dr Yergan pointed out that the Government's sending of such a mission to South Africa would stimulate the whole war effort by bringing the resources of that country behind the United Nations

Inclusion of Negroes on the Mission would strengthen the unity and morale of the Negro people of America and would be welcomed by African people.

The Council stated further that it is essential to arm Africans and to improve their standards of living through the payment of higher wages and extension of civil liberties, to enable them to participate fully in the war effort.,

It is clear that only by taking their stand with the United Nations against the common enemy can the freedom of the African and other colonial peoples be achieved.

"The Council urges the study of conditions within Africa

JUL 7 - 1942

"We believe that the United States can play an important role in helping to mobilize African peoples through increasing opportunities for Negroes here and at home to participate fully in the war effort, and by working jointly with Great Britain toward the inclusion of Africans in the war."

Stressing that this mission is a part of the new and enlarged economic relation of the United States of America to the 160 000 000 people of Africa the Council's statement urged that these relations contribute to the welfare of African people so that they become closer and increasingly helpful.

Finally the Council emphasized that the appointment of Negroes from the United States as members of this Mission befits the dignity and responsibility of the Negro people in America, and would have the effect of strengthening the understanding of the Negro and Colonial peoples that this is their war.

D.R.C. Minister Urges Non-Racial Christian Order For South Africa

A Christian order for South African would educate its people for common citizenship, said the Rev. F. J. Berning Malan, of the Dutch Reformed Church, Cape Town, in a discussion on a Christian order for South Africa, at the Christian Reconstruction Conference held at Fort Hare on Friday last week.

It would progressively share its civilisation with the uncivilised he concluded. It would welcome the advance of indiviouals of any race and would accept them for what they had become, without regard to what they have been orginally. It would give representation to every race and interest in the Government, inviting all in the common service of their land.

It was evident that any form of government which denied full liberty, or rights of common citizenship, to its citizens, or which suppressed or disregarded individuality, or which relied on force and the motive of fear, was un-Christian and not suitable to establish and promote a Christian order in this country, said Mr. Malan.

Non-Europeans must bear their responsibility in the establishment of a Christian order by their willingness to be assisted and to be led by their "grown-up" brothers and their co-operation was needed in the realms of education and religion and the full development of racial genius.

The words uttered by General Smuts in December, 1918, that "the tents have been struck and the great caravan of humanity is once more on the march," were truer and more applicable now than they were then.

TOTALITARIANISM

Nearly everyone talked about a new order, a new kind of society and a new way of life.

The totalitarian order did not appeal to the Christian because it meant the overthrow of Christianity.

It meant the introduction of worship of the golden calf and the abolition of all true religious liberty and freedom of conscience and the replacement of those things by a system in which the Church would only be tolerated so far as it could be used as an instrument—political or otherwise—for the establishment and advancement of an ultra nationalistic view of life and the world.

Christians, on the other hand, were convinced that "the will of God" was the only angle from which to look at life and the world.

The basic note of present life was competition. In a Christian order, it was co-operation.

"Because we have been following this 'gospel of selfishness' in our political, economic and church life, we are in the sad condition in which we find ourselves to-day," he said.

RESOLUTIONS

Among the resolutions passed were the following:—

"We commend the work of the Joint Councils and of the Institute of Race Relations, and feel that the time is ripe for Africans and Coloureds to be given increased responsibilities through representation in Parliament and Provincial Councils.

"Any naturalistic teaching of racial or national superiority is incompatible with the teaching and example of Christ and the implications of the Gospel.

"The widely prevalent interest in Communism, particularly in view of the spirit displayed by the Russian people in the war, constitutes a challenge to the Christian people to study seriously that ideology in its relation to the truth of the revelation in Jesus Christ, to which Christians stand fast."

African National Congress

The Executive Committee of the African National Congress will be held at Bloemfontein on August 29 and 30, and according to the General Secretary matters of national importance will be discussed. We have not got the agenda before us but we have every reason to believe that one of the items to be dealt with will be the reorganisation of Congress. That this is absolutely necessary no one interested in the growth and expansion of Congress movement can deny. Frankly speaking Congress is at present in a state of confusion, because there is no discipline among its leaders, particularly in the provinces. No organisation can be healthy, strong and active whose leaders do not know the value of discipline and team work, and who think that the organisation exist for their benefit and self-aggrandisement.

That there are Provincial leaders of Congress who are not prepared to take orders from the Chief Executive of the African National Congress is common knowledge to all those who are interested in the affairs of this national organisation. In the Transvaal, for instance, the Provincial Congress is tackling matters of national importance which do not come under its jurisdiction. We understand that there are certain leaders who, without obtaining the sanction and approval of the National Executive, are negotiating with a certain group of Europeans with a view to bringing the Provincial Congress under the influence of a political body which these Europeans are establishing. If our information is correct, and we have every reason to believe that it is so, then the time has come when the people should be told whether or not the Provincial Congresses are independent bodies. And we hope this matter will be fully dealt with by the Executive which is meeting in Bloemfontein next month, and that a clear policy will be laid down which will make it impossible for provincial leaders to meddle with affairs which do not come under their jurisdiction.

While we do not question the wisdom of some of our leaders seeking the advice and guidance of Europeans championing the cause of African freedom, nevertheless we are of opinion that our national organisation should be independent of any European influence. It must be remembered that one of the chief functions of the African National Congress is to enable Africans, by means of national unity, to realise their national aspirations so as to contribute their distinctive share to the civilisation of the human race. The African National Congress is not only a political body fighting for the political emancipation of the African people, but it is also a national organisation whose aim is to bring about the spiritual and intellectual awakening of our race. The Congress is still a struggling institution, and it is our firm conviction that outside influences at this stage will be more detrimental than helpful to its national growth and expansion. Our people are still in a state of transition, and they need the leadership not of men who do not share their difficulties and disabilities but of men who share their language and customs, understand their character and sympathise with their national aspirations.

For these reasons we question the wisdom of placing our national organisation under the control of Europeans who may, or may not, have their own axes to grind. But it must be clearly understood that we do not question the honesty and sincerity of those Europeans whose generosity and humanitarianism have impelled them to offer their services to the cause of African freedom. What we say is that, however sincere and honest they may be, they are not the proper people to control our national movement. They may have the brains, the knowledge and the experience in political and economic matters but on matters of national importance they have no qualifications. We cannot therefore, entrust them with the destiny of our race. That destiny must be worked out by our own leaders and thinkers.

There is another matter which we suggset the Executive should deal with, and that is the enforcement of discipline and the creation of the spirit of co-operation among leaders of both the National and the Provincial Congresses. Team work is essential to the successful operation of the African National Congress in every sphere of our activities. The task of the President of the Congress is to enlist the active co-operation of his colleagues in the Executive and of the Provincial leaders and to teach them the value of consultation and co-ordination of efforts.

Gen. Smuts to Act If War Crisis Comes

LONDON, (ANP)—If the Japs seize Madagascar and get a foothold for an attack on South Africa, Gene Smuts will arm the Negroes for combatant duties, it was announced recently by Sidney F. Waterson, high commissioner of the Union of South Africa in an address before the Royal African society.

High Commissioner Waterson told the British audiences that Gen. Smuts had declared it would be necessary to abolish racial segregation and arm the African in the event of a crisis, and had let it be known that "before the Japanese take South Africa he would see to it that every colored person and every native that could be armed would be armed."

Authoritative sources assert that should South Africa be forced to abolish the color-bar, which is even more ruthlessly applied than in the United States, it will be a great achievement.

South Africa After The War

The war which is raging all over the world with a barbarity and ferocity unparalleled in human history, has once more stirred the minds of all thinking men to action, and everywhere in the world men are searching for a new way of life which would enable the races of mankind to live together in peace and happiness. It is therefore gratifying to see that the churches in South Africa are now busy preparing for a new order which must emerge from the chaos caused by this devastating war. At the Christian Reconstruction conference held last week at Fort Hare, the Rev. F. J. Berning Malan of the Dutch Reformed Church, struck the right note when he said: "A Christian order for South Africa would educate its people for common citizenship, and would progressively share its civilisation with the uncivilised. It would welcome the advance of individuals of any race and would accept them for what they had become, without regard to what they have been originally. It would give representation to every race and interest in the Government inviting all in the common service of their land."

This remarkable statement, made by a Minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, has revealed the fact that there exist in South Africa men who understand the true meaning and purpose of the Christian religion and who understand that it is the rejection of Christ's teaching on the part of masses of men, organised as nations, claiming to be civilised, even in a large degree calling themselves Christians, that humanity has not been able to get rid of strife and conflict, poverty and misery. "The Master and Founder of our common faith, Whom many of us follow so far off, distilled the essence of goodness into two aspirations—to love God with all our hearts and our fellow man as ourself. His own life was proof that love of God is best shown through love of men."

Yet, after years of history, and the passing of nearly two thousand years of Christianity, what do we see?

We see nations at each other's throat like wild animals of the jungle, because of ideologies which have been evolved from the sands of race, national and colour prejudices. We see the wanton destruction of human life, of beautiful cities and historical monuments and edifices that have hitherto served as sources of inspiration for the development of the human mind, body and soul. We see some men returning to the jungle in order to find inspiration for their selfish motives. By violence, by fierce destruction, by cruelty, persecution and oppression, unmatched in civilisatson's history, they are endeavouring to hurl back the world into the dark ages.

Those who to-day are fighting against these evil forces, must start now to put their houses in order so that when the war comes to an end, it will be easy to establish a new order of life conducive to peace and happiness. The steps taken by the Churches, therefore, will be welcomed and appreciated by all those who want to see South Africa freed from the chains of race, colour and religious bondage. Now is the time to rid Christianity of racialism and nationalism, and let it function as its Founder intended. That is the only way by which the civilised world can be made safe for democracy, peace, freedom and for human security.

The task of Church leaders is to Christianise those who wield the sceptre of power and to make them realise that governments do not exist for the oppression and suppression of the governed but for their advancement, peace and happiness. As the Rev. Berning Malan points out, "any form of government which denies full liberty, or rights of common citizenship, to its citizens or which suppresses or disregards individuality, or which relies on force and the motive of fear, is un-Christsian and not suitable to establish and promote a Christian order in this country."

To day both Europeans and non-Europeans are sacrificing their lives for their joint fatherland, and are sharing together the cruelties and barbarities of the war in the Western Desert. It is only right, therefore, that these men who are fighting for the overthrow of Nazism and Fascism should come back to a South Africa that has been emancipated from rabid racialism and nationalism.

Fine Display By Native Military Corps At Brakpan

A large and representative audience had an opportunity of witnessing an excellent Military Display at Brakpan last Saturday afternoon, performed by the Native Military Corps for funds for Medical aid for Russia.

The Mayoress of Brakpan, Mrs. Ash, welcomed Civic Dignitaries and High Military Authorities. Among those witnessing the display were Col. Van Dam, Officer Commanding the Witwatersrand Command accompanied by Col. Hendry; Col. Mockford, Assistant Director of the Non-European Army Services, accompanied by a Staff Officer; Col. MacGavin Greig, Officer in Charge of the N.M.C. Training Area, Welgedacht; Col. Fulford Officer Commanding 1st Battalion N.M.C.; Captain Botha of the Native Military School and his Staff; Councillor and Mrs. Gidley-Moore; Councillors Smiley and Elton; Mrs. MacGavin Creig and her daughter.

The opening item was a P.T. Display. Forty men clad in snow-white athletic shorts, swung into the arena singing their own marching song as they entered, moving along with ease and with a swinging gait. The outstanding feature of this item was the fact, that for 20 minutes, the platoon went through some very intricate movements without a single word of command or signal from the leader. It was a perfect expression of precision, timing and co-ordination of team work. The exercises terminated with a song, and the smiles on the faces of the men showed that singing and exercise go well together in building up a healthy outlook.

A drill squad then marched on to the grounds headed by a Brass band. The platoon was drilled by a Native N.C.O. Sgt. Lonsdale, who, put them through their paces in perfect "Grenadier" style. Their marching and drill was a pleasure to watch.

AUG 1 - 1942

A party of Stretcher Bearers from a Medical Training School, then gave a demonstration of stretcher drill and first aid work under active service conditions. The Native stretcher bearers, have now become famous "Up North", and three of their number have received the Military Medal for bravery. These men went about their work quickly and efficiently and demonstrated various positions of working in the field.

Col. Van Dam and his Staff Officers then inspected a Guard of Honour which was accompanied by a Drum and Bugle Band for the Retreat Ceremony.

The Drum Major, Samson Nkosi, a warrior, standing 6 feet tall, and a perfect specimen of manhood was the centre of attraction. He swung his mace in the traditional "guardsman" fashion, and did it perfectly. He and his band were a credit to the Battalion and to the Native Military Corps. It was altogether an excellent performance.

ETHIOPIA

Sheba's Child

AUG 3 1 1942

Until 1935 there was little to trouble a knobbly-kneed schoolgirl, Tsahai, about her father's rambling stone house or his loose-woven kingdom in Ethiopia. Going back home from school in Switzerland or France, she noticed unhappily the filth and disease which flourished on the ignorance of her father's people. And there was her father's household law, confining her to hidden rooms of the palace. But there were compensations.

There were the Lion of Judah's lions to admire, fearfully. Once the house was full of fine new furniture from London, which she helped to arrange around the rooms. She could peep in solemn satisfaction at court ceremonies under the yellow umbrellas, and at banquets when her father's guests dined from gold plates. Her Shamma (Ethiopian drapery) was a lot more comfortable than European clothes. In private crises there was the haven of her mother's great brown bosom. And, when she was 14, her father winked at tradition and allowed her to head the Ethiopian Red Cross and the Women's Work Association, even to receive their members at his house.

Deepest of Tsahai's home contentments was the escape from the rigid isolation of the pink-skinned world: from teachers who taught her Christian precepts, but professed no sisterly love; from girls who smiled at her with their thin buttonhole lips, as across a chasm; from visitors whose English, French or German phrases she understood, but whose meanings she could only ponder. Because her skin was brown and because she was royalty, there had never been any expansion in the invisible walls which closed around her in the pink-skinned world.

In 1935, when she was 15 and the Italians came with boml [illegible] s, Tsahai forgot tradition, and wen [illegible] k in the first field ambulance unit of her father's army, binding the wounds of her father's soldiers. Without introductions, but with her father's dignity, she talked to her patients. She posed for photographers. She made a speech to the pink-skinned war correspondents. Earnestly she told them: "We will fight to the last breath and to the last inch; but, if we fail, civilization will be destroyed." Next year, with her parents, vanguard of the world's refugees, she fled to England.

The English climate and the English countenances were cool. They called her father "The Emperor," but there was no conviction in their tones. The family seldom left the brownstone walls of their house in Bath, or the garden, tight-screened by cedar trees.

When bombs came to England, and other refugees came, the English warmed. Upholstered in Western clothes, Tsahai and her mother went out sometimes to tea, chatted politely, accepted as polite the thin-lipped smiles of Bath. Tsahai learned to accept he[illegible]ation with the dignity her father so frequently recommended. She enrolled in a London hospital for a nurse's training course, earned a diploma and was ready, when her father regained his kingdom, to return with him.

For 22-year-old Tsahai no year was so free, so filled with hope as this one. Back with her parents in Ethiopia, she worked to teach her father's people to avoid filth and disease. She could appear among the tribal chiefs under the yellow umbrellas, talk to them of sanitation and of germs, devising Amharic words to fit her needs. She married Colonel Abiy Abbaba of her father's victorious army.

They had need of her, she heard, in the village of Lekamti. Traveling with few formalities, Princess Tsahai, daughter of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, daughter of the Lion of Judah and the most modern of women in one of the last black kingdoms, went to Lekamti. There among the sick she fell ill, and there last week she died.

WORLD TODAY

Jim Crow in Africa

The Daily Worker – N.Y., N.Y.

By James S. Allen

SEP 8 - 1942

THE trade unions, the Communists and other progressive groups of South Africa are putting up a stiff fight against segregation, which is the main obstacle in that country to the full mobilization of the people for the war effort.

Some victories have already been won, such as the recognition of the Non - European (native) trade unions and the relaxation of the pass laws in some parts of the country. But the fight against the most thorough system of jim crow yet devised remains the basic war necessity of the Union of South Africa.

This land of some 10,000,000 people, four-fifths of whom are colored, lies athwart the most important supply lines of the United Nations. Situated at the tip of the African continent it commands the juncture of the Atlantic and Indian Oceans. Many of our ships carrying war supplies to India and China, to the Middle East and the Soviet Union call at Capetown.

For other reasons also the South African situation is of special interest to us. We are confronted with similar problems in our own country in the fight against Bourbonism, which remains a chief obstacle to the mobilization of the Negro people for the war effort.

Here the days when "white superiority" was a dominant principle of government are over, although it is being revived by the Talmadges and the Fifth Column as their special contribution to defeatism.

SEP 8 - 1942

However, the practices of jimcrow, in the South still legalized and in the North still illegally prevalent, hamper national unity and the war effort.

THE fundamental nature of the further changes which are required in South Africa can best be appreciated if it is understood that the central principle of government in that country is segregation.

Prime Minister General Smuts has recognized publically that segregation is doomed if South Africa is to mobilize properly for the war. But as late as April of this year—on the heels of the Japanese conquests in Southeast Asia—the Native Affairs Commission of the Union Government issued a report which said:

"Race purity, the determination to maintain race purity is the strongest force in the political and, indeed, in the social life of South Africa today; and all the forces of the State are directed to that end."

SEP 8 - 1942

THERE are, of course, wiser heads in the top ranks of the Government who, together with the Prime Minister, have at least learned some of the lessons of Burma and Malaya. At about the same time this report was issued, Col. Reitz, Minister for Native Affairs, told the Senate that nothing created more bad feeling among the people than the pass laws. He urged that this "wholly unjust and illogical" state of affairs be altered.

Nothing more humiliating or oppressive than the pass laws can be imagined even by a Governor Talmadge. There is no limit to the number of papers which at various times Africans are forced to carry. Here are some of them:

When an African comes to Johannesburg, to look for work he must carry a travelling pass. This he has to exchange for a pass to look for work. Then there is a special pass which a man must get to be out at night. A pass to live with your wife if you live on the employer's premises, an old man's pass for those too old or too sick to work, a lodger's permit, a visiting pass, a poll-tax receipt, weekly and monthly special passes, daily labor pass, tea party special pass, pass to buy beer—there is no end to them.

The pass which is most common is the Service Contract. The law under which this is issued makes it a crime to leave a present employer for a better one. It makes it a crime to miss work, refuse to obey the boss, or to go on strike.

FOR years Africans have fought against the pass system, under the leadership of the National African Congress. In 1930, on Dingaan's day, thousands of non-Europeans burned their passes. Many people, among them the Communist leader Johannes Nkosi, were killed by police on that day in Durban and Potchefstroom. The recent revision of the system in some industrial areas followed energetic mass pressure led by the Congress.

The most rabid advocates, although not the only ones, of the color bar are the Nazi-fascist fifth columnists and their associates. They are led by such people as former Prime Minister Hertzog and former cabinet member Pirow, both of whom were forced out of the government when their "neutrality" resolution was defeated in September, 1939; by Dr. Malan, Nationalist (largely Dutch) party leader, and by the Ossewa Brandwag, a German-Dutch storm trooper organization.

These men urge peace with Hitler to establish a "white Reich on the black continent." They claim that Japan and Germany have agreed that Africa is to belong to Germany — an "Aryan," a "pure" people—while Asia is to belong to Japan.

When General Smuts promised to arm the non-Europeans, Dr. Malan issued a "Black Manifesto" violently attacking the natives. The Hitlerites have set on foot a vicious campaign to stir up hatred between the Europeans and non-Europeans and to prevent any breech in the wall of segregation.

Unfortunately, even the anti-Axis leaders fail to separate themselves clearly from the "war of the races" approach. This, and the attitude of the labor and native leaders, will be the subject for another column.

D.R.C. Minister Urges Non-Racial Christian Order For South Africa

A Christian order for South [illegible] its people for common citizenship, said the Rev. F. J. Berning Malan, of the Dutch Reformed Church, Cape Town, in a discussion on a Christian order for South Africa, at the Christian Reconstruction Conference held at Fort Hare on Friday last week.

It would progressively share its civilisation with the uncivilised he concluded. It would welcome the advance of individuals of any race and would accept them for what they had become, without regard to what they have been orginally. It would give representation to every race and interest in the Government, inviting all in the common service of their land.

It was evident that any form of government which denied full liberty, or rights of common citizenship, to its citizens, or which suppressed or disregarded individuality, or which relied on force and the motive of fear, was un-Christian and not suitable to establish and promote a Christian order in this country, said Mr. Malan.

Non-Europeans must bear their responsibility in the establishment of a Christian order by their willingness to be assisted and to be led by their "grown-up" brothers and their co-operation was needed in the realms of education and religion and the full development of racial genius.

The words uttered by General Smuts in December, 1938, that "the tents have been struck and the great caravan of humanity is once more on the march," were truer and more applicable now than they were then.

TOTALITARIANISM

Nearly everyone talked about a new order, a new kind of society and a new way of life.

The totalitarian order did not appeal to the Christian because it meant [illegible] of Christianity.

It meant the introduction of worship of the golden calf and the abolition of all true religious liberty and freedom of conscience and the replacement of those things by a system in which the Church would only be tolerated so far as it could be used as an instrument — political or otherwise—for the establishment and advancement of an ultra nationalistic view of life and the world.

Christians, on the other hand, were convinced that "the will of God" was the only angle from which to look at life and the world.

The basic note of pre[illegible] life was competition. In a Christian order, it was co-operation.

"Because we have been following this 'gospel of selfishness' in our political, economic and church life, we are in the sad condition in which we find ourselves to-day," he said.

RESOLUTIONS

Among the resolutions passed were the following:—

"We commend the work of the Joint Councils and of the Institute of Race Relations, and feel that the time is ripe for Africans and Coloureds to be given increased responsibilities through representation in Parliament and Provincial Counc[illegible]

"Any naturalist[illegible] teaching of racial or national superiority is incompatible with the teaching and example of Christ and the implications of the Gospel.

"The widely prevalent interest in Communism, particularly in view of the spirit displayed by the Russian people in the war, constitutes a challenge to the Christian people to study seriously that ideology in its relation to the truth of the revelation in Jesus Christ, to which Christians stand fast."

Six Points for Ethiopia

Another Conference in London

THE CONFERENCE ON ETHIOPIA held last Thursday at the Cowdray Hall, London, W.1, met, as the Chairman, Mr. J. H. Greenwood, rather quaintly phrased it, "to remind us of Ethiopia's future;" and proceeded to lay down six points, or principles, governing that future, which it later confirmed by formal resolutions, while leaving the details for future consideration.

The six points were: (1) Complete independence for Ethiopia; (2) formal recognition of Ethiopia's place as a member of the Allied Nations; (3) abolition of Italian investments and concessions; (4) eventual restoration of all occupied territory, the Ogaden, the railway and the Italian Colonies formerly part of Ethiopia; (5) access to the seas; and (6) the encouragement of the Ethiopian language and culture.

Lord Davies stressed the demand for full Ethiopian independence (not "sovereignty," he insisted, having apparently a strong objection to that term). There must be no annexation or dismemberment of Ethiopia, he declared: a statement that brought loud applause.

Throughout the meeting there seemed, indeed, to be an undercurrent of suspicion of the British Government and its intentions towards Ethiopia. There was a "want of candour" and "witholding of information" as one speaker put it; and a difficulty of getting a clear statement of future policy from Ministers and Parliament.

Future of the Ogaden

Thus, Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, honorary secretary of the Conference, was anxious about the Ogaden. There was, she said, some agitation in this country that the Ogaden (now occupied by the British and formerly by the Italians as part of their Colonies) should not be returned to Ethiopia. It did not appear a very promising country, but just before the Italian aggression the Emperor, Haile Sellassie, was about to sign a 70-year concession with a Mr. Ricketts on behalf of the Standard Oil Company of America. If it was worth the Standard Oil Company's while to get such a concession, there must be some potentialities in the Ogaden, which might account for the agitation for its non-return to its rightful owners.

Moreover, Ethiopia has an agreement with the French and Italian Governments, made by the Emperor Menelik, that anything relinquished in French Somaliland or Eritrea must be handed over to Ethiopia.

In connexion with the confiscation of Italian properties and concessions in Ethiopia, Miss Pankhurst pointed out that although the Italian Government, by an illegal war of aggression, had seized the properties and obtained the concessions, they had been handed over to companies and individuals who nominally owned them, though really the Government did. That was an ingenious trick to enable the Italians, after an unsuccessful war, to claim that individuals should not be victimised, but should be allowed to retain their properties or receive compensation.

A Bad Precedent

The same trick had been played by the Germans in Norway, Denmark, Belgium, France, and other occupied countries in Europe, where staple businesses had been handed over to German control. Should Britain fail to restore to Ethiopia Italian stolen property, it would—as Ethiopia was the first victim of aggression to be freed—establish a very bad precedent which would be seized upon by the Axis Powers to retain control by their nationals of stolen properties in occupied Europe.

Discussing the inexplicable refusal of the British Government to accept the aid of the Ethiopia brigade of troops offered by the Emperor—its very existence was officially unknown in England—Miss Pankhurst claimed that in the Gojjam and at Amba Alagi during the Ethiopian campaign it was the Ethiopian troops of the Emperor who made the vital assault which resulted in victory—and who on one occasion captured 14,000 Italian officers and men.

It was left to Professor Jevons, honorary treasurer of the Abyssinian Association, to put in a good word for the British Government and reveal a rift in the lute of English friends of Ethiopia.

There was, he declared, no justification for suspecting Britain's bona fides; much which the Government was willing to do, it could in the circumstances not do. The situation in Africa was too much one of emergency for promises to be made categorically as to what the future should bring. Nor was the time ripe for resolutions to be passed binding the Conference to definite opinions and courses of action. The Abyssinia Association, while approving generally the principles put forward by the Conference, did not see their way to be represented at the Conference.

He urged the necessity for an Ethiopian Minister to be posted to the Court of St. James. As for Ethiopian access to the sea, he suggested the convenient port of Assab, which had a very sparsely inhabited hinterland. Finally, Professor Jevons insisted that any transfer or restoration of land must be made with the full consent of its inhabitants.

"The Italians at one time offered the Emperor of Abyssinia £1,000,000 if he would abdicate. He replied: 'There are 12 millions of my people. At £1 a head that would come to £12 millions. And that I would not accept.'"—Mr. W. Arnold-Foster, addressing the Abyssinia Association.

Native Speaker Stirs Audience At Columbia

AUG 22 1942

By AUSTIN BRIGGS-HALL

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(ANP)—Kingsley Ozumba Mbadiwe of Nigeria, West Africa, author of "The British and Axis Aims in Africa," speaking before a distinguished audience at Teachers' College, Columbia University, gave his listeners food for thought in his discourse on "Africa, The War and Peace Aims."

Mr. Mbadiwe pointed to the forbearance of the African by recalling that Africa took arms 28 years ago in order to help save the world for democracy. Developing further he added: "Africa came back home, not only to find individual and family disorganization, but also had to summon courage to face loss of democracy at home and to withstand brutality of totalitarianism."

AUG 22 1942

Mr. Mbadiwe in no uncertain terms warned the newly formed committee to study "Africa, the War and Peace Aims" whose special report, "The Atlantic Charter And Africa From an American Standpoint," has just been issued by Phelp-Stokes fund, that Africa will welcome people who take a stand that all men and all nations are entitled to freedom, but Africa will condemn any person or organization or group of them who think that they can speak for Africa or apologetically beg for Africa a slice of freedom, when it is evident that God who gave life, gave liberty with it. "The west," he said, "has not understood the mysteries of the African mind, and until it does, Africa must be the captain of her own destiny.

AGAIN WARNS TEACHERS

He again warned the teachers of their sacred trust as directors of the human minds, and as the invisible hands that fashion the policies of government and nations, and urged that such a trust be not used for selfish or egotistic ends.

Perhaps challenging George T. Renner, professor of geography at Columbia University, who wrote an article in Colliers' Magazine, June 6, on the possible repartitioning of Africa to afford a more equitable economic basis for future world peace, Mr. Mbadiwe said that, "the men who talk geopolitics must find themselves in Germany. We are fighting for democracy here and we must talk democracy here."

WILL NOT BE PAWNS

AUG 22 1942

Climaxing his speech, Mr. Mbadiwe said: "I wish to say emphatically, the world that dares to overlook Africa in the peace resolution and appointment of liberty to hopeful peoples will learn what it means when the African says 'no.' For while I live, Africa, shall no longer be the pawn of alien governments.

"We must, and we will take all necessary stops to ensure our liberty, and should strength fail us in the task of complete redemption, we shall leave it for the coming generation as a legacy that they shall neither sleep nor shudder until the four freedoms echo throughout the reposeful forests of Africa."

What Is The Position Of Ethiopia?

BY the defeat of the Italian armies in East Africa and the signing of the new Anglo-Ethiopian Treaty, the ancient Kingdom of Ethiopia has once more become a free and independent country, linked with the British Commonwealth of Nations by a bond of friendship which stands in war and in peace.

But although this is (or should be) the case, we are constrained to ask, "What is the position of Ethiopia in international relations today?" because our doubts have been caused by recent events. One is the celebration of the Flag Day of the United Nations, and the other is the question of the re-opening of the Ethiopian Legation in London.

Although such States as Cuba, Dominican Republic, the Duchy of Luxemburg and Free France find places in the ranks of the United Nations, Ethiopia was not mentioned, and we wonder whether this was an omission or the stark reality in internatianal politics? If Ethiopia is not one of the United Nations, then what is she?

With regard to the Ethiopian Legation in London, even the "New Times and Ethiopia News" has been forced to ask the British Government to speed up negotiations in that connection. Dr Martin, or Mr Abraham, still waits for orders to re-open the Legation, but the order has not come. How long will the delay last? Ethiopia, as it is now well known, stands as a beacon to the black peoples of the world and they watch developments with critical eyes.

A Lesson To All Africans

SEVERAL times, we have published reports from Allied and neutral sources of alleged German atrocities both inside Germany itself and in the German-occupied countries—atrocities the like of which "no eye hath seen, no ears have heard" in the long history of mankind.

In a recent issue, we published yet another report describing the merciless way the Germans had razed to the ground, by fire, the entire Bohemian town of Libce. The report showed further how all the male inhabitants of this unfortunate town were shot and the women and children sent to concentration camps.

We hereby express our deepest sympathy with the relatives of these martyrs who have thus laid down their precious lives for their country and the Allied cause. Nigeria, we hope, will take a lesson from this. If the Germans could treat their own colour, as alleged, how much more will they treat the African who, in Hitler's own words, is nothing but an ape!

This should be a lesson to all those who feel they should in any way impede our general war effort. This latest German act of atrocity should spur all of us on to greater energy.

'COLORED' UNIONISTS GAIN RECOGNITION

South African Government Lifts Ban on Organization

The Ministry of Labor of the Union of South Africa will now recognize the trade unions of colored workers, according to an official report received in London from Johannesburg. The importance of the decision which Mr. Madeley, Minister of Labor, has handed to the South African Trades and Labor Council may be judged from the fact that between 80 and 90 per cent of South Africa's unskilled labor is among the colored population. Previously the right to collective bargaining had been restricted to white workers.

According to a recent summary by the International Labor office of the League of Nations a report of a commission appointed by the government of the Union of South Africa to investigate the social, educational and economic conditions of the "colored" people, the mixed races known in South Africa as the colored or Cape-Colored people form in many ways a separate community distinct from both Europeans and natives. Throughout the Union they number nearly 800,000, of whom nearly 700,000 inhabit the Cape Province. They owe their origin mainly to slaves introduced into the Cape in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, to the Hottentots who inhabited the Cape, and to Europeans, while a Bantu strain has been added in some districts, and immigrants from St. Helena and Mauritius have also contributed.

Among the chief recommendations of the commission were abolition of the tot system (supply of wine to laborers), improvement of educational facilities, legal help for the poorer classes in criminal matters, improved wages, establishment of farm settlements, training of medical students, better supervision of nutrition and health, extension of old-age pensions, amendments of masters and servants laws, and checking of the tendency to introduce color bar legislation.

Native Soldiers Of South Africa Carry Only Picks

CAPETOWN, South Africa—(ANP)—Bishop Wilford Parker, white, of Pretoria, made the statement here that South Africa should arm its native soldiers. At present though, the mother country England and South Africa herself are waging a life and death war, the African native soldiers are permitted only to carry picks and work implements. Bishop Parker who had just returned from the northern front, said "I believe that the majority of our men up north would say that it is only right and fair that our natives should be armed."

"We ought to recognize that the loyalty of the natives is a precious thing for South Africa, but it would be a mistake just to take it for granted, still more to ignore or flout it."

WAS ETHIOPIA FORGOTTEN? The West African "Pilot" has devoted timely attention to the position of Ethiopia in the comity of Free Nations and the absence of its flag in last Sunday's celebrations in both England and America. Of course, from official communication to hand Ethiopia was not one of those countries that signed the Declaration of the United Nations on January 1st 1942, but in view that Ethiopia, assisted by British armed contingents, including Africans, fought the Italians for the liberation of Ethiopia from the Nazi Yoke, one would have thought that International courtesy on the part of the foremost Democratic Nations would have seen to it that a greatly wronged Ethiopia would have been allowed to display its flag in the procession of the Democratic Nations. It should also be recalled that Ethiopia existed and possessed an ordered form of Government when Europe was in a condition of pagan darkness. Facts are stubborn things. The foregoing causes us to wonder whether that Atlantic Charter will be honoured in the breach rather than in the observance. Meanwhile, the Abyssinian Legation in London is reported to have remained closed and Dr. Martin, Ethiopia's accredited representative, has been interviewing the Foreign Office without obtaining any satisfactory result. Great Minds!

The Evil Of Intolerance

JUL 25 1942

Recently a deputation of Coloured leaders waited on Colonel Deneys Reitz, in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister, to ask for the extension of franchise rights to the Coloureds in the Northern Provinces. In reply Colonel Reitz stated that, "although he was in sympathy with their plea, he felt that the time was inopportune. Before legislation could be introduced, it would be necessary that the opposition to it should be won over to broader and liberal views." This sympathetic expression of Colonel Reitz, which does not promise that after the war the question of the extension of the franchise will be considered, has provoked a storm of protest in certain quarters that have not yet been emancipated from the "mentality of smallness" The Minister has been accused of promising Coloured and African peoples the grant of franchise rights after war. He has been reminded of the policy of segregation, and of the fact that "national-minded Afrikaners" will not tolerate any participation by Non-Europeans in the administration of the country's affairs on equal footing with Europeans.

This is not surprising. "The national-minded Afrikaners" are incapable of outgrowing race and colour prejudice. They think that white civilisation in Africa will be secured by their sitting on the necks of Non-Europeans. They cannot understand that:

"The laws of changeless Justice
Bind oppressor with the oppressed.
And close as sin and suffering joint
We march to fate abreast."

There is no security in tyranny and oppression, and those who, hope to secure themselves by trampling upon others are living in a fool's paradise. History has no record of a people who flourished and became powerful and great because of their exploitation and repression of other people's human and national aspirations. But it has a record of the fall of Empires and nations that once thought they were secured by their tyrannical and brutal treatment of those under their sway.

JUL 25 1942

The Non-Europeans in this land particularly Africans and Coloureds have no other country than South Africa which they can call their home. They originated on this sub-continent and here they must live their lives to the full, whether "the national-minded Afrikaners" like it or not. Today, up North, their boys are shedding their blood in defence of South Africa and the Democratic world. They are sharing with their European comrades-in-arms the brutalities and hardships of this cruel war —a war which has origin in the virus of race bigotry which Hitler conceived in his mischievous mind. They are fighting to make the world fit for democracy and civilisation, and they cannot, when they come back, be expected to live under conditions that are incompatible with the principles of democratic life. They cannot be expected to be denied the rights and privileges which will be enjoyed by thousands of men who, during this titanic struggle, are engaged in subversive activities against the South Africa's war efforts and against the very existence of democracy. Every right thinking man will agree that the part which is being played by Non-Europeans in this war entitles them to recognition as citizens of South Africa.

Now is the time for the mobilisation of liberal opinion against the evil of race intolerance and the poison of race prejudice which is being disseminated by the agents and admirers of Adolf Hitler. It is not enough to overthrow Hitlerism on the battlefields; that will not purge the world of the virus of race bigotry with which the Nazis have already infected the spiritual and cultural life of thousands of people in this country. Hitlerism must be fought wherever it is found. The democratic world must resist any policy which imposes the will of the strong on the weak and the helpless. South Africa must be emancipated from "the mentality of smallness."

The Ways of Africa

Most of our adult years, there has been an ambition to explore the hinterlands of Africa. Our desire has been to penetrate the inland to a point where so-called civilizing influences have not penetrated. Our yearning has been to see the black man untouched and untarnished.

You see there has been too much disposition in the atmosphere where the American Negro resides to suggest that wisdom is white and ignorance is black. We have longed for the day when we could make investigations separate and distinct from false propaganda and manufactured information.

Last Sunday night at the Pilgrim Congregational church, Miss Mary Cushman, M. D., a missionary of the West Central African Mission, Congregational church, and who for a quarter of a century has done Christian work in Portuguese Africa, delivered a short talk, which illuminated and brightened a hitherto dark spot in our well of information.

Miss Cushman says the Africans have a language that is both musical and adequate. Of course, on that score we knew darker races had supplied the world with its language systems and alphabets, although we had to go through school and reach far into adult manhood before we ceased giving white people credit for our A B Cs.

The distinguished lecturer talked about the African's development in government and medical science. She told also of their knowledge of the uses of iron.

"Why, they were vaccinating for smallpox long before the white man and you would be surprised at the excellent splints they make for a broken limb," said Miss Cushman.

OCT 31 1942

The missionary said native carpenters build fine houses with only three tools. She said it was marvelous what these native artisans could do with their limited mechanical equipment.

"And their smelting and use of iron is marvelous," declared Miss Cushman. "You should see the fine wire they produce."

This is the picture of African life one seldom secures here in America. We are never told that much of our western culture sits on a black base. Few people know that when Jethro, the Ethiopian father-in-law of Moses, talked to the Jewish lawgiver on Mount Sinai, it was then the world first heard of democratic government. Josephus tells this story in a very graphic and revealing manner.

Perhaps our courts of law could learn something from African justice. "They never suppress any evidence. Everything is admitted in trial, but they have safeguards preventing untruths from being established as evidence. One frequently finds African courts determining both parties guilty, which is often true," said Miss Cushman.

Bids for a Bandit

Newsweek

A powerful and wily figure in the African tug of war is El Glaoui, the Pasha of Marrakech. On the eve of Admiral Jean Darlan's visit to Morocco, an obvious attempt to tie the native rulers to Vichy's cause, a NEWSWEEK correspondent dispatched the following account of El Glaoui and the attention paid to him by Frenchmen, Nazis, Jews, and Americans:

Dayton, Ohio NOV 2 - 1942

The situation in French Morocco is serious. Ever since 1915, peace in Morocco has been the handiwork of two men—French Marshal Lyautey (who died in 1934) and Si El Hadj Glaoui, the Pasha of Marrakech. El Glaoui is a black bandit but a very refined one who wears nail polish and who knew his way around Vichy and Vittel and Aix-les-Bains when they were the smartest cosmopolitan spas. Now the French have cooled toward El Glaoui, and he is dickering with outsiders.

The Pasha, whose daughter is No. 1 wife of the Sultan of Morocco, is the real ruler of the Atlas and all lands south to the Niger. He has always sold his "protection" for a heavy consideration.

Lyautey knew how to handle El Glaoui. In 1914, the general wanted to send heavy contingents of his colonial troops to France but feared that the Arabs might take advantage of the weakened garrisons to stage a mutiny. He summoned El Glaoui to Rabat. There was no answer. Lyautey sent a second fruitless message. Then he sent a third: "I am having built a bamboo cage. If you do not come of your own accord, I am coming down to get you and bring you to Rabat." El Glaoui came, and Lyautey was clever enough to have flower girls scatter flowers in front of his horse. The two men then struck a bargain in which El Glaoui saw that there was no trouble even after France pulled out her troops.

During the period between the two wars, El Glaoui was courted with gifts. Every year the French Government added a new Hispano-Suiza to his garageful of them. The French lent him millions of francs, on the theory that debtors can be bound hands and feet. El Glaoui's breast was covered with ribbons and decorations. When war broke out, he proved his value by putting Morocco solidly behind Paris.

Then came defeat, Bordeaux, Vichy. Pétain ordered El Glaoui to stay in Marrakech. Forbidden to come to France, for more than two years he has been a prisoner in his three palaces. He angrily recalled his son Mehdi from Saint Cyr, the French West Point, and young Mehdi, having exchanged his French cadet's uniform for a djellaba, joined father in collecting taxes. So did his brother, Brahim, who collects tribute from all caravans passing the fortress of Telouet.

El Glaoui grew richer by selling protection to scores of European Jews who sought refuge in Morocco. At the same time he opened his ears to the Germans who swarmed through the gardens of the Mamounia Hotel at Marrakech, where no Boche had any military right to be. But on the whole, El Glaoui inclined to favor the British and Americans who also paid him visits. In a showdown, insiders said last week, El Glaoui's influence—a vital factor in the fate of Morocco—would be exerted on the side of the Allies.

SIR: I have just learned with dismay that the British government has reinstalled Hailie Selassie on the throne of Ethiopia.

I seem to have read somewhere that this is a people's war against their oppressors. So far words have been all we have had as evidence of such intentions. This is the first action to supplement the talk. If this is the way the United Nations are going about it, the Germans can dispense with their propaganda to the oppressed peoples of Europe and confine themselves solely to the facts.

Hailie Selassie murdered as many of his compatriots as did Mussolini, and in no more democratic or humanitarian manner.

African Soldiers Given Taxes Instead of Arms!

The Comet
Lagos, Nigeria

56a

AFRICAN soldiers are clamouring for arms to defend South Africa against the Fascists. They are covering themselves with glory by their bravery and devotion to duty in the North. YET Government still taxes these brave soldiers.

An African soldiers still have to pay: £1 per head poll tax; plus 10s hut or land tax. He has further to sign a stop order so that his tax may be deducted from his meagre military pay.

A European soldier pays. NOTHING!! Nor has he to sign any stop orders.

JUL 1 - 1942

The taxation of African soldiers serving with the South African Forces in the North has been the subject of criticism and comment among the European troops, who feel that this apparent differentiation is not only unjust, but bears heavily on some of the African troops.

It is pointed out in Johannesburg that the tax on African soldiers is poll tax based not on residence, but on "head" and is paid at the rate of £1 per year. The local tax was a hut or land tax, based on the ownership of a hut or land.

When an African enlists in the Army, he signs a stop order for the deduction from his pay of any taxes which might be due at the time, or might fall due while he is serving anywhere in Africa.

The amount of the stop order varies from 2s. 6d per month upwards. Many of the African soldiers have signed for the deduction of the full amount in one payment, the money being taken off the regular dependants payment made to their families or dependants.

In addition, Africans have to pay the usual 10s. a year for every hut or dwelling occupied by their families in the Union. This is not paid where there were no dependants to occupy a hut or dwelling.

Europeans serving in the Army outside the Union are compelled to pay income tax on income obtained in this country, but they are not liable for the provincial personal tax unless they have been resident in the Union for 90 days in any financial year. Europeans serving in the North, who do not pay income tax therefore, have no obligations in the matter of Union taxation, even if they remain away from the Union for several years.

This taxation of brave, loyal men is not only unjust, but will act as a "stop order" for future recruits among the Africans. We say: Don't Tax African Soldiers, But Give them Arms Instead.—"The Cape Standard" May 19, 1942

The Racial Problem in Africa

SEP 10 1942

Discussed by Mr. R. C. Tredgold, M.P.

"There's no such thing as the Native problem," declared the Minister of Native Affairs, Mr. R. C. Tredgold, K.C., a few days ago when opening a missionary conference in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia.

The most important aspect of settlement in Southern Africa and Africa generally lay in proper race relationship. It was a question of a proper approach and a proper attitude of mind which could be described as a liberal outlook. That relationship could be maintained only by a solution which did justice to both races, and such a solution demanded the creation of a correct attitude of mind on the part of both Europeans and Natives.

Champions of the African who studied the question must take account of the existence of physical and economic fear. Europeans and missionaries could play a large part by acting as liaison officers between the two races. African education was inadequate at present, but with increased State control there would be a demand for increased secularisation in African education. Church influence was desirable and necessary when Church and State took over education conjointly. The Minister declared his intention to press forward with an educational scheme at the earliest date after the war.

The Colony's medical services were still inadequate, but the Prime Minister had promised greater services. No new order, however, could be complete unless the African received his due share. The health of the African was a vital factor in the health of Europeans in the Colony.

Mr. Tredgold also foreshadowed that close consideration would be given to raising the economic standard of the Native after the war. Upon it also depended European advancement. The uplift of the African might take generations, and the settlement problem largely depended on sound race relationships.

AN INJURIOUS CARTOON

OCT 31 1942

The Chicago Daily News of October carried an inexcusably distorted cartoon of a Negro soldier. The colored boy had lost his bayonet and substituted for it, a razor. There he stood his eyes rolling, his big lips blubbering, explaining to his white officer that he had to use his razor.

The Chicago Defender is not afraid of a cartoon. It uses this medium of humor itself. It believes humor is essential to morale—but humor, not insult. There is a wide difference in the cartoon which distorts the figure and face of a member of an oppressed people and that which similarly treats a member of the dominant or oppressor group. The latter may be humorous, the former cannot be.

56

The oppressor is creating a pattern of the oppressed in his caricature. He in creating a type which he holds to be no fiction, truly no innocent cartoon, but an image of the real thing. The oppressor in his caricature of the oppressed is in a sense justifying his oppression.

The Defender would not make mention of this vicious cartoon if it were not for the injury it does to the struggle for national unity.

Those in a position to create ideas should, if they are anti-fascist, be extremely careful of the ideas they create of other members of the national unity group.

Every lyncher, every fascist would and will endorse the News' cartoon, in fact such elements dote on this manner of libel. They will pay no attention to the cartooning of white soldiers.

We speak for a greater sensitivity, a deeper feeling for the sensibilities of our neighbors, our allies, our friends. That is the policy of democracy and of victory.

OCT 31 1942

The front of ideology is one largely used by the enemy to divide his foes. One method is to get each one to poke "fun" at the other. Today is no time for the use of cartoons, movies, plays or the use of any other art form to create a false and misleading picture of the members of the union against fascism.

A Great Soul Passes: Victor Allen is gone from among us.

The Comet — Nigeria

A Tribute

BY OLATUNJI SOWANDE

DEC 14 1941

ALTHOUGH the news was true and I knew it, I did my best to hope that the person who brought me the heart-rending news of the death of Victor Ade Allen had made a mistake. "It couldn't be true", I said and yet all the time I knew I was just fighting shy of the fact. Tis only true; Victor has breathed his last upon this unfortunate planet of our's and leaves behind a crowd of sorrowing relations, friends and acquaintances.

It is not a fort-night since I saw him last. He was ill in bed but little did I realise at the time our farewells were really "good-byes". He thought he had a touch of fever and needed a rest but alas! he was fated for that journey from which none returns.

Victor Allen was a great soul. He was of a very rare type—humorous, unassuming and loving. His greatest creed in life was love. Love for men irrespective of creed, status, birth, age and all the material points that you and I call important in the choice of a friend. He was a friend of mine and many's the time that I have sat with him and listened to valuable advices and suggestions. He did not think himself too successful or too senior in age to befriend me. His Christ said "Love thy neighbour as thyself." I was his neighbour and so were many others and he obeyed the injunctions of the founder of the religion which he followed to the best of his ability up to the time of his death, and loved us. I think, but for the fact that some men would hate without reasons, it could be safely said that none who knew Victor Allen could nurse the slightest dislike for him. I repeat he was a rare, great soul.

And he was a Christian. He combined theoretical and practical Christianity. He learnt and lived Christianity and I was always proud of the fact that he was one of my late father's scholars.

Let us weep no more, rather let us rejoice in the thought that Victor has gone to join the holy ones that sing around the throne of God and presently we shall hear him sing "Peace on Earth, goodwill to all men." Let us take his life as an example and if we love him well enough let us emulate him.

He has shed his human garb. He knows no more sorrows, no more privations; no loss, and disappointments and if his life on earth is a true index to what he'l get in the Great Beyond I can visualise the radiance, the glory and the joy that are his even now. While we weep, he rejoices; while we are sad, he is happy; while we are listening to words of comfort he is being told "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy father."

Victor Ade Allen is dead. He breathes no more No more shall we hear his loving voice and the thrilling laughter so peculiar to him. His humour lies six feet below and and we shall all miss him, but our God is a loving God. His, Son, our Christ, has paid the penalty for sin and through Him we are assured of a Resurrection. This is a source of joy. We shall all meet again. Victor goes before and we shall follow. Let us so live our lives that we shall not depart unwept and unsung but rather that when our day comes we shall be missed by the crowd around us. Victor is missed! All Lagos cries,

"Sleep on beloved, sleep and take thy rest.
Lay down thy head upon thy Saviour's Breast.
We love thee well but Jesus loves thee best.
Good-bye! Good bye!! Good-bye!!!

DEC 14 1941

Victor was endearing and kind hearted too,
It ne'er was his taste to be wicked and blue;
Christ was his Redeemer and this was his aim,
To live as Christ did, not caring for fame.
Oh death! thou hast cut short the life of a man
Respected, beloved, admired, endeared.

Ah death! Thou hast struck quite a terrible blow
Like lightning thou takest dear Ade from us!
Let us not, dear ones, weep for this we must know
Eternal life is now his portion above
No more shall he suffer, in that Home of Love
"Good Bye", "Good-Bye", ' Good

Let it rain or let it shine, he would always be in his place for the morning and evening services at his church. Nothing could deter him from attending the Litany Services during the week but was that all?

DEC 14 1941

I have said Victor lived like a Christian. He had practical faith too and none could doubt his generous disposition. He lived the life of a Christian. He practised Christianity and if he had died leaving no relations there would have been a crowd of fellow-worshippers and loved ones to mourn his loss. He was not a Saint and had his faults but it cannot be doubted but that he was, to the best of his ability, a follower of Christ.

Many are those who mourn his loss and many more still miss him. With me, his death is a serious blow that sets me thinking. If he, so kind and loving, so gay and humorous, so true, so real can pass away without ceremony, what am I worth?

Two Fridays ago we were together at the Hall making merry and we were even so bold as to make plans for the Christmas. Today Victor breathes no more! Mother Earth has claimed him! Death which lays its icy hands on kings has touched Victor Allen and deprived him of his soul—that great, loving soul!

We weep, we wourn, we are sad but should we not remember that there was never a time limit fixed for anyone? We know we all must die some day. " In the midst of life, we are in death." Yes, if nothing else proves this, Victor's death does. He was ill for the brief space of two weeks and could have resumed his journey on this planet but it was otherwise ordained. Right in the middle of life and loved ones, death came in and claimed its own.

But we are professing Christians; we are believers in resurrection and should wipe our tear-stained eyes.

CHURCH GROUP ASK EQUALITY FOR AFRICANS

SEP 9 1942

ONE of the most significant Religious Conferences ever held in South Africa convened during the month of July. It was a conference on "Christian Reconstruction" held at South African Native College and attended by representatives of forty religious bodies. The gathering was preceded by several months of preparation with nearly 120 discussion groups in all parts of South Africa.

The predominantly white gathering of church leaders adopted strong resolutions demanding equality for Africans and requesting that natives be given increased responsibilities on town, city and provincial councils and Parliament. Asserting that the true interests of the white and black races in South Africa do not conflict, the conference declared it to be contrary to Christian principles for one race to hold another in permanent inferiority or discrimination. In addition, the conference called for a living wage, adequate housing and health services for all groups and educational facilities for all races.

A minister of the Dutch Reformed Church from Cape Town, is reported to have said that a Christian order for South Africa should share progressively its civilization with the "uncivilized." He further added that any form of government which denies full liberty of rights of common citizenship to any of its citizens, or which suppresses or disregards individuality, is un-Christian and not suitable to establish or promote a Christian order." To all of which we acclaim a loud "Amen!"

This statement coming from a representative of the Dutch Reformed Church is reported to have created a bombshell. Heretofore the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa has always been regarded as extremely conservative on social, political and racial problems. Such an outcome at this time is a very healthy sign of Christian progress and would be welcomed from the four corners of the earth wherever the "inferiority complex" has too long been in evidence, and that to a pronounced degree.

The Need For African Church

Professor D. D. Tengo Jabavu of Fort Hare has recently published a pamphlet in which he pleads for the establishment of an African indigenous church. He urges the leaders of the African churches to unite their religious forces in order to facilitate unity among African people. Professor Jabavu tells us that "in 1913 he made his first acquaintance with Negro religious life and organisation during a three months' visit to the United States and found that the structure of Negro advance rested on the rock of a self-ruling church. Ninety per cent of the Negroes belonged to one or the other of the big denominations: Baptist, Methodist and Zion, the leaders being Negroes. The Negro church fathered the national endeavours to the extent of offering special prayers for Negro commercial and educational leaders ...Their church was the hub around which all Negro life and business enterprise centred."

We have hundreds of African churches some of which are doing more harm than good to the spiritual life of our race. These churches are not financially strong to render any useful service to the African people. They are unable to carry on the work of evangelisation among the African people, the majority of whom are still groping in the darkness of Africa's primitive life. What we need as a people, is not a multiplicity of churches, but a united church, well organised, financially strong and capable of bringing about the transformation of our national life so as to fit us into the new life which Western civilization has created in Africa. "Such church," says Professor Jabavu, "efficiently organised, properly directed, and above all, correctly interpreting the spirit of Christ, would be the efforescence of European missionary enterprise in Africa."

All Africans who love their race and wish to see it taking its rightful place among the progressive races of mankind, will undoubtedly agree that a united African church would be a powerful agency for the advancement of the African people. It was the indigenous churches that revolutionised Europe and set it on the road to civilisation, and it will be an indigenous church that will do the same for Africa. It is true that missionary enterprise has played an important role in the evangelisation of Africans. "When the role of the church in African life is fully considered," says Professor Jabavu, "it will be realised that no single agency has so completely revolutionised African life as the church has done. It has produced more vital and progressive social groups. It remains the chief reintergrating factor amidst so many other forces that make for social disintergration and moral degeneration. For this reason a properly organised and effective African united church is not only theoretically desirable but is an urgent practical necessity."

While we are grateful for what the missionaries have done for Africa, yet we cannot be blind to the fact that as a people we need a church under the leadership of men of our own race, who share our customs, understand our character and sympathise with our aspirations. Christianity can only take permanent roots in our hearts when it is [illegible]nted by men whether Wh[illegible] or Black who do not regard us as members of an inferior race but as human beings, created in the image of God to occupy a nobler position than that of servitude in the affairs of progressive mankind.

Professor Jabavu has stated several reasons why African churches should unite. We do not propose to refer to all of them, but we shall mention the most important ones. He says: (a) The African churches should unite to emphasise their common African brotherhood and to enjoy a deeper and fuller Christian fellowship: (b) they should unite in order to enrich each other with those several aspects of truth for which the various denominations stand: (c) they should unite in order to improve their organisation of the church, to increase its resources, to eliminate wastage both spiritual and material, and to promote whatever will lead to the spiritual and moral rehabilitation of the African[illegible]d (d) they should unite that they may widen the scope of their usefulness, and that they may the better minister to the educational, health, and other social needs of their people."

These are important reasons and it is to be hoped that Professor Jabavu's appeal will not fall on deaf ears. It is abundantly clear that unless church unity is orders were placed with a dozen women. On the day on which the purchaser went out to collect them, the women were coming down from every street of the location with a half dozen baskets on their heads. The car came back to town with handles sticking out of every window, and a second lorry load had to follow.

Every letter and every gift have been acknowledged. When the Cavalcade is o[illegible] while a substantial sum will have been added to [illegible] Governor-General's National War Fund, to those of us who deal with the peculiar generosity of the African people the most valuable part of the work will still remain in the spirit which engendered the contribution and which has forged friendships of a shared experience between the loneliest kraals in the country and those who work for African well-being in this City.

Basuto Chiefs Up-North

During last week there arrived here Chiefs Gabashane Masupha, Khosimotse Ntaote, Nts'eke Jonathane and Kelebone Nkoebe who, together with some other Chiefs from Bechuanaland Protectorate and Swaziland had gone Up North during last month, on a tour of inspecting the African Auxiliary Pioneer Corps engaged in His Majesty's war service in the Middle East. It was a real flying tour considering a very short period in which it was completed. They left Basutoland on the 18th June last and arrived back on the 9th July having been away for only twenty-one days

The delegates speak very highly of the work of the Basuto troops in the Middle East which has been commended upon by the General Officer Commanding and other officers under whose command the troops are. It was impossible for the delegates, during the short period at their disposal, to visit every company but they were not only satisfied but pleased with their behaviour and the healthy condition in which they appeared. This was backed up by stories recounted by their officers of their exemplary behaviour during hostile visits of the enemy. Some of them we are informed have already had their fire baptism in which they proved themselves to be real descendents of the African warriors and their officers were proud to have had the honour to lead them. JUL 18 1942

The stories of the delegates are a confirmation of what has been learned from letters of appreciation from the General Officer Commanding Middle East and from others received from some numbers of the Corps which have been published from time to time in the Basutoland Press. So highly impressed were some of the chiefs that they seemed to envy those who were fortunate to be ordered by the Paramount Chief to lead the troops. The Basuto have long earned for themselves the reputation of hard workers in unskilled labour on the mines but Up-North they have been discovered to be handy in all departments of war service, even in those in which intelligence and skill are required. Were it not for the fact that they have already been commended upon by responsible authorities one would fear that the delegates were indulging in a little flattery of our troops. The country has reason to be proud of its boys and the signal services they are rendering in the great struggle for the liberation of the enslaved masses. At one time in the past a correspondent of "The Friend" pleaded, in its columns, for the Africans to be paid a higher remuneration to enable them to provide for their dependents at home so that they should, when they were away from their homes, have less worry about them and devote their attention to war work. Nobody will deny that our boys are worrying about their dependents, and considering the good work they are doing the authorities have reason to consider seriously the matter of giving them satisfaction in the matter of remuneration. They are offering what money cannot buy—their blood, and should like others be relieved from financial worries. We are hoping that the authorities will not close their eyes against these glaring facts, especially when it has to be considered that efficiency is one of the factors that will play a great part in winning this war.

Goodwill Week

"In South Africa it is very necessary to create a spirit of goodwill between the different races and the different colours. We shall have to realise that we are not only South Africans, but that, we are part of the great African continent; we are the most civilised part of the continent; let us carry on its traditions. Let the spirit of goodwill and tolerance be the corner-stone on which we build up a united Nation."

The above striking statement was made by the Administrator of the Cape Province, captain F. A. Joubert, in his goodwill message to European schools in the Cape this week. It is a message of cheer to those of us who are working hard for the creation of a spirit which will enable the people of South Africa, both White and Black, to realise that in racialism, hatred and prejudice there is no security and safety for any of our racial groups. We cannot escape starvation and poverty by subjecting other sections of our population to economic conditions which do not allow them to improve their standard of living. We cannot escape the Nemisis of retribution if we keep members of other races as hewers of wood and drawers of water. Man, whether White, Black or Yellow, was created in the image of God not to be a servant of his fellowmen but to be their co-worker in the development of life and the world. The idea that the African's role in the drama of South Africa's progress is that of serving the Whites as masters is erroneous and misleading. It is, a fallacy that is largely responsible for a great deal of misunderstanding, suspicion, and distrust between the races. The African, in God's scheme of things, has a more important part to play than that of a mere beast of burden. He has his latent talents, and gifts to contribute to the "gathering achievement of the human race."

It is gratifying to find that the best minds and hearts in this country are seeking to harmonise our interracial relations by creating an atmosphere of mutual understanding and friendliness. The promoters of the goodwill movement are laying the foundations of a structure of interracial harmony which after the war will enable South Africa to play the leading role in the civilisation and development of the African continent. "We are not only South Africans," says Captain Joubert, "we are part of the great continent." The rest of the population of Africa, which has not had the blessings of civilisation as ourselves, look to us for guidance and assistance. And it goes without saying that if we are divided and are hostile to one another, we shall not be in a position to give the lead required of this country. The golden opportunity of fortifying South Africa's prestige in the new Africa after the war is now. The 2,000,000 Europeans must be taught now that 8,000,000 Africans are not a menace but an essential part of our national life, willing to work together with them for the peaceful development of this country's industries and commerce. The White man should learn to look upon the black man as a partner in the great work of civilising Africa, and not regard him as a danger to civilisation. South Africa through the co-operative achievement of the White man's brains, and the Black man's brawn has become the Mecca of Africa's civilisation. To enhance her prestige, therefore, the relations between White and Black should be harmonised and humanised. The two races, should learn to trust each other and face the stern realities of our interracial situation. For good or ill both are destined to live together in Africa and whether we like it or not their political destiny is one and their economic interests are inseparably interwoven.

But fear which has been fastened upon the minds of politicians is robbing this country of golden opportunities and great possibilities of a splendid chance to play the leading role in the civilisation of the African continent. That what South Africa needs, above all, are statesmen who are capable of shaking off the fear-complex and willing to teach the two races to live together in friendliness in the unchallengeable belief that they need each other. Thank God in Field Marshal Smuts to-day South Africa has such a statesman. Speaking the other day to our troops both European and Non-European he said, he was pleased to see the good feeling that existed between European and Non-Europeans in the field.

"I am sure we are at present laying the foundations of something big. I want you to be proud of that, and to develop an outlook of a nation on the march," the outlook of the people which is still on the great trek, not the outlook of a people which has come down to ease and comfort. I thank my fellow South Africans of both races for their contribution here. It has been magnificent."

Hitler Will Wipe Out Negroes If He Wins, Africans Warn

If Hitler commits such outrageous atrocities against the white people of the occupied countries, he will treat the Africans even worse, declared an editorial in the West African Pilot, a publication managed entirely by Africans.

Full ext of the editorial follows:

Several times, we have published reports from Allied and neutral sources of alleged atrocities both inside Germany itself and in the German occupied countries—atrocities the like of which "no eye hath seen, no ears have heard" in the long history of mankind.

In a recent issue, we published yet another report describing the merciless way the Germans had razed to the ground, by fire, the entire Bohemian town of Lidice. The report showed further how all the male inhabitants of this unfortunate town were shot and the women and children sent to concentration camps.

We hereby express our deepest sympathy with the relatives of these martyrs who have thus laid down their precious lives for their country and the Allied cause. Nigeria, we hope, will take a lesson from this. If the German could treat their own color, as alleged, how much more will they treat the Africans, who, in Hitler's own words, is nothing but an ape.

This should be a lesson to all those who feel they should in any way impede our general war effort. This latest German act of atrocity should spur all of us on to greater energy.

Churchmen Protest British Plans

Dutch Reformed Church Leaders Protest British Plans for Greater Use of Empire Manpower.

By Our Foreign Correspondent

LONDON, Aug. 27. (Censored) While in Britain new conceptions of Empire are being discussed, and responsible ministers and the Times editorials talk of the "partnership" which is to grow up between Britain and the Colonial peoples; a commission of the Dutch Reformed church in South Africa has passed a resolution of protest against the proposed arming of non-Europeans if the Union is attacked by Japan, says Empire, issued by the London Fabian Society. The resolution says:

"The principle of arming non-Europeans is contrary to the constitution and principles of the Word of God, which is based on racial separateness and the principles of trusteeship on the part of Europeans against non-Europeans.

"The arming of non-Europeans would be contrary to the best traditions of the Afrikaner people. The policy of Christian governments in the Union, when involved in war, has always been to use the services of natives and colored races in subordinate and menial capacities.

"This whole church admits that it is the duty of every Christian citizen to arm himself in defense of his country should there be unmistakable signs of threatened danger, but warns the government against the proposal to arm non-Europeans.

"The unhappy results of the governments' announcement are already to be discerned in the disrespectful attitude of natives toward Europeans and European women.

"The church urgently asks the government not to give any native or colored person control over firearms or of light or heavy artillery, and to make an early statement in this connection.

"The government should see that non-Europeans will be used only in subordinate and menial capacities."

The resolution was adopted by the leaders of the Reformed church, the largest religious body in South Africa, at a special conference called to discuss General Smut's announcement in the South African Parliament that, in the event of a Japanese invasion of Africa, the government would be compelled to take the risk of arming Africans and other non-white races against the invaders.

At present, natives and other colored peoples in the Union recruited into the armed forces are used as labor battalions, transport drivers and in the ambulance service. They are not allowed to bear arms and are under the command of European commissioned and non-commissioned officers.

Thousands of natives are already serving with the South African divisions in Egypt and the Middle East as part of the British Imperial Ninth Army, under General Sir Maitland Wilson.

Cooperation Between Races Disappointing

BY GEORGE PADMORE
Foreign Correspondent

AUG 29 1942

LONDON, Aug. 27. (Censored)—Field Marshal Smuts, Prime Minister of South Africa and one of the leading advocates of racial segregation between white and black, has now publicly admitted that the policy has failed to keep the two races apart and that the future of the world depends upon inter-racial co-operation, especially in Asia and Africa.

Speaking before the South African Institute for Race Relations in Capetown, Smuts admitted that "the high expectations white people in Africa entertained of that policy has been sadly disappointed," and pleaded instead for a new "spirit of helpful co-operation between white and colored races, on the basis of a full acceptance by the colored of immediate responsibilities of white trusteeship. The South African leader observed that "trusteeship" was a "beautiful word;" but that the right way of translating that word into race relations "in practice" had so far not been found.

The Field Marshal warned the people of South Africa that he was making no official declaration of policy on behalf of the government, and only spoke as a "student trying to explore the great problems."

Significantly, however, the South African Minister of Native Affairs, Colonel Denys Reitz, has announced the letting-up on the Pass Laws in certain parts of the Cape Province, especially among the more advanced sections of the urban colored population.

AFRICANS CARRY TWELVE PASSES

In South Africa where the colored outnumber the whites by seven to one, all Africans had to carry special passes which restricted the movements from place to place and enabled the police to keep strict surveillance over them.

Before being eligible to travel, a native must provide himself with what is known as a Trek Pass. This pass gives the holder the right to leave his reserve and visit town. Outside the native ghettos in cities like Johannesburg, police control is facilitated by the Identification Pass. This pass is obligatory for all Africans who live in urban areas, and for which they pay 2 shillings monthly. To secure a railway ticket a Travelling Pass must be produced at the railway station before the ticket-seller will give a ticket. Obligatory also for all natives is the Monthly Pass, which is a contract of service with some white employer.

Coming from the country to town to seek work, an African must first obtain what is called a "Special Pass", which is issued by the police of the town entered. It is good for six days. Failure to secure a job within the six days allotted, makes the native liable to arrest and imprisonment for vagrancy.

CHURCH OPPOSES ARMING NATIVES

After nine o'clock at night, curfew reigns for Africans. Those who want to go out of their district after that hour must get a pass from the police of location superintendent. This pass is called the "Night Special". Employers are allowed to issue this pass to colored domestic servants.

Colored intellectuals such as teachers and preachers, those natives working in clerical jobs, are granted a special pass called the "Native Exemption". Although it is supposed to exampt the bearer, it must be produced whenever demanded by the police.

General Smuts has also promised to arm the natives, but the Dutch Reformed church leaders have passed a resolution opposing on the ground that it is against the "constitution and principles of the Word of God" to arm natives.

Haile Selassie's Daughter Dies at Age of 22 Years

AUG 28 1942

LONDON. — (ANP)—Reports received here told of the death of Princess Tsahai, younger daughter of Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia. The princess died at Lekempti, in her native land, last Monday. She was 22 years old

Princess Tsabai recently completed studies in medicine and nursing at London hospitals and had returned to Ethiopia to organize hospital and medical services there.

Less than four months ago the princess married Col. Abiy Abbaba, who with other members of the royal family, survive her.

Princess Tsahai (which means "The Sun" in Amharic) was very close to her father and shared many of his experiences. She was with him when the Italians invaded the country; she escaped with him into exile after the conquests; and lived at his London residence before Italy entered the war.

After the Italians had been turned back and Haile Selassie re-occupied his throne, Princess Tsahai remained in London. She however followed soon afterward in company with their regal mother, the Empress Quizzero Menen.

Princess Tsahai possessed a rare beauty and was offered contracts from film producers when only 17. She refused them all, stating that she did not think it dignified for even exiled royalty to appear in pictures.

"I want to lead the life of a normal girl," she said. "I have no particular pretensions, but I must maintain the dignity which father has impressed upon all his children.

The princess was prominently associated in welfare work in Ethiopia. At the early age of 14, she headed the Ethiopian Red Cross and the Ethiopian Women's Work association. Later, she was a volunteer worker in the first aid ambulance unit of the Ethiopian army.

American radio audiences were familiar with the quiet, cultured voice of the youthful princess, for she spoke many times on international radio broadcasts and appeared in newsreels with the royal family.

Why Hasn't Abyssinia Been Asked To Sign United Nations' Pact?

SEP 12 1942

Members of British Parliament Pose This Question To Anthony Eden—Here's His Reply!

Our London Correspondent

LONDON, (Censored), Sept. 10—Objecting to the policy of secret diplomacy, radical members of Parliament raised the question of Abyssinia's status in the United Nations Alliance, in the House of Commons debate on foreign policy.

Opening the discussion, William Brown, M. P. called upon Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden to explain by whom invitations to sign the United Nations pact were issued to the exile governments of Holland, Belgium and other European states; by whom a similar invitation was issued to the governments of Mexico, Haiti and other belligerents; on what date an invitation to sign the pact was issued to the Emperor of Ethiopia; and if all the nations whose representatives signed this pact were now members of the United Nations Alliance.

MR. EDEN TRIES TO EXPLAIN QUESTIONS

The suave, dapper head of the British Foreign Office, replied that invitations to the original signatories of the United Nations Declaration, including Holland, Belgium and Haiti, were issued by President Roosevelt in consultation with Prime Minister Churchill who was then in Washington, and with the Chinese and Soviet governments.

Mr, Eden then proceeded to explain that provision was made in the Declaration for subsequent adherents, and, following their declaration of war on the Axis powers, the Mexican government adhered. As he, Mr. Eden, had suggested to Mr. Mander, liberal M. P. on February 26, last, the Declaration was, of course, open to adherence by Ethiopia, but he had not yet heard that the Emperor had approached President Roosevelt in this connection.

In regard to the last part of Mr. Brown's searching question, the Foreign Minister said, the United Nations were those who had signed the United Nations' Declaration.

SOME INVITED, BUT ABYSSINIA MUST APPLY

When Mr. Eden resumed his seat, left wing Laborite Ben Riey, M. P. asked the Foreign Secretary why there had been no request by Ethiopia to adhere to the Declaration. To which Eden replied: "I think the position is that the Emperor knows that an invitation by him can be made, and he also knows, I feel sure, that we would support it if it were made, but obviously, the initiative must come from him."

Then, Mr. Emmanuel Shinwell, rebel Socialist M. P., remarked: "Does this mean that Ethiopia is a neutral?"

To which query Eden replied: "No. This is a question of adhering to the Declaration. All the Allies have adhered to it."

"Am I to understand that an invitation was issued to other countries, but that Ethiopia must apply," asked Laborite, Ivor Thomas, M. P.

"Mr. Thomas' statement is not quite right," Eden asserted, and then went on to explain the policy of the British Foreign Office. He said that the governments which adhered originally were invited to do so, but since then Mexico has applied, and Ethiopia, as a result of her treaty with His Majesty's Government, is in a position to apply. Should Haile Selassie apply to join the United Nations, as he did to the League of Nations, Abyssinia's application will be considered.

Compulsory Native Labour

Rhodesian Plan for Government Squads

Southern Rhodesia is to call up Native labour for essential war work on a plan different in fundamentals from that already in force in Kenya and Northern Rhodesia.

In those territories the scheme is worked by means of a pool, from which approved agricultural and other specified employers requiring such labour for essential war purposes secure it as individuals through the District Commissioners and other authorities.

Under the Southern Rhodesian proposal Natives between the ages of 19 and 45 will be liable to be called up, but they will be in the service of the Government, working in squads under supervisors, and not subject to the orders of private individuals. Those called up will have a right of appeal. The pay of supervisors and Natives, and the cost of feeding and housing the Africans, will be provided by Parliament. They will be paid the current rates for the class of work done.

Conscription of Native Labour.

UNDER THE HEADING "From Him That Hath Not" The New Statesman and Nation has written in an editorial note: "Kenya politicians, as the Colonial Office well knows, can no more refrain from taking advantage of the Native than a cat can keep out of a cream jug. In any case, a Colonial Government which brings in forced labour instead of raising Native wages as a means of obtaining man-power is doubtfully fit to rule an African country.' As will be obvious to our readers, the first sentence of this quotation is intended as comment upon the recent constitution in Kenya of a Civil Defence and Supply Council, which is described as "in effect a Kenya Cabinet, with apparently, six non-official and five official members," while the second sentence relates to the recent decision of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to take a war-time step in regard to Native labour upon the unanimous advice of a local committee. That body included Archdeacon Owen of Kavirondo, who in peace and war has steadily, persistently and fearlessly championed the cause of the African. After thorough investigation the committee expressed the view that, in present abnormal circumstances, the time had come when Africans must be subjected to a measure of conscription in respect of labour essential to the prosecution of Kenya's war effort. With that opinion Archdeacon Owen concurred. That fact alone might have been expected to weigh heavily with a publication which has often quoted him in support of its own policies. Not a bit of it! When the archdeacon, recognising that the logic of events left him no alternative, endorsed the unanimous conclusion of his colleagues, the fact that he was a member of the committee is merely ignored.

Chinese Riot When Drinks Are Refused

Infuriated because they were refused drinks at two bars in Capetown, South Africa, 23 Chinese seamen from two ships in the docks wrecked the European bar of the Grand Hotel. Sailors and men in the bar offered to buy them drinks, but the law against treating stood in the way. The Chinese grabbed bottles and smashed mirrors and fittings, and finally a big plate glass window was shattered and splintered on the floor. Sailors, yelling, "they're our allies," joined in the demolition. Much of the stock was destroyed and the cash register was battered. Police rounded up the Chinese only one of whom could speak English; to him the law was explained. Later all were released. The masters of the ships paid $400 damages to the hotel.

Arming Of Africans

Sir,

We read in the Press and hear in Parliament comments about the pro and cons of arming Africans in this present conflict. Being an African myself and hearing how matters are hoisted, misrepresented and distorted I wish to aim my views on the matter.

I for one have an old grandfather who took part in the Anglo-Boer war and all the other skirmishes that took place to subjugate the Vendas of the Zoutpansberg, the Pedis of Modjadj and the Bagananse of Blauwberg. He is eighty four today but still recollects all the wars he took a part in, not as a non-combatant as the Herenigde Pirow and Afrikander Parties would have believe us today, but as a full blooded combatant.

These three groups profess to be following the foot steps of the great voortrekkers but there is a case in view of my grandfather who substantiates my views. He was under Veldkornet Tom Kelly of the Zoutpansberg, who in turn was under the great Boer Leader General Piet Joubert. He still remembers when he brought booty in the form of fat sheep from Modiadji to Ou Noi Joubert from Veldkornet Tom Kelly, better known in the Zoutpansberg as Muvamba.

This goes to show the hollowness of the Herenigde, Pirow and Afrikander Parties that the Voortrekker never armed Africans.

Having repudiated those allegations I come now to the views expressed time and again by the Head of this State The Right Honourable Field Marshal J. C. Smuts, P.C.K.C. on this matter. While partly agreeing with him, that the time has not yet come to arm Africans: I should humbly like to point out these facts: (1) prevention is better than cure; (2) An empty stomach knows no law; (3) Forewarned is forearmed; (4) "A State cannot remain half slave and half free;' (5) Puff Adder is the gentiest of snakes as long as nobody provokes it, but the most vile viper when once one throws earth on it; (6) In the words of the Prime Minister himself; "This is an all-in conflict" I take it not for the two and half millions whites as the population of the Union is always mis represented, but, an all in war for the all the eleven million souls in South Africa.

The opposition Parties to the Government say it is not good to arm Africans because they would rebel. Let me say to these misguided people that the Africans have none of that spirit of Rebellion. They extolled and exhalted their chiefs who were more or less tyrants to them. What I say is that the opposition Parties know their wrongs towards Africans. Without a guilty concience they would never think of rebellion among Africans They know how they repressed and manhandled the Africans. They think the Africans will do what they always threaten the other members of Parliament with: what measures they are going to treat these when once they are in power. Let me assure them that the African wants nothing of those bogeys of Social Equality etc. What they want is equal opportunities for equal talents irrespective of colour, creed, class or belief.

In answer to the Prime minister's views I would humbly say this. arming Africans on the Eleventh hour would nearly be more or less murder to the poor Africans who would be half-baked, half-heated fighting with the thought that the White man only calls them to clear the mess he has made. In other words to pull his chestnuts out of the fire for him, and as a result their morale would the worst imaginable and a good incubator for quislings and fifth columnists of whom we hear so much: It must be borne in mind that what wins wars is the morale of the population once the morale is shaky, unsettled suspicious, then, it becomes utterly plum pudding for fifth Columnists.

In conclusion. I would say: Let us go into this conflict instilled with one thought to preserve our fatherland and our rights all eleven millions equal opportunities for equal talents, and march forward together having in mind the Great Atlantic Charter framed by those two great heads and also this maxim: United we stand divided we fall and what a fall it can be to all of us.

WEST AFRICAN MARKET NOTES

Conscription of African Workers

By the Commercial Editor

JUN 27 1942

INTEREST in West African produce has been shown recently by several moves. In the case of cocoa, it was stated in these columns, a short time ago, that the Government marketing plan for cocoa was to be the subject of energetic protests by the trade. On behalf of the Government, it was said that a swifter movement of supplies from quayside was needed, but the trade contend that in the first place the present delay is due to Government interference and that further Government control, far from removing current delays, will increase them. To ease the situation, the trade claims that less Government "dead hand" is wanted for the trade was able to cope with the needs of the whole of Europe before the war and built up an immense and efficient organization, in order to do so.

With this in mind, there was held at the House of Commons a meeting of Liverpool and London M.P.'s who received a deputation from the Liverpool and London Chambers of Commerce. Sir John Shute called the meeting and Sir George Broadbridge presided. As a result, the meeting decided to ask the Minister of Food to receive a deputation from both chambers. The Minister had previously refused to meet any deputation, so the outcome of the present step will be watched with interest.

Diamond supplies, meaning thereby industrial stones, have been much in the news recently; and control was introduced because of an alleged holding up of supplies of industrial stones through the more attractive price and better paid craftsmanship, in the case of gem stones.

Sir Ernest Oppenheimer has flatly denied that any shortage was ever experienced. It will be recalled that when control was established, he welcomed it for he assured the trade that cooperation with the authorities was in the best interests of both parties and that there were industrial stones in abundance. He has re-emphasized this point and insisted that there were adequate stocks in the Congo for all industrial purposes and that the supply could be expanded in a short time to meet any known demands.

It seems that the consumption of industrial stones in the U.S.A. is now nearly five million carats or one ton per annum. Reports had been circulating there that prices had gone up by 30 per cent. This, however, is false, as diamonds for industrial purposes are at their pre-war level. The syndicate decided long ago that war industries costs should not be advanced through any rise in the price of industrial stones and it has kept to its decision. The fault must be looked for elsewhere.

We can therefore now turn our attention to tin. There seems to have been a little bother over the conscription of labour for the tin mines of Nigeria. The matter was raised in the Commons and it seems to have been surmised that that part of the Empire was being unfairly treated by the authorities.

Members seem to have forgotten that there is a war on and that tin mining companies are under Government control. Tin is essential to the prosecution of the war, and workers are being conscripted all over the Empire, not excepting Britain, so why all this fuss? The care of the African workers has always been a major point of the Nigerian tin mining companies—a point some M.P.'s seem to overlook. The companies are taxed unreasonably but these same M.P.'s do not think of raising any protest on that account.

Rather, they appear to think that there is some sort of devil's bargain between the companies and the Government, in which the interests of the workers are alleged to be ruthlessly brushed aside. They are not, as an inquiry into the facts will demonstrate. One Member alleged that the Labour Convention was violated only to be told that he had apparently not read the terms of that Convention. Mr. Macmillan's rejoinders are at least eloquent of his determination not to have the companies blamed by inference in these ill-timed questions. Such questions are a disservice to the State.

Hitler Even Worse Than The Black Napoleon Of Scuth Africa

(By Capt. Mrs. E. G. Malherbe)

JUN 27 1942

There are people who think that Dictator Hitler, with his wish to rule supreme over his own people and his desire to dominate the world, is something new in the history of the world.

This i[illegible] so. Ever since the world began such men have risen from time to time to bring war and destrution whereever they went.

The Bantu people of South Africa also had such a ruthless dictator. He was Chaka the Zulu King whose reign of terror held the Bantu of South Africa in its grip during the early part of the 19th century.

Like Hitler, Chaka believed his own special tribe to be superior to all other Bantu tribes, and therefore destined to rule supreme.

With this purpose in mind he set about bringing all the neighbouring tribes under his rule. Those who resisted were mercilessly exterminated.

But his territorial aims did not end here and scoured the whole countryside from the Eastern Province in the South to the Transvaal in the North.

We have heard how Hitler, in his mad lust to avenge the death of his Gestapo leader Heydrich, killed all the men in a certain Czech village and took the women and children captive.

This was just the sort of thing that Chaka liked to do too.

Hitler's plan with Poland might also have been copied from Chaka. He considers the Poles an inferior race, fit only to be the slaves of the superior German people.

He has accordingly adopted the plan of killing off as many of the educated and better class Poles as possible. In this way the people are robbed of possible leaders and can more readily be trained as German slaves.

Chaka also used to kill off the fighting men of a conquered tribe and keep the others alive as hewers of wood and carriers of water.

Another plan that Chaka had to make the Zulu race strong was to kill off all weaklings and mental defectives as soon as they were born. Hitler is trying to carry out the same policy in Germany today, and has even ordered grown-up mental defectives to be killed.

A hundred years ago the white people helped the black people of South Africa to put a stop to the reign of terror by defeating Chaka's imitators Dingaan and Umsilikaas. After that the Bantu tribes could live in peace.

Today the Bantu people of South Africa are helping the white men to defeat the biggest tyrant the world has ever known—Hitler the tyrant who is even worse than Chaka as he is out to conquer and subject to slavery not only those peoples surrounding Germany and living in Europe, but also the nations abroad. The Bantu people, remembering also how cruelly the Germans treated the Hereros in South West Africa, support the South African Government to safeguard themselves and in order that the generations to come, white and black, may live in peace.

Free India

JUN 27 1942

At a critical time for India and the British Empire, both India and Great Britain failed to come to a solution of their three-hundred-year old problem.

This is most unfortunate for the allied nations. A free and willing India would have been a good check to Japanese hordes from Burma, whilst providing much-needed economic help deprived us by what allied nations have lost in the Pacific.

India has been accused of an uncompromising attitude. We do not think such a patronising approach, even from the best of friends, helps to make India see better reason. At this critical moment, it would be idle to say India is less appreciative of the dangers threatening her than some of her friends. She, even more than Great Britain, is well aware of what Japanese domination would mean for her. It would mean, among other things, that she would start again from the bottom and carry on another ceaseless struggle against a new enemy of her independence. Oppressed races do not relish such a game, even though they enter it with the zeal and determination that all freedom-loving people have. We shall, therefore, do our cause little good if we take events in the East as the only background which to understand India's attitude.

Further, India has been blamed for failing to unite in the face of grave danger. This is a criticism not without some foundation, but it is not fair in every re-spect. Complete unanimity could not have been expected. Our own South Africa has played an important role in the war in spite of the very deep rifts in her political and communal life.

On the other hand, the unanimous rejection of Britain's proposals and India's dislike for Japanese Bushido, vouched for by Sir Stafford Cripps himself, indicate India's ability to unite in the hour of crisis.

Britain made a reasonable attempt at meeting India halfway and if past experience makes India cautious, Britain surely has not exhausted her brainpower to be unable to devise a new formula acceptable to India. We need India's wholehearted cooperation in this war and her loss would be a grievous blow to the allied nations. A free India will be a tower of strength against the desecrators of humanity from Nippon whilst standing as a glowing justification to all freedom-loving people of our fight for the liberation of oppressed communities and enabling nations to determine their own destiny.

COAST PROGRESSIVES' OPPORTUNITY

The Trenchard Reforms Mean Change, Not Violent or Costly

By Ernest Lansdowne

LAST week, in first comments on Lord Trenchard's proposals, the suggestion was made that far-reaching changes, within the compass of this famous Englishman's advice to the Governments, can be made without violent upset, heavy expenditure, or additional calls upon men of war-serving age—indispensable accompaniments of changes brought about now. If it be asked: "Now, while war is on?", turn to Lord Trenchard's speech. He urges action now; and one would not, on his record, call him a man who says less or more than he means.

Perhaps most of us British people who know something of British West Africa, and wish to see it in time one of the equal States of the Commonwealth, have our pet projects of reform. Of two of my own, one, the re-organization of the Local African Administrations, is really part of the other, the replacement of the Government-controlled municipal bodies by genuine town councils; and it might be difficult to say which would appeal more strongly to the feelings of the African communities.

The welcome news that Sir George Gater is now free to tackle the Colonial Office work which he agreed to take up after his distinguished work for the London County Council, will arouse the hope that the municipal question will before long have practical attention. On the technical side, it will be masterly. One ventures to hope that the other side, the more human—the spectacular, if you will—may have consideration.

Human Factor Ignored

It has always been a mystery to me that it has been ignored. Life in almost all West Africa, during almost all the time, is a drab business for about 99 per cent. of the people, whatever their position or race. At one point, it used to be a little less drab, for Freetown, the Sierra Leone capital, had its mayor and corporation on the English model, and when some distinguished visitor came or some other great occasion arose, it was impressive to see the mayor and his councillors turn out in official attire and do the civic honours.

A few months ago, the British official who acts as Information Officer, expressed a little mild censure, or regret, at the apparent slightness of interest of the Freetown citizens in the Forces now there, to judge by public manifestations. It did not seem to have dawned on him that the people lacked a civic organization enabling them to express the communal enthusiasm and admiration which are undoubtedly there. Years ago the city had such a popular body, and how it would have been to the fore to-day! Its head, the then mayor, was accused of misappropriation of municipal property to the value of a £10 note or so, and was sent to prison. Long since dead, he is beyond defence or accusation now. The case was made, by the local Government, the subject of an inquiry and the municipal institution was ended, in favour of a system in which one of the European officials rules the body which usurps the title of town council.

It is to be hoped that Sir George Gater will study the report on that inquiry, with special reference (as they have a way of saying in West Africa) to how far it affects not only the Freetown community to-day, but also all the other towns in British West Africa of sufficient importance to require a town council. All are under the system of Government control. Sir George Gater may think it worth while to call for the records of the officials, to show what municipal qualifications and experience they possess.

Consider this position: A well-known African lawyer is a Judge at the Gold Coast. He has presided over the West African Court of Appeal. He is presiding over a committee concerned with defence questions. If (a hypothetical case, of course) an administrative official from Britain were charged with murder, this Judge could try him for his life. If he were party to a will suit affecting his entire fortune, the Judge could decide it. But if on leaving the Bench the Judge returned to his home-town and wished to enter municipal life, he could not become mayor. Another European administrative official, nominated, not elected, would fill such equivalent to the post as there is. One does not know what Lord Trenchard would think of this. To me, it is a farcical position!

Find Out The Number!

But, it may be said: "Hard cases make bad laws. Should an entire system be changed to suit one competent man?" Of course not. The thing is to find out how many more such cases there are. To judge from the number of Africans appointed to stipendiary magisterial rank lately from the numerous successful advocates, solicitors, accountants, doctors, teachers and business-men, the total is not inconsiderable. None can be mayoral head of the local town council, because there is no mayoralty and no town council. Such men often decline to serve under an official from overseas who knows less about the circumstances than they know.

"But is there not," it may be asked, "a great deal to be said for sending to West Africa to serve the municipalities men and women with expert municipal training." Yes, decidedly, but to serve, not to master, and to have in every case as assistant and destined successor one of the fitly-trained African young men or women. In any case, the public, more decorative side, the mayoralty and so forth, should be for the non-official community—European included, of course, which is what Africans mean when they ask that the municipalities should be in "African" hands.

Emperor Haile Selassie's Daughter Marries Colonel

LONDON, July 9. (Censored)—Haile Selassie made a first class democratic move to strenghten the ties between the Royal Family of Ethiopia and the common people by giving his daughter, Princess Tsahai, in marriage to a young Abyssinian officer, Colonel Abiy Ababa. The celebration took place at Addis Ababa.

Col. Abiy Ababa is a member of a distinguished family of Shoa Province. Before Mussolini invaded Abyssinia, he was one of the young officers trained by the Swedish Military Mission for the Emperor's Imperial Guard.

After Haile Selassie left Addis Ababa to invoke aid from the so-called democratic statesmen at Geneva, who at that time were secretly in league with the Italian dictator, Abiy Ababa fought under Dedjazmatch Aberra Kassa until 1938, when Aberra Kassa and his brothers were murdered by the Italian Fascists. Abiy Ababa then escaped from Abyssinia and joined the Emperor in England.

He fell in love with the Princess Tsahai, who was an exile in Britain along with her parents. During her stay here she studied nursing at the famous Great Ormond Street Children's hospital.

When Mussolini declared war on England and the British government allowed Haile Selassie to return to Africa, young Abiy Ababa accompanied the Emperor and helped to organize the Abyssinian patriot army. He fought with this army into Addis Ababa.

In appreciation of his services, the Emperor has appointed his son-in-law governor of the province of Lekemti and Kellem.

LONDON (BM).—Replying to a question concerning the well-known West African labour and socialist leader, Mr I. T. A. Wallace-Johnson who had been in an internment camp in Sierra Leone since the beginning of the war, the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Harold Macmillan, told Parliament that Mr Johnson has been sent into exile.

West Africa.

He was formerly the General Secretary of the International African Service Bureau, an African political organisation with headquarters in this city.

As soon as war was declared in 1939, the then Governor of Sierra Leone, Sir Douglas Jardine, to which colony the labour leader had returned in 1938, ordered the arrest and imprisonment of the labour leader under the Defence Regulations which give every British Colonial Governor power to hold any Native in prison without trial if he believes him dangerous to the security of the Empire.

Mr Johnson was suffering from malaria in prison and his friends in Parliament alarmed about his health, appealed to the Colonial Office to allow him free medical treatment outside the prison.

After reviewing the case, the new Governor of Sierra Leone, has sent a report to Downing Street informing the Secretary of State for the Colonies that Mr Johnson has been removed from the internment camp in Freetown, capital of Sierra Leone, and exiled to the island of Sherbro, off the mainland.

There he will be allowed medical treatment in the hospital and freedom to move about within certain prescribed areas.

Another European administrative official, nominated, not elected, would fill such equivalent to the post as there is. One does not know what Lord Trenchard would think of this. To me, it is a farcical position !

Find Out The Number !

But, it may be said : " Hard cases make bad laws. Should an entire system be changed to suit one competent man ? " Of course not. The thing is to find out how many more such cases there are. To judge from the number of Africans appointed to stipendiary magisterial rank lately from the numerous successful advocates, solicitors, accountants, doctors, teachers and business-men, the total is not inconsiderable. None can be mayoral head of the local town council, because there is no mayoralty and no town council. Such men often decline to serve under an official from overseas who knows less about the circumstances than they know.

" But is there not," it may be asked, " a great deal to be said for sending to West Africa to serve the municipalities men and women with expert municipal training." Yes, decidedly, but to serve, not to master, and to have in every case as assistant and destined successor one of the fitly-trained African young men or women. In any case, the public, more decorative side, the mayoralty and so forth, should be for the non-official community—European included, of course, which is what Africans mean when they ask that the municipalities should be in " African " hands.

Emperor Haile Selassie's Daughter Marries Colonel

LONDON, July 9. (Censored)—Haile Selassie made a first class democratic move to strenghten the ties between the Royal Family of Ethiopia and the common people by giving his daughter, Princess Tsahai, in marriage to a young Abyssinian officer, Colonel Abiy Ababa. The celebration took place at Addis Ababa.

Col. Abiy Ababa is a member of a distinguished family of Shoa Province. Before Mussolini invaded Abyssinia, he was one of the young officers trained by the Swedish Military Mission for the Emperor's Imperial Guard.

After Haile Selassie left Addis Ababa to invoke aid from the so-called democratic statesmen at Geneva, who at that time were secretly in league with the Italian dictator, Abiy Ababa fought under Dedjazmatch Aberra Kassa until 1938, when Aberra Kassa and his brothers were murdered by the Italian Fascists. Abiy Ababa then escaped from Abyssinia and joined the Emperor in England.

He fell in love with the Princess Tsahai, who was an exile in Britain along with her parents. During her stay here she studied nursing at the famous Great Ormond Street Children's hospital.

When Mussolini declared war on England and the British government allowed Haile Selassie to return to Africa, young Abiy Ababa accompanied the Emperor and helped to organize the Abyssinian patriot army. He fought with this army into Addis Ababa.

In appreciation of his services, the Emperor has appointed his son-in-law governor of the province of Lekemti and Kellem.

Mr I. T. A. Wallace-Johnson Has Been Exiled To Sherbro Island

"West African Pilot" Lagos, West Africa

LONDON (BM).—Replying to a question concerning the well-known West African labour and socialist leader, Mr I. T. A. Wallace-Johnson, who had been in an internment camp in Sierra Leone since the beginning of the war, the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Harold Macmillan, told Parliament that Mr Johnson has been sent into exile.

Mr Wallace Johnson was the first Negro to organise trade unions among the Native miners and dock workers in West Africa.

He was formerly the General Secretary of the International African Service Bureau, an African political organisation with headquarters in this city.

As soon as war was declared in 1939, the then Governor of Sierra Leone, Sir Douglas Jardine, to which colony the labour leader had returned in 1938, ordered the arrest and imprisonment of the labour leader under the Defence Regulations which give every British Colonial Governor power to hold any Native in prison without trial, if he believes him dangerous to the security of the Empire.

Mr Johnson was suffering from malaria in prison and his friends in Parliament, alarmed about his health, appealed to the Colonial Office to allow him free medical treatment outside the prison.

After reviewing the case, the new Governor of Sierra Leone has sent a report to Downing Street informing the Secretary of State for the Colonies that Mr Johnson has been removed from the internment camp in Freetown, capital of Sierra Leone, and exiled to the island of Sherbro, off the mainland.

There he will be allowed medical treatment in the hospital and freedom to move about within certain prescribed areas.

Equality For The Africans

BY PASSING two Resolutions at its recent meeting in New York, as published in this Newspaper, yesterday and today, 4,000 Americans, comprising of Negroes and whitemen of various nationalities, demanded that the United Nations should practise the equality they preach by integrating Negroes into their various war efforts, a total elimination of discrimination, and the arming of Africans and all Colonial peoples everywhere, against Fascist aggression.

Speaking at the meeting, the Chairman of the Council on African Affairs, Mr Paul Robeson, B.A., LL.B., well-known Negro Artist, said that the Africans have suffered enough and must be on the side of all peoples struggling for their freedom. He emphasised that he was proud to be a Negro, and also affirmed with much emphasis that the Africans were not a backward people, as their maligners would have the world believe.

"West African Pilot"

We endorse the views of the Council on African Affairs and hope that the rulers of the Colonial peoples will see the wisdom of its recommendations. Freedom and equality cannot be obtained half and half that is, for one section of the world, while the other sections remain in servitude, political, economic, etc.

JUN 11 1942

Lagos, West Africa

Liberty, equality and fraternity must be extended to the Africans. A restriction of them to one section of the world has always been the cause of wars and international unrest and anarchy.

Drunken Man Steals Money & Tears The Notes

APR 16 1942

Alhaji Abudu, a head labourer of the PWD, Apapa, was arraigned before the Police Court, Ebute Metta, on April 14, on a charge of stealing the sum of £8. 10s, the property of Festus Ade Olaoshebikan.

West African Pilot Lagos

The accused pleaded guilty to the charge and claimed that he was drunk at the time and was then unconscious and irresponsible.

The prosecution revealed that the accused, on April 12, at 9.30 p.m., entered the residence of Olaoshebikan, who was making merry with his friend, uninvited

After the entertainment, all the invited guests left the accused.

On the return of the host, he found that the sum of £8 10s was missing and that the accused had disappeared

APR 16 1942

Corporal John Ezor, who was investigating another theft case, saw the accused tearing and squeezing currency notes.

West African Pilot Lagos

He was suspected and arrested.

On arriving at the Police Station, the complainant, Olaoshebikan, was met narrating his experiences to the Police

The accused was immediately identified by him and only £3. 10/- was seen in his possession.

APR 16 1942

On further investigation, £2. 10/- was recovered from the wife of the accused

The remaining £2 10/- was gone.

The Magistrate sentenced him to pay a fine of £1, or eight days, and £2. 10/ compensation to the complainant.

Share in Victory Sought by Africa

A report issued by the Committee on Africa, the War, and Peace Aims urges application of the principles of the Atlantic Charter to Africa as "an acid test of democratic ideals in any new World Order."

JUL 2 1942

The report assumes that victory by the United Nations is highly important from the standpoint of the future of civilization, and is to be ultimately expected. If such victory does not take place, no part of the world will suffer more than Africa.

Made public by Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, chairman of the Committee, and signed by 40 U. S. missionaries, educators and sociologists, the report proposes that America take the lead in obtaining just treatment of Africa during the war and at peace tables.

Ascribing recent military defeats in Singapore and Burma to a "lack of more general co-operation between the native population and the Europeans in control," the report recommends "prompt steps to give colonial peoples a larger and more responsible share in the government of their country."

The report continues:

"PM Daily"

"Few things will do more to convince the Negro population of this country, and those interested in their welfare, that the United Nations are true to their principle of overcoming the extremes of Nazi racialism, than the way in which they approach the whole problem of Africa and its people."

New York, N.Y.

It is suggested further that the people of the U. S. A. support the International Labor Organization in its efforts to obtain fair labor conditions and wages in Africa; see that African mining and other industries in which Americans are interested financially are conducted with due regard to the welfare of African workmen; show a sympathetic attitude toward African students studying in this country; continue to aid visits here of African leaders, white and Negro, and take special interest in the Republic of Liberia as a home for freed U. S. Negroes.

BOISTEROUSNESS

ONE OF THE THINGS most embarrassing to the educated Negro is the tendency toward boisterousness in public places by the masses of our people. This tendency is one of the excuses made by white southerners for jim crowism. They say the average Negro does not know how to act, that he has little control over his emotions and for that reason should be segregated to himself and his kind.

We regret to say that the action of certain Negroes in public places has tended to give some credence to these conclusions and that the boisterousness of Negroes and their beligerancy is proving embarrassing to the more cultured of their own race.

Take the behavior of the Negro fan at a baseball game, where generally speaking one may "let himself go." In Baltimore, for instance, the Negro fans at Oriole Park where the Negro National League teams played early this season, became so noisy and created so much disturbance with petty fights and bickerings that white residents of the neighborhood complained and the colored ball players lost their right to use this park.

A similar situation occurred in Detroit, Mich., and the colored baseball teams can no longer use Briggs Stadium because a few noisy and thoughtless members of the race created disturbances at recent games played at that park.

Those of us who have been witnessing the colored games at the Yankee Stadium here in New York fear that this tendency toward creating disturbances on the part of colored fans will cause the Negro teams to lose the use of this park. For some unexplained reason, the noise has been getting worse this season and hardly a Sunday passes without three or four fights at these games. Drunks are said to be one of the causes and another is arguments over petty bets.

Until we realize that we are on public exhibition whenever we appear in public and gauge our conduct accordingly, we will be doing our group in New York and our race generally immeasurable harm by our boisterousness.

Discrimination In Shops

WE INVITE the attention of Government to the interpellation of Mr David Adams, M. P., in the House of Commons, regarding alleged discrimination in the shops in Gambia Colony, where it is said that Africans complain of experiencing difficulty in buying goods from European shops, whilst non-Africans purchase same "immediately on demand."

We will not say that this is practised here identically, but we submit that there had been complaints on the part of some Africans who find it difficult to obtain goods, displayed in the shops, not necessarily on account of their race, but because they are not regarded as "regular" customers. This practice is still in vogue and it is difficult for any African who is not in possession of a "Pass Book" to purchase goods from European shops particularly.

56a

Naturally, such refusal tends to give an impression that certain essential goods are being reserved for a particular class of the community since most African purchasers are not necessarily credit customers, not due to their fault, but due to the fact that it is not an easy process for the average African to obtain credit from the firms, especially in war time with their cash-and-carry policy.

West African Pilot Lagos

If and when Government decides to enforce rigid control over ALL commodities sold in this country, we hope that it will be made an offence for any firm or person, African or non-African, to sell essential goods privately or to refuse to sell goods to any retailer, publicly, for any reason whatsoever. If we must win this war, then we are serious in the belief that we must exterminate the wreckers of our war efforts, who are more dangerous than the fifth columnists of Himmler and Co., since they demoralize loyal subjects of His Majesty by their confusionist and questionable tactics.

Inter-Racial Understanding

CONSERVATISM dies hard, especially among those who have little or no opportunity to come into close contact with the changing tide of human progress, and as such it is not a wonder that even with the present war which knows no distinction of race or colour or creed, there shoud exist some folks who still think in terms of the mythical superiority of one race over another.

56a

The news regarding the prosecution of a European seaman who was recently sent to gaol for assaulting an African Police Constable, after telling him to obey the order of a whiteman because he is black, makes very painful reading, and we think that the stand of the Police Authorities, the judgment of the learned Magistrate and the preceding remarks by him will serve to teach the man concerned and others of his ilk a useful lesson.

West African Pilot Lagos

White, black or yellow, all men are expected to be law-abiding, and whenever any man breaks the law, or connives at breaking it, he must be prepared to face the consequences. To believe that the colour of the skin, or the accident of birth, or the race of the law breaker, can save him is sheer folly.

APR 13 1942

This war has brought the Africans and other races, fighting in defence of Democracy and freedom, closer together than before, and we deprecate any attempt by anyone to tell the African that because of his colour he is inferior or otherwise unequal to any of the races of mankind.

7-Day Conference Held on Africa's Post War Problems

WESTERVILLE, Ohio — Africa, one of the major "prizes" at stake in the present global war for power and resources, was the topic of a seven-day Church Conference on African Affairs held at Otterbein College, June 19 to 25.

56a

Two hundred missionaries, mission officers, authorities on Africa, and candidates for Christian service in Africa attended the sessions, representing every major American protestant denomination serving in Africa and every political division of the continent.

JUL 4 1942

The conference was sponsored by the Africa Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and was organized by Dr. Emory Ross, Dr. Newell S. Booth, and Dr. Vernon A. Anderson, all of whom have served in Africa. Miss Mabel E. Emerson of Boston was chairman of the conference.

Major Topics

The present war and what the peace which follows it will mean for the peoples of Africa; a "taking stock" of mission work in Africa today, and plans for greater unity and Christian planning in giving the gospel to the people through many channels were the two major considerations of the conference.

AFRICANS WIN UNION RIGHTS FROM BRITISH

Native 'Pass Laws' To Be Abolished In Many Urban Areas

NEW YORK — Two victories for the native population of South Africa, one having to do with the rights of collective bargaining and the other affecting the free movement of Africans in urban centers were reported here this week.

56a

According to the bureau of the British press service, London has received an official report from Johannesburg, South Africa, stating that the ministry of labor of the Union of South Africa, will grant recognition to the trade unions of African workers.

The second victory, having to do with the extension of further civil rights to the African people, was announced by the Council on African Affairs, which reported this week that Colonel Denya Reitz, minister of native affairs in the Union of South Africa, announced recently that the government will abolish the native pass laws

This means that numerous documents, such as tax receipts, night passes, traveling passes, etc., which all African males were required to carry in order to move about from one section of the country to another, will no longer be required.

SELF-RULE URGED AS AFRICAN GOAL

Committee Says People Must Learn How To Govern Selves

BY JOHN FERRIS

NEW YORK, June 22 — (Wide World)—The importance of giving Africans an increasing share in their own government was stressed here by the Committee on Africa, the War, and Peace Aims in a lengthy report on the application of the Atlantic Charter to the problems of Africa.

JUN 25 1942

The report, signed by 40 American citizens most of whom have lived in Africa or visited Africa for purposes of study, and made public by Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, chairman of the committee, noted that "the emergence into political consciousness of the non-white peoples of the world is a recent phenomenon of great significance."

56a

There is grave danger of Africa in the event of an Axis victory, the report said, adding that "the lessons of the recent military defeats in Malaya, Singapore, Java and Burma—resulting largely, in the opinion of many European authorities, from a lack of more general cooperation between the native population and the European in control—emphasizes the vital importance of prompt steps to give colonial peoples a larger and more responsible share in the government of their country, in order that it may not be said that measures adopted to meet legitimate native aspirations have been 'too little and too late.'"

Acceptance Of Goal Asked

The goal of ultimate self-government "should be definitely accepted in every colony," the report continued, with a suggestion that "the controlling governments should show themselves both willing and eager to fit the African people for larger and larger participation in their own affairs both through 'indirect rule' and through direct representation in government councils."

The mandate system — extended so as to include international inspection and report—was strongly recommended. The committee also stated its belief that trusteeship or guardianship with the purpose of fitting Africans for an increasingly large measure of self-government should be adopted even when colonies are not placed under international administration.

The committee also recommended establishment of a separate division in the State Department to deal with African-American affairs.

The eight points of the Atlantic Charter, it said, "should all be applied to Africa in keeping with the broad humanitarian and democratic principles enunciated."

U. S. Interests Cited

The United States, it pointed out, has numerous reasons for special interest in the continent: It has large educational, philanthropic, religious and commercial interests there; Negro Americans not only constitute one-tenth of the population of the United States but are about one-tenth of all persons of African descent in the world; Africa has large undeveloped land resources requiring the application of scientific agriculture and conservation, while its mineral resources are among the richest in the world, and the United States is a party to many treaties and conventions with European powers which give it certain rights and responsibilities in Africa.

JUN 25 1942

American activity in Africa has increased enormously in the past year, the report said:

"This activity has been commercial, diplomatic and semi-military, if not military. New consulates are being opened, such as the recent one established at Brazzaville. Pan-American Airways has developed an extensive service covering West and Central Africa. American bases are being built, and a significant number of American survey expeditions have been sent out.

"The number of Americans in Africa today is many times greater than the number of Americans present on that continent at any time during the past, and this number is rapidly increasing. West and Central Africa have become a beehive of American activity."

American financial and business interests with investments in Africa, the report stated, "should be specially careful to see that African labor is treated fairly as to methods of employment, wages, living conditions, etc."

Problems Are Complicated

In recommending that the government consider establishing an African-American affairs division in the State Department, the report recognized that the problems of Africa are complicated and paid tribute to the recent progress in their solution, especially in most of the mandated areas and in the British crown colonies and protectorates. French West Africa, Equatorial Africa (Free French), the Belgian Congo and the Union of South Africa have also shown improvement, the committee found.

"It is full of promise and full of possibility of danger—promise, if the nations now in authority in Africa are wise in helping to fit its people in the different colonies for self-government in a modern state, and if the latter respond adequately; dangerous, either if the objective is withheld, or if complete self-government is provided before the people are qualified through education and experience to make use of it wisely and effectively."

JUN 25 1942

Among those signing the report were Dr. Raymond Leslie Buell, former president of the Foreign Policy Association; Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, professor of political science, Howard University; Dr. Frederick P. Keppel, former president of the Carnegie Corporation; Dr. Homer Leroy Shantz, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and Dr. W. E. DuBois, professor of sociology, ~~Atlanta University~~.

~~Dr.~~ Stokes is president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, an organization which has been interested in African problems for more than a quarter of a century.

MUST QUIT ETHIOPIA

Italians Told by British They Would Have to Be Protected

The announced safe arrival in Italy from the British Somaliland port of Berbera of 5,000 Italian women, children and males under, or over, military age who had been colonized in Ethiopia, is the beginning of an exodus of over 20,000 conveyed by four internationally protected liners, Vulcania, Saturnia, Giulio Cesare and Duilio, each scheduled for two round trips.

In the camps of the evacuees, where they have lived for a year, schools, medicinal clinics, dispensaries and refectories are operated by volunteer British women from Kenya, says the Nairobi correspondent of The Times of London, who adds that in reply to numerous petitions that the colonists be permitted to remain in Ethiopia the British authorities said that their protection would be "an unfair burden on the Emperor's government."

AFRICAN TRADE UNIONS RECOGNIZED BY SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT

The right of collective bargaining has been extended, through the recognition of African trade union, to several million native Africans who comprise 80 to 90 per cent of the unskilled labor supply in the Union of South Africa, it was revealed here this week by the British Press Service.

According to the press service, an official report received in London from the Ministry of Labor of the Union of South Africa states that the government will now recognize the trade unions of colored workers, a right formerly restricted to white workers.

The news service report also indicated that this important labor victory for African people will be further strengthened by the South African trade union expansion program which is moving along industrial lines similar to the Congress of Industrial Organizations in this country.

In terms of increased wages, security and greatly improved health conditions for African workers, South African trade union leaders pointed out that Africans now had an opportunity to improve the terribly inadequate wages, ranging from $12.50 to $20 a month, which they now receive.

The efforts of African organizations, led by the African National Congress, comprising labor, women's church and athletic groups, helped to achieve this victory.

In a recent delegation to the Deputy Prime Minister of South Africa, Dr. A. B. Xuma, who studied medicine in America and is now President-General of the African National Congress, demanded that African trade unions be recognized and that present discriminations in industrial legislation be removed. The delegation also urged the appointment of African Inspectors of Labor.

Commenting on the international implications of this new development in South Africa, Dr. Max Yergen, Executive Director of the Council on African Affairs, declared today that the emergence of Africa as an important theatre of the war has brought about tremendous industrial changes which fundamentally affect the life of African people.

JUL 4 - 1942

"South Africa's industrial growth, assisted by American technicians, engineers and aircraft experts, affects every African worker.

Plantation Labor Forced on Natives

LONDON—(Censored)—Because of the need for new supplies of tin, caused by territorial losses in Malaya, British colonial officials in Nigeria, West Africa, are considering conscription of labor under the recently enacted Nigeria Defence Compulsory National Service Regulations.

These regulations, published recently in the Nigeria Gazette, provide that any native chief, when directed by the commissioner, may order any number of persons of African descent, between the ages of 18 and 55, to work in any mine or on any farm nominated by the commissioner.

A similar law, already in effect in Kenya, East Africa, and bitterly attacked recently by Lord Winster, is forcing Africans to work on European farms for from three and a half to seven pence a day.

In an upper house debate, Lord Winster, one of the most liberal members, excoriated officials for the law, saying that parliament had been informed that it applied also to Europeans but that only natives were forced to work on the highland plantations of white landlords.

WE DID CAPTURE ETHIOPIA!

In emphasizing the foolish optimism of such predictors as Representative May, who thinks the war may be over by New Year's Day, The Advertiser has made the statement that so far we have not captured one square yard of Axis territory.

As frequently is the case with blanket statements, this one is an error—our side has taken Ethiopia and Italian Eritrea from Mussolini!

So much for a correction called to our attention by an anonymous correspondent from Tuscaloosa.

5-6a

There may be some debate over whether it is more depressing to say that we have captured no enemy territory, or to say that so far we have captured a wild strip of Africa.

Certainly if compared to the list of some 36 nations and colonial territories captured by the Axis to date, our haul is not impressive. At least not sufficiently impressive to warrant a prediction that we are about to win the war.

Mohandas Gandhi Plans New Move Against British In India

By PRESTON GROVER

WARDHA, INDIA, June 15.—(Wide World) — Mohandas K. Gandhi, again the little priest-politician, declared today he soon would launch a movement against British rule in India that "will be felt by the whole world."

He made the statement in an interview in a little whitewashed room in his baking southern India town near which Gandhi lives much of the time on a [illegible] of ranch surrounded by a colony of followers.

Gandhi declined to outline the nature of the proposed movement although I raised the question several times.

As the interview progressed for upward of an hour, the impression was forced upon me that he himself was undetermined on the nature of the movement-to-be.

Still further, it was evident he was troubled about the extent to which he would be supported by the important All-India Congress, which has been one of the principal aids in his long fight for India's independence.

While he was both mysterious and mystical in discussing the new movement, however, Gandhi reiterated he was not waiting until the war ended but wanted results now.

He said that if freedom for India were granted by the British, he would be willing to have British and American forces remain in India to fight the Japanese.

Asked what would be the next move in event that a freedom demand were rejected—something he agreed was by far the greatest likelihood—he replied:

"It will be a move which will be felt by the whole world.

"It may not interfere with the movement of British troops but it is sure to engage British attention. . .

"India free and independent will play a prominent part in defending China. Today I do not think she is rendering any real help to China. We have followed a non-embarrassment policy so far. We will follow it even now but we cannot allow the British government to exploit it."

Referring to reports that the United States was pressing Britain to make drastic concessions to India to bring her wholeheartedly into the war, I asked if he expected any results from any such action. He replied that he didn't expect results—but held some hope.

Replying to questions what India could do to aid in the war against Japan in event she were granted freedom, Gandhi said:

"Great things, I can say that at once although I may not be able to specify them today."

Gandhi charged that the United States must share some blame for India's position because she was fighting actively beside Britain, who, he said, was holding India in subjection.

"The Allies have no moral cause for which they are fighting," Gandhi asserted, "so long as they are carrying this double-sin on their shoulders—the sin of India's subjection and the subjection of negroes and other African races."

America Must Set Example Of Real Workable Democracy

Raymond Clapper, columnist, writing in the pictorial weekly LOOK, says:

"Recently I returned from Asia deeply troubled by one thing. Wherever Japanese armies have gone, except in China, the Philippines and some Indies islands, they have had either passive or active help from the native populations . . . In India worried officials anticipate that a portion of the population would welcome Japanese invasion.

"It is not only our allies who are victims of this sullen attitude. Even now as the United States is preparing for defense, we hear murmurs of apprehension. We hear Ghandi declaring he does not like a stream of soldiers from America pouring into India.' He says (capitals are the editor's) HE FEARS IT WILL LEAD TO AMERICAN INFLUENCE IF NOT AMERICAN RULE IN INDIA.

"Something is wrong. Something is gravely wrong when Japan, with the blood of decades on its hands—with the cruel conquest of Korea serving only as the prelude to its rape of China—is welcomed by its next victims, and when in the face of this threat, even the intentions of the United States are viewed with suspicion."

With the British, race prejudice was a means to an end, the stepping stone to empire. Here in America where imperialism was not popular, it was a weak copy, the tribute which egotism exacted, a handy aid to white workers. With the world at war and security and supremacy at hazard, the whites here can swap them for safety. Let them do just that. America will do the Unit- Incidents like Pearl Harbor can be over- ed Nations an infinite service by setting an example of pure democracy. It has the colored citizen on whom to demonstrate its sincerity. It has its own experience to prove the idea advantageous.

Soldier Fails In Love And Sues Intermediary

For disappointment in his love enterprise, a soldier, Belo Lokoja, instituted a civil action against Mohamed Male Belo at the Ebute Metta Police Court, demanding the return of his prospective wife or a refund of £2 4. 2½d as part and parcel of engagement ceremonies performed by him, and he won the case.

When asked by the Court why he never sued the woman who personally received the greater fraction of the above sum, the plaintiff said that the woman was still interested in him but was only prevented from returning to his house by the defendant, Belo, and, in support of his statement, the plaintiff produced a love letter from the woman pledging her sincerity and love.

West African Pilot

The defendant denied all allegations by the plaintiff and stated that he was only an inmate of the woman.

The prospective wife, Ibidunni, told the Court that it was true the plaintiff approached her for marriage and she explained to him that there was a quarrel between her and a previous husband which would likely be settled before long

She admitted receiving the sum of 10/- from the plaintiff "for salute," yet she expressed the opinion that she did not love him.

At this juncture the plaintiff interrupted and shouted:

"If you no like me, look your letter."

Here the love letter written by the woman and dated March 23, 1942, was read to the Court and it contained such extracts as "Do not fear, there is no foe.

"If you still [illegible], I am with you.

"I am still suffering for your love."

The woman interrupted and said that the writer misinterpreted her sentiments.

She further revealed that as a result of a successful negotiation concluded last month, she had returned to her former husband.

The Magistrate, after consideration of the issue involved, said that the plaintiff had been fooled by [illegible] defendant and the wom[illegible] stressed the paragraph in the lov[illegible] letter which stated:

"Do not fear, there is no foe."

He then delivered judgment in favour of the plaintiff for the refund of his £2. 4. 2½d with seven shillings costs.

Millions of South African Negroes Get Union Recognition from Gov't

The right of collective bargaining has been extended, through the recognition of African trade unions, to several million native Africans who comprise 80 to 90 per cent of the unskilled labor supply in the Union of South Africa, it was revealed here yesterday by the British Press Service.

According to the press service, an official report received in London from the Ministry of Labor of the Union of South Africa says that the government will now recognize the trade unions of colored workers, a right formerly restricted to white workers.

The news service report also indicated that this important labor victory for African people will be further strengthened by the South African trade union expansion program which is moving along industrial lines similar to the Congress of Industrial Organizations in this country.

In terms of increased wages, security and greatly improved health conditions for African workers, South African trade union leaders pointed out that Africans now had an opportunity to improve the terribly inadequate wages, ranging from $12.50 to $20 a month, which they now receive.

The efforts of African organizations, led by the African National Congress, comprising labor, women's church and athletic groups, helped to achieve this victory.

In a recent delegation to the Deputy Prime Minister of South Africa, Dr. A. B. Xuma, who studied medicine in America and is now President-General of the African National Congress, demanded that African trade unions be recognized and that present discriminations in industrial legislation be removed. The delegation also urged the appointment of African Inspectors of Labor.

Commenting on the international implications of this new development in South Africa, Dr. Max Yergan, Executive Director of the Council on Frican Affairs, said yesterday that the emergence of Africa as an important theatre of the war has brought about tremendous industrial changes which fundamentally affect the life of African people.

"South Africa's industrial growth, assisted by American technicians, engineers and aircraft experts, affects every African worker. Trade union recognition means that African people will have increased opportunities to fight for a much higher standard of living and for full political and economic rights," said Dr. Yergan.

Mr Barnett's Broadcast

IN TWO instalments, we have reproduced in our columns a broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System entitled "The Negro Press in America's War Effort" made by Claude A. Barnett, Director of the Associated Negro Press, of Chicago. The Associated Negro Press is a syndicate which serves over 110 Newspapers published by people of African descent in North, Central, and South America.

> The Negro Newspaper contends for the right of all Americans to earn a living; to be employed in our industries; to contribute of their brawn and skill in this our all-out fight to increase production and provide the tools to win the war.
>
> It knows that industry in general, throughout the years, has adopted a policy of excision of Negroes from jobs. Barred from decent employment for the most part the Negro has been kept in the bottom brackets economically. Poverty develops a low standard of living begets bad housing, poor health, bad environment and encourages crime. Decent employment ...... would help the Negro masses to become better citizens
>
> But even when it is apparent that the work of every able bodied man is needed to produce the tools of war we need the President of the United States has been compelled to issue an edict demanding that minority groups of this country, including the Negro, be given a chance to do their share of the labour, and the Newspaper Editor points out that if a man is good enough to fight for his country, he ought to be good enough to work for it

Very pertinent sentiments and appropriately expressed! How people who profess to fight for Democracy can condone undemocratic practices and expect the world to believe in their sincerity of purpose is the anomaly which some underprivileged peoples have had to contend with. We agree that if a man is good enough to fight for his country, he ought to be good enough to work for it. But we will also add a rider: If a man is good enough to die for his country, he should be good enough to live for it. That is Democracy, as we see it.

Man Who Paid "Dowry" is Given His Wife's Child

KANO (BM).—Judgment has been given by the Chief Alkali here, in the appeal of the long drawn out paternity case between Mr D. M. Ochonogor and Mrs Elizabeth Okafor.

The history of the case was that Mr Ochonogor, a Native of Kwale, fell in love with Elizabeth, a Native of Igbuzo, who reciprocated his love.

Elizabeth was with child for her suitor, who then paid a sum of six pounds to her parents as dowry.

But about five months later, it was alleged that Elizabeth's parents refused to allow their daughter to continue in love with Ochonogor, because Elizabeth, being their first daughter, would not be allowed to marry a non-Native of Igbuzo.

For this reason it was alleged that another dowry was received from another suitor, Mr Lawrence Okafor, to whom Elizabeth was given in marriage by her parents. West African Pilot — Lagos

When she was delivered of a child, Ochonogor took action against her, claiming the child, and judgment was given him in the Mixed Court here.

Not satisfied with this judgment, Elizabeth appealed to the Chief Alkali of Kano who, after a long time, allowed the appeal on the following grounds:

1. That he could give no regard to either of the statements of Mr Ochonogor as regards the payment of dowry or the conception of the child.
2. That although the District Officers of Ogwashi Uku and Kwale had been asked to enlighten him on the customs of the two areas, only one replied and he could wait no longer for the other's reply.
3. That according to the information received from Igbuzo, the latter husband who paid dowry on the girl was entitled to claim the child.

The Alkali, therefore, held that the child belonged to Mr Okafor.

TO RECOGNIZE TRADE UNIONS

South African Government Makes Important Decision.

LONDON, July 2. (ANP)—The ministry of labor of the Union of South Africa will now recognize the trade unions of colored workers, according to an official report received here from Johannesburg. The importance of the decision which Mr. Madeley, the minister of labor, has handed to the South African Trades and Labor council may be judged from the fact that between 80 and 90 percent of South Africa's unskilled labor is among the colored population. Previously the right to collective bargaining had been restricted to white workers, but under the new rule it will be available to all.

It is believed that the decision will result in the expansion of unions along the lines of the American Congress of Industrial Organizations, rather than development along craft union lines.

NEW BILL PROMISES GREATLY IMPROVED PENSIONS FOR AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS

General Smuts Receives Africans' Representatives

56

(BY MARGARET BALLINGER M.P.)

THE Minister of Finance has at last produced his new War Pensions Bill. This is probably the most important measure of the session. It is certainly the one which has been most anxiously awaited.

Every section of the community has been dissatisfied with the provisions under the existing War Pensions Act for those who sacrifice their health and earning capacity in the service of their country or for the dependants of those who give their lives in this service. In this regard, the representatives of the Africans have been particularly dissatisfied. The position as it has pertained in respect of African volunteers has indeed been conspicuously unsatisfactory, providing as it has done, a maximum pension of some £39 per year for a man who suffers 100 per cent disablement.

WAR PENSIONS GREATLY IMPROVED

APR 18 1942

The new Bill is certain not to satisfy all hopes, but it certainly proposes very marked improvements in the allowances for all groups of volunteers. For Africans, indeed, it shows a striking advance.

An African volunteer who suffers 100 per cent disablement will, under the terms of the Bill, be eligible for a pension of £50 per year plus £9 per year for his wife (or for each wife in the event of his having more than one) and £6 per year for each of his children.

Men suffering lesser degrees of disablement will receive a proportion of these allowances until the lowest rung of the pension ladder is reached with the man suffering 20 per cent permanent disability. Such a man will be eligible to receive £10 per year plus £1. 10s., per year for his wife and £1. 4s. 0d. per year for each of his children. Men sustaining less than 20 per cent disablement will receive gratuities up to £55.

The widow (or widows) of a man killed on service will receive £25 per year and £6 per year for each child, all children's allowances to be paid for boys up to fourteen years of age and for girls up to sixteen. Provision is also made in the Bill for gratuities up to £55 for the parents of men killed on service.

WAR PENSIONS REFLECT MOVE TOWARDS LIVING WAGE

When it is remembered that these scales of compensation are to operate in respect of men recruited from the country areas as well as from the towns, the extent of the gain which they represent will be clear. They are scales which, for the family man at least, approximate to the best wage level laid down by the Wage Board for commerce and industries in our larger urban centres and are consequently considerably ahead of any wage levels yet established in smaller centres and rural areas generally.

The terms of this War Pensions Bill are to be welcomed not only for themselves and for the families of African volunteers, but as the first real attempt by the Government to give practical effect to the belief, more and more frequently stated in public speeches by the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet, that Africans must be given more money for their work so that they may begin to be able to maintain their families in health and decency. And there is a reasonable hope that it will be followed by other efforts in the same direction.

PRIME MINISTER SEES AFRICANS' REPRESENTATIVES

In order to urge again that Government should set an example in the matter of wage levels for unskilled workers by bringing the levels now being paid in its Departments nearer a living wage, the representatives of the Africans sought and obtained an interview with the Prime Minister in the course of the week.

In the interview, the distressingly low level of wages paid to unskilled workers in Government service was again stressed and an appeal made to the Prime Minister that wherever and whenever the Wage Board makes a determination, Government departments operating in the areas affected should review their own conditions of employment and at least bring them into line with the conditions imposed by the Board on private employers.

TRADE UNIONS TO COME, PASS LAWS TO GO?

APR 18 1942

At the same time, the urgent need for the full recognition of African Trade Unions was pressed, and support given to Colonel Reitz's statement on the desirability of abolishing the Pass Laws.

On all these matters, the Prime Minister gave the representatives a careful and sympathetic hearing and there is good reason to believe that, in all the matters raised, practical decisions of a satisfactory nature will be taken. Already, I am told, the right of railway booking clerks to demand travelling passes from Africans asking for tickets that will carry them from one province to another is to be cancelled.

GOVERNMENT MEMBERS SUPPORT APPEAL FOR BETTER WAGES FOR AFRICANS

It is a matter of both interest and importance to the African cause that the representations made by the Africans' representatives that the Government should put its own house in order in respect of wage rates for unskilled workers is to be strengthened by a supporting resolution from a considerable section of the Government in the House of Assembly. This is the natural corollary to the increasing number of speeches from Government benches urging this move, a development in the House of Assembly which has been very encouraging to those representing the African cause and increases their hopes of speedy improvement.

AFRICAN WOUNDED TROOPS ARRIVE FROM EGYPT

A remarkable sense of patriotism was revealed, and interesting stories were told by a number of Non-Europeans who arrived in Pretoria this morning for medical treatment from the front. There were 100 walking cases. Despite the fact that all these men actually came down for treatment in military hospitals at Zonderwater, they were exceptionally cheerful and anxious to recover, in order to go back "up north."

Mr. H. Rogers, Under-Secretary for Native Affairs welcomed the men back, and while the Goodwill Club served them with tea and cigarettes, a military coloured band played.

Most of the Bantu men came originally from the Transvaal, and are speaking Sesuto. A representative of the Bantu Press interviewed them in the vernacular, and they all, to a man, said that they were grateful to be able, one day after the war, to return to their respecive Chiefs in the reserves, and tell them of the good work they rendered their country.

Little is leaking through the censorship, but internal conditions in South Africa are causing London serious concern. The original war declaration was obtained by only a small margin, and the Afrikanders, bitterly anti-British and isolationist, have gained many recruits in recent months. They are now openly beginning to urge withdrawal from the war. There have been several cases of sabotage and the Smuts government fears there will be more. Nazi agents are believed to be actively trying to stir up a revolt.

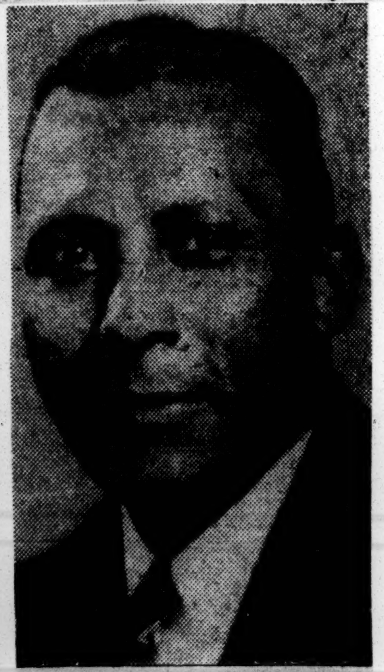
Yergan Hails Mission to Africa, Asks Negro Named

MAY 26 1942

"The Council on African Affairs hails the decision of the United States Government to send a special Economic Mission to the Union of South Africa which will seek means to develop the vast material resources of that country to aid the war effort of the United Nations," said Dr. Max Yergan, Executive Director of the Council on African Affairs in a letter to the President released here yesterday.

"The Council urges the appointment of Negroes to this mission which is headed by Colin Wickersham of the War Production Board and Hickman Price of the Board of Economic Warfare."

Dr. Yergan said sending of such a mission to South Africa would stimulate the whole war effort by bringing the resoruces of that country behind the United Nations. Inclusion of Negroes on the Mission would strengthen the unity and morale of the Negro people of America and would be welcomed by African people, he added.



DR. MAX YERGAN

The Council pointed out the need to arm Africans and to improve their standards of living through the payment of higher wages and extension of civil liberties, to enable them to participate fully in the war effort. It is clear that only by taking their stand with the United Nations against the common enemy can the freedom of the African and other colonial peoples be achieved, the letter declared.

Finally, the Council emphasized that the appointment of Negroes from the United States as members of this Mission befits the dignity and responsibility of the Negro people in America, and would have the effect of strengthening the understanding of the Negro and Colonial peoples that this is their war

South Africans—White and Black—Seeking Square Deal for Natives

JUN 6 1942

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (ANP)—A remarkable insight into the spirit of understanding and tolerance being granted the darker races as result of the present World War, came to light recently with submission of the annual report of the Joint Council of Europeans and Africans.

Of great interest to blacks throughout the world, the reports indicated that the past year has seen more advancement in African affairs than was noted in the past two decades. Says the Joint Council's report:

"New Climate of Opinion"

"These changes can best be described as a new climate of opinion in which African affairs are discussed. The Prime Minister's declaration that segregation has fallen on evil days put the matter in a nutshell. For the first time it is now admitted on all sides that the condition of the African people in urban areas calls for immediate and drastic amelioration. Now at last the new economic circumstances created by the war have opened the eyes of those in high office, and they are lending us their ears as never before.

"We await with confidence the coming report of the Commission of Inquiry on Urban Areas. Our evidence was welcomed, and we know that our proposals will be well considered. We hope especially to secure reforms in the municipal native revenue account, either through pressure from the central government or through persuasion of the city council itself. Thanks to the careful research of some of our members, and to the vigorous support of one of the honorary presidents, the Bishop of Johannesburg, everyone knows what is wrong with the account in its present form. Income is dependent on rents paid and beer drunk by Africans, and expenditure on African welfare is limited by this income.

"Main Obstacle Revenue"

"The failure of the Johannesburg City Council to continue to make grants to the native revenue account from general revenue is today one of the main obstacles in the path of African advancement in our city. Happily, there are already signs that this position will not remain as it is.

"The city council has begun to display a more purposeful interest in its Africans than some of us can remember to have seen in its recent record. Unlike other reef municipalities, it no longer appears before the wage board to argue against the raising of wages. Indeed, it is about to raise the wages it pays.

"Although local government remains our chief concern, we do not forget that we are part of a larger whole. In these grom days, no one dare forget that. Accordingly, we believe that the time has come for all who are unafraid of the future to say in unmistakeable terms that Africans must be trained and armed for the total defense of our common country. And the time to do this is now. To wait until the enemy is at the coast or on our shores is to risk disaster.

"For modern warfare, soldiers cannot be armed and trained in a week. We believe that nothing would so speedily transform the whole atmosphere in which the union wages war as the making of comrades in arms of our African fellow countrymen."

To The Aggreys That Shall Be

56a

Of the Greatest African educationists, christian educators, patriots and modern apostles, has been Aggrey. Of all Africans, Aggrey comes second to no man, his name strikes to our memories. There are men today more educated than he was, but he was second to no man in that he passed into new life being a humble product of Africa A man almost a saint, a man full of love for his race, a man indeed fit for the title the "MODERN APOSTLE" of the African race.

I do not for a moment profess to know more about him than any other young man to whom this message is directed in particular; nor do I profess to know better than any other man who will read this message." Mochochonono Maseru"

I am not commenting on the life of Aggrey as found in his biography, the biggest volume titled "AGGREY OF AFRICA" "A Study in White and Black" by Edwin W. Smith, but pointing out the reason for my theme "To the Aggreys that shall be." The message is not directed from this book to his own sons and daughters, but to all sons and daughters of Africa, who, in their life, putting this most practicable and unselfish example in practice, will take over this apostleship, and will be called after him the "AGGREYS OF AFRICA."

Young men today, after the pursuit of their studies, after their parents have spent hundreds and hundreds of shillings, if not thousands and thousands of shillings, have come back home idling, drinking, gambling, and as a result of these indulgences, have found themselves committing crimes and sins which mean the death and the extermination of their good ways, for which they were purposed. Oct. 24, 1942

My dear Christian brothers and my dear social working brothers, I am sure you will agree with me when I say: nothing can come to us as the highest good for our race; nothing can establish fame

Bantu Presbyterian Church Of South Africa Loyal To Gen. Smuts

"Mochochonono, Maseru

The following letter was sent by the Bantu Presbyterian Church of South Africa to the Prime Minister, Field-Marshal J. C. Smuts :-

We, the Ministers and Elders of the Bantu Presbyterian Church of South Africa, convened in General Assembly at Umtata Cape Province, reaffirm our loyalty to you as Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa. Oct. 24, 1942

We give thanks to God that He has continued to you the necessary health and strength and faith for the discharge of your wonderous tasks as Prime Minister and Minister of Defence. Ministers and Elders of the Bantu Presbyterian Church of South Africa for your kind message. He appreciates deeply the spirit of your message and good wishes for his work which he sincerely reciprocates. It is his earnest wish and will be his constant endeavour to see a happy and prosperous South Africa where its peoples dwell together in their homeland in harmony, understanding, and co-operation, and where the ideals which derive from our Christian civilisation will prevail more and more Through you he desires to send his sympathy and good wishes to the Bantu folk of South Africa.

We pray that increasing harmony and good will may prevail among the diverse races of South Africa; and that the Union's war effort may continue to grow in strength till victory is won and a righteous peace established; and that our efforts to establish a New Order founded on God's Eternal Order be crowned with success.

We are Sir, the Ministers and Elders of the Bantu Presbyterian Church of South Africa.

Signed in the name of the General Assembly,

(Sgd.) ROBERT GODFREY.
Moderator.

I am directed by the Prime Minister, Field Marshal Smuts to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 26th. September and to thank you and the other and we express our admiration for the magnificent lead that you and your great-hearted wife have given to the country in every manner of selfless devotion to the common will. We give thanks also that in days of adversity you have been such a pillar of strength to the whole nation and that your faith in the ultimate victory of the forces of righteousness has never wavered, and we pledge ourselves to continue to give you wholehearted support as you tread so steadfastly the stern path of duty.

We recall with deep gratitude your public declaration concerning the place of the Bantu people in the economy of the realm, and we are encouraged to hope therefrom that in the post war reconstruction measures that will be adopted a policy will be framed that will open up for us a wider field of opportunity than has been accorded us hitherto.

Health Challenge

Ilanga Lase Natal

56a

The Government recently appointed a commission to go thoroughly into the Health problems of the Union. Apart from being another welcome indication of the Government's earnest to set South Africa on a healthier basis, this appointment is a challenge to informed African opinion to present before the Government the African's ideal of what an efficient health service should be for him and how that may be done to ensure the maximum benefits to the greatest number of citizens. September 12, 1942

When the Smit Committee of Enquiry and the Beer Commission toured Natal, most, if not all, influential Bantu organisations chose to refrain from tendering evidence on behalf of those for whom they claim to speak. It was left mostly to organisations under European patronage to confront the Commissions.

On such a vital matter as the health of the community all organisations should start now busying themselves with preparations for the coming Commission so that when it comes to Natal, at least, it shall get a very clear picture of how our people's health may be set on a better footing in the reserves, on farms and in urban locations. The Commission will wish to know, for instance, how far a State medical service will benefit all sections of the community and the Bantu in particular.

Just now there is a wrangle over Medical Aids on whom thousands of pounds of State money have been spent and who do not seem to be doing as much valuable work as it was hoped they would do—save in a few instances, like Bulwer, where the Medical Aids have settled down to work they should really do. There is also the question of the provision of Nurses for the forty-six Magisterial districts in Natal, the training of Health Visitors, Higher Wages, Better Housing and widespread instruction in the prevention of Disease. On all these things and also on the establishment of hospitals and clinics in Bantu areas the Commission will seek to be informed.

Leaders of Bantu thought and representative organisations cannot let the coming opportunity slip out of their hands again and trust that the Transvaal, Cape and Free State will do the work whilst Natal waits to reap the benefits. If we seek to be citizens we must be enterprising and cultivate an active interest in major problems of our country. The health of all sections of the community is most vital as it affects the whole economic future of all sections and if South Africans, of whatever colour, have not agreed on other matters, in health they can at least present a united front.

White Woman Representative Of Africa Says Democracy Doesn't Exist

Dec. 4, 1942

Johannesburg, South Africa, Dec. 4 (ANP)—Democracy does not exist in South Africa, according to Mrs. V. M. Ballinger, white, who is a member of the South African parliament, elected to represent the Africans in the eastern province. She pointed out that the two-thirds of the population which the Africans represented is not governed by laws to which it has subscribed and are not privileged to have either freedom of speech nor of worship.

"The state must not only be a policeman to the African," said Mrs. Ballinger in an article written recently. "It must rather be a protector who creates circumstances in which Africans can develop.

Dec. 4, 1942

"It is time the issue is faced. The 20th century has not learned that democracy does not mean equal rights for all in the sense that the 19th century liberals tried to talk about rights. It did not mean legal equality.

"Notwithstanding all the talk about trusteesship on the part of white South Africans, the segregation policy as it is known in South Africa, is purely and simply a policy of cheap labor. Half of the population might live on land called native land and maintain themselves by periodically going to seek work from the Europeans. Property rights are not open to the majority of the African population and society in this country is bases on property rights.

"Further, Africans have none of those assistances, 'to create security for wage earners that democratic society realizes when it is at its best. They are prevented by a color bar from making the best of the work of their own hands.'"

Dec. 4, 1942

Mrs. Ballinger said that it is essential to give Africans rights of development and she advocated education as a great factor in bringing about a better state of affairs. She emphasized the necessity of South Africa facing the question fairly and squarely.

War And Race Ralations

The war has brought about a remarkable change of outlook in those men who have faced the dangers of war. On the Home Front, where people can still move about freely without coming into close contact with the evils and dangers of war, this change is conspicuous by its absence.

These people still regard the African as a menace to their security. Thus one of these writing to the local evening newspaper on "Natives and crimes" arrives at this sweeping conclusion: "Clear Johannesburg of all surplus Natives, declare this a closed area, and the crime problem is solved."

To this "South African"—as he signed himself, the solution of the crime problem is to clear Johannesburg of all surplus Natives, who are, evidently, the only people with criminal propensities. When this is done there will be no more crime in the city. This outlook is responsible for so much misunderstanding between Europeans and Africans in this country. There is a tendency on the people who hold such views to ignore the root causes of crime among Africans and the remedy to be applied in removing such causes. As a result they hold the opinion that all the evils in this country are due to the presence of Africans in their midst; and that the surest solution to this problem is just to bundle out Africans from European towns and dump them somewhere. After this has been done they do not worry themselves as to what should be done to the Africans in those "dumps" in order to secure for them the necessaries of life.

As long as these Africans can leave these "dumps" to work for them and then return to the "dumps" in the evenings, that is all right. How the Africans live and suffer in those "dumps" and whether or not these sufferings are bound to affect the Europeans themselves in the long run, does not worry them at all.

It is re-assuring, therefore, to comment on the changed outlook of those men and women who have faced the dangers of war side by side with these Africans. The Race Relations News of September publishes a few letters from European soldiers in Egypt who are now seeing the light on the battlefields. One senior officer says:..."We have treated them (Africans) as raw labour, exploited them in our own interest, allowed them to be underfed, not educated, and so on... After this war we must have done away with racial prejudice..."

The writer, as we said, is an officer in the army. He is not a politician or statesman denouncing the racial prejudices in this country. The officer speaks with sincerity. Before the war, he perhaps was one of those who just regarded an African as a "menace to white South Africa." But after his experiences on the battlefields side by side with this despised African, his whole outlook was changed. He saw the despised African, denied all opportunities, doing his bit for his country on the barren sands of Egypt. No man worth his salt, seeing such selfless sacrifice on the part of Africans could help changing his racial outlook. It is only to be hoped that after the war, these sentiments will gain unanimous support from white South Africa. Only in this way will the sacrifices of our people not be in vain.

Only in this way will those who still think the best way to solve the so-called "Native problem" is by tightening pass laws and depriving Africans of free movements in the city, be made to realise the error of their reason.

Only in this way will those who are sacrificing their lives in this brutal war, know they did not shed their blood in vain.

Five Points For Africa

West African Pilot

MISS Margaret Wrong has just published a book, in England, by the above name that will go down in contemporary literature on Africa as a sincere effort to tackle the race problem more realistically and constructively.

Her five points for the "settlement" of all outstanding issues during and after the war, in Africa, are: (1) abolishment of extreme inequality of wealth, (2) equal opportunity for every child, (3) safeguarding of the family, (4) restoration of sense of divine vocation to daily work, (5) God's gift of natural resources to be used with consideration for all men.

It will be seen that the message of her book is applicable to all sections of African society—black and white and otherwise, official and unofficial, capitalist and wage-earner, Christian and otherwise, male and female.

We agree with her that had those who assumed trusteeship over Africa cultivated the "Missionary" or Christian spirit more energetically, it might have been unnecessary for her to write this book. Howbeit, "Five Points For Africa" is opportune, now that the idea of Trusteeship is being superseded by Partnership A partner is an equal. So be it in word and in deed

"Dead Man's" Coffin Is Found By Police To Contain Bags Of Salt

FEB 28 1942

ONITSHA (BM).—An alleged novel way of smuggling salt into the district in order to sell it at a higher price was discovered here recently, when it was found out by a Policeman that a "dead man's" coffin contained bags of salt.

A party of men and women were alleged to have given out the news that a relative was dead, and that the corpse would be taken to their home, across the Niger River, for funeral ceremonies and subsequent interment.

A big crowd of sympathisers gathered to join in the "lamentation," and at the appointed time, the beautifully decorated coffin was taken out, followed by the crowd on its mournful journey to the waterside.

But a Policeman, on point duty, had his suspicion as the procession drew nearer to him.

As a result of the suspicion, he ordered the "cortege" to halt and asked that the coffin be opened.

Reluctance to comply with the order met with a stern insistence on the part of the Constable, and protestatious of sacrilege were equally ignored.

When at last the coffin was opened, it contained no "corpse" but bags of salt, and the crowd of "sympathisers" skulked away quietly, blaming themselves for being so gullible.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We praise the vigilance of the Police concerned.

According to allegations, such practice as reported above was alleged to have been successfully carried out in Lagos, during the period when salt was difficult to obtain both here and in the district around, but it was not detected.

Food Position In Native Areas And Steps Taken To Deal With A Possible Shortage

MAR 21 1942

Senator Rheinallt Jones has been very much concerned over the effects of the drought in the Native Areas and questions put by him in the Senate have resulted in the following statement by the Minister of Native Affairs. Only that part of the statement dealing with the position in the Transvaal and Orange Free State is given here.

The abnormal drought which has been experienced in so many parts of South Africa has given cause for anxiety as regards its effect upon the food position in Native areas where the population are for the most part almost entirely dependent upon maize and its products for their subsistence.

About the beginning of the year it became apparent, from complaints emanating from various centres, that traders were experiencing difficulty in obtaining maize and mealie meal for supply to their Native customers. In the opinion of the Mealie Industry Control Board these difficulties were attributable to three main factors:

(a) The shortage of white mealies;

(b) The subdivision of orders for maize into consignments of smaller quantities with a view to obtaining the higher prices laid down under the price control scheme set forth in Government Notice No. 1670 of 1941, as amended from time to time;

(c) The shortage of rolling stock on the railways.

These difficulties were met as follows:

MAR 21 1942

(a) By the promulgation under Proclamation No. 23 of 1942 (War Measure No. 10 of 1942) of regulations for the compulsory blending of white and yellow mealie meal;

(c) By arranging with the Railway Administration for preference being given as regards the transportation of maize consignments cetificated as being for human consumption.

The situation has undoubtedly improved: Partly as a result of the action set forth above and partly owing to the release by certain companies of quantities of mealie meal for sale to traders for Native consumption.

It may be mentioned here that facilities also exist whereby Natives may obtain mealies direct from the Mealie Industry Control Board. The details of the scheme are set forth in the Native Affairs Department's Circular No. 47 of 1941. Briefly, the position is that Natives may, with the assistance of the Native Commissioners, obtain maize free on rail at elevator stations in minimum lots of ten bags at 12/9d per bag.

It has been ascertained from the Mealie Industry Control Board that recently the demand for mealies and mealie meal has eased off considerably. This is probably due to the availability of green mealies in the coastal belts.

At the middle of last month there were 2½ million bags of mealies available. In the opinion of the Mealie Industry Control Board the supply will be sufficient to meet the country's requirements until the new season's crops become available about the middle of May.

Drastic powers of control over the disposal o mealies and mealie meal products have been conferred upon the Mealie Industry Control Board by Proclamation No. 47 of 1942 (War Measure No. 20 of 1942). As from 1st April, the Board is taking over all existing mealie contracts and surplus maize.

Careful inquiries were instituted throughout the Native areas with a view to ascertaining what the position was in various parts of the country and determining what measures would be necessary to guard against the possibility of actual food shortage. The breaking of the drought in certain areas has improved conditions considerably and the Department's representatives in these localities are now more optimistic than they were about a month or six weeks ago.

NORTHERN AREAS: The severe drought still continues and crops planted early in the season have failed. In addition the army worm has appeared in many districts and has adversely affected the later crops. There will thus be an abnormal shortage of food production in these areas and less than 25 per cent of normal crops is anticipated. Up to the present there has been no actual starvation in the Native areas. Speaking generally the Natives are not short of money to purchase food and there is no lack of employment.

While the threatened shortage has been averted for the time being it seems clear that the ill effects of the drought will be felt later on in the year. With a view to minimising such ill effects the Department has taken all possible steps to insure increased crop production during the next twelve months. Seed of quick growing varieties of maize, beans, peas, wheat and potatoes have been supplied to Native Commissioners for issue to Natives on repayment and latter have been urged to plant as much land as possible. Fertiliser is being supplied to them on a subsidy basis at 50 per cent of cost.

The South African Native Trust is also undertaking crop production—particularly in localities where there is land under irrigation.

MAR 21 1942

Wherever practicable, arrangements were made for the ploughing of Natives' lands by Departmental tractors at a reduced charge of 2s. per morgen.

The success of all these efforts towards increased crop production will, of course, depend very largely upon weather conditions.

The possibility of providing ploughing units for preparing Natives' land for next season is at present under consideration.

Black Leader Named Governor Of African Colony

MAY 14 1942

By CHATWOOD HALL

KUISBYSHEV, USSR —(ANP)—"When Gen. DeGaulle appointed a pure black man, Eboue, to the most important office of Free France, this appointment only implied the vital interests of the allied nations in the war but also gave expression to the ideals of Free France which remain fully faithful to the principles of the great French revolution," declared Roger Garreau, diplomatic representative of Free France in Russia, in an exclusive interview Saturday for the Associated Negro Press.

"The territory of Free France in Africa which comprises an area three times the size of France and a population of 12,000,000 came over to General DeGaulle on the very first day of his appeal to the French nation to resume to right after the armistice had been signed, stated Mr. Garreau.

"This was because of the audacious and courageous initiative of the governor of Chad colony, Monsieur Eboue, who is now governor general of the whole of Free French Africa with his capital at Brazzaville."

GUARDS COMMUNICATION LINES

MAY 14 1942

As an example of the vital strategic importance to the allied nations of this Free French territory administered by Eboue, Mr. Garreau pointed out that this area commands the main communication lines within the whole continent of Africa and in particular between the Atlantic and Indian oceans. These facts were fully recognized lately by the American government when it decided to re-establish its consulate in Brazzaville near Free French authorities.

Communication from Atlantic ports through Free French Africa which enables the transport of munitions and other supplies to the allied armies in Egypt, Libya, and other areas precludes a long and risky sea haul around Cape Good Hope as well as a long trip through the Indian ocean in which, Mr. Garreau states, the Japanese fleet is operating.

MAY 14 1942

IMPORTANCE IS CLEAR

This vital importance of Free French Africa, which is the main stronghold of the DeGaulle forces and which extends from the Cong river to the frontiers of the lower Egyptian Sudan and former Italian Libya and which is administered by a Negro, thus becomes crystal clear.

GOVERNOR APPEALS FOR KINDNESS TO AFRICAN NATIVES

Pittsburgh, PA.

Pittsburgh, Courier

By Our Foreign Correspondent

MAY 16 1942

LONDON, May 14. (Censored)—Appealing for a better interracial understanding in view of the grave danger confronting the Empire, Governor Sir Herbert Stanley of Southern Rhodesia, addressing the Rotary club of Capetown, discussed the duty of the European as an individual towards individual members of the colored races.

One thing which had struck him in Rhodesia, and particularly during his period of office as governor of Ceylon, now threatened by the Japanese, Sir Herbert said, "was a good deal of racial difficulty was due not so much to the collective acts of the white race, such as government and administration, as to the individual relationships with the other races. In the past there had been a tendency in the East and now the same is being repeated in Africa, for the governing white race to treat the governed with scant courtesy. This had created a feeling of resentment among the governed."

The governor reminded the Rotarians that the feelings of the colored peoples were very much like their own. The Negroes were a very courteous people, and bad manners jarred on their feelings.

"We call our Negro servant 'boy,' forgetting that he has a name. The term 'n—r' is used in spite of the fact that the Negroes strongly resent being called by such offensive terms. White people never say 'please' or 'thank you' to their colored servants. We treat them like machines."

The governor however, added that he was not suggesting that natives should be regarded as equals but was merely pointing to their common humanity.

Haile Selassie Chasing Out All Italian Fascists in Ethiopia; 60,000 Expelled

Conquering Emperor Takes Measures Against Mussolini's Plantation Owners

MAY 23 1942

LONDON (Censored).—It is now possible to confirm that the Emperor Haile Selassie has decided to expel all Italian Fascists settled in his country by Mussolini upon lands stolen from the natives and turned into plantations for the exclusive benefit of the white colonizers. The repatriates number about 60,000. They are all ardent Fascists, many of them ex-service men, who were given land by the Duce as a reward for helping rape Ethiopia.

Incur Bitter Hatred

Because of their racial arrogance and brutality towards the Ethiopians, the Italians have incurred the bitter hatred of the peoples, who don't want to have any dealings with the Fascists.

Massacres in panic attempts to crush the national spirit of the Ethiopians following an attempt on the life of Marshal Graziani, ex-viceroy in 1937, have left indelible scars. Consequently, in order to save them from the wrath of the natives, the emperor has appealed to his British advisers to get them out of the country.

Given Chance

MAY 23 1942

Even before the occupation of Addis Ababa by British imperial forces and Abyssinian patriots, General Wavell, then in supreme command of the operations, had given the Italians the opportunity to evacuate civilians. The Duke of Aosta, Mussolini's royal henchman, who recently died in Kenya, refused. He expected Hitler to send reinforcements under General Rommel and recapture Abyssinia before the emperor could re-establish his power. But Hitler got himself all messed up in the Soviet Union and was unable to carry out his promise to relieve the Italians in East Africa.

Vichy Helping Evacuation

Since then the British authorities in Ethiopia have had to take steps to protect the Italians. The first group to be sent back to Italy will presently be taken off in Italian ships from Jibuti, the Vichy control port in French Somaliland. The British naval officers in the Red Sea have given safe conduct to the Italian ships carrying women and children.

Great alarm was expressed in London by certain sections of the press, which displayed strong anti-Abyssinian sentiments during the Italo-Abyssinian war, over the safety and welfare of the white women.

These former friends and admirers of the dictator even went to the extent of alleging that unless the British military authorities in Abyssinia protected the Italians, the natives would assault the white women, an allegation without foundation. The color-bar dies hard even though Italy is supposed to be an enemy of the common cause for which the Abyssinians have fought at a time when Mussolini was being appeased.

'Arms For Africa' Is New Battlecry

NEW YORK CITY—(SNS)—Freedom-loving peoples of Africa should be armed in order to overthrow the Nazi tyranny and establish freedom and self-determination for all peoples throughout the world, a huge crowd which packed Townsend Harris auditorium of City College here Friday was told.

A half dozen African leaders from all parts of that continent were given their first opportunity to make a full presentation of their case to the American public.

In a vivid manner, which brought forth applause, cheers and boos from the crowd, the African leaders described the economic, political and cultural exploitation of Africans by the European prior to the war, yet affirmed Africa's determination to fight shoulder to shoulder with the allied powers against the Nazi tyranny, "if this is a real war for world freedom of ALL peoples."

The speakers agreed that the Atlantic charter and all other statements of the war aims and peace aims of the allied powers should be specifically understood to apply to Africa as well as to the rest of the world.

Copies of the resolution passed have been forwarded to President Roosevelt, the secretary of state, the chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, Prime Minister Winston Churchill and the British Colonial secretary as well as the war council of the United Nations.

NATIVE AFFAIRS COMMISSION REPORT

RECOGNITION OF NATIVE UNIONS

FEB 28 1942

The need for recognition of form safeguarding them against explained in the report of the 1939-40.

The commissioners reject to evade their obligations in pro dation and suggest a conference concerned and the Provincial Ad conditions.

The commission says the rise of an industrial class among the Bantu (permanently resident in all European centres) learning the lessons of industrial combination and agitation from European experts cannot be ignored. A number of Native trade unions were already demanding recognition. It was assumed that the same form of industrial solidarity among the Native workers as benefited trade unionists in Western Europe would prove as successful in South Africa.

"This, we are convinced, is a profound mistake. It is forgotten that trade unionism in Western Europe has succeeded as much by its sagacity and understanding of economic facts as by its combination. It has been strongest and achieved its greatest successes in the most advanced countries. Its leaders have been men of experience and outstanding common sense.

WISDOM DOUBTED

"But among a people just emerging from barbarism, with no industrial experience and no elementary acquaintance with economics, it may be doubted if the combinations now taking place are the wisest in their own interests. Industrial clashes between Europeans and Natives must inevitably develop into graver issues.

"Nevertheless, the existence of a number of Native trade unions demands some form of recognition. The commission has advised that this should be given, but in a form which will prevent Native workers concerned from becoming the dupes of Europeans who seek to exploit their gievances for their own profit.

"What is necessary is that some official channel shall be established through which Native trade unions can bring into official cognisance any grievances they have and, if well founded, have them remedied. This would be better than leaving them to adopt the dangerous advice of some unbalanced, semi-educated Native or the promptings of disreputable Europeans who batten on Native ignorance and cupidity."

The war has compelled the Government to suspend further purchase of land as provided under the Native Trust and Land Act, it is stated. This, however, is temporay and purchases will be continued as soon as circumstances permit. Before purchases ceased sufficient land had been acquired to relieve the worst cases of congestion in the reserves. Reclamation programmes were drawn up by the competent technical officers of the trust and plans have been approached by the commision and put into operation.

PROVINCE'S OBLIGATIONS

FEB 28 1942

Provincial Councils are unable or unwilling to provide the additional money necessary for Native hospital accommodation, the report says elsewhere, and the assistance of the commission certain Native trade unions in a "disreputable Europeans" is Native Affairs Commission for the attempt of certain Provinces viding Native hospital accommodation between the State departments ministrations in order to improve has been sought to effect some relief.

It is impossible to give adequate relief out of the trust fund which was not established to relieve the Provinces of their obligations in this respec "though, indirectly, as a result of the rising standards of Native life for which the department is to some extent responsible, it is natural that the Provinces should seek to offload their obligations on to the Native trust."

Public health cannot be segregated. It is a national matter requiring national treatment. The commission has recommended a conference between the Departments of Public Health and Native Affairs and the Provincial Administrations to determine the needs for the immediate future and for the adequate provision of finance.

In a memorandum on Native health certain members of the commission contend that in South Africa emphasis must always be on preventive medicine as millions are unable to afford the services of a doctor and, in the Native territories, there are 21,500 Natives to every doctor.

Some day, they say, there will be sufficient Native doctors who are fully trained and qualified to engage in medical practice, and steps to achieve this are being taken. But for many years to come the Native will have to trust to the European. This means medical aid to all Natives at the expense of the State, if it is to be made available. The best and cheapest method of providing it is to deal with the sources of disease by preventive measures.

RECRUITING FOR THE ARMY

Office Opened At Bloemfontein Location

APR 18 1942

(BY AHBMET)

AFTER the recruiting campaign when African soldiers accompanied by the Coloured Corp band gave a demonstration in the location and the following day marched through the city, a local recruiting office has been opened in the location for more Africans. Sergeant Conan Doyle Modiakgotla is in charge, and there is a steady stream of recruits coming up daily.

Infectious Diseases Hospital at Bloemfontein

The Town Council, upon the recommendation of the Public Health Committee, has decided to add to the Tempe Isolation Hospital a ward for formidable epidemic diseases, and another for Africans with infectious diseases as soon as possible. These additions, already approved in principle, were delayed by the present international situation. The decision to proceed with this work is based upon a recommendation from the Union Department of Public Health, which referred to the shortage of accommodation for non-European tuberculosis patients.

The National Council of Women(European), local branch, at its last meeting tackled the question of an adequate bus service for African workers. It was said the location bus paid better than the European service. This council recommended the reduction of the cash bus fares to 2d, also that shelters be provided at termini, and further that there be provision of additional buses at the peak hours, as well as certain changes in the time-table.

The Council decided to request the town council to appoint grave diggers for the non-European cemetery. At present graves are dug by relatives and friends of the deceased, who often had to work throughout the night because of rocky soil. Such an appointment is long overdue.

Consecration of Bishop Mochochoko

APR 18 1942

A dignified ceremony was held in St. Paul's Church, Batho, on Sunday, April 5, when Rev. W. M. Mochochoko, Vicar-General of the African Church in the O. F. S. and Basutoland, was consecrated into the office of Bishopric of the O. F. S. and Basutoland. The ceremony was conducted by Archbishop Seleke of Pretoria, assisted by Bishop J. M. Mothapi, of Johannesburg, and Archdeacon Matlala, of Vereeniging, these being executive members of the Upper House of the African Church.

Mr. Motle of Pretoria, ch trustee and treasurer of African Church in S. A., was present. The solemn service was attended by many people from outlying districts in the O. F. S. and Basutoland, and St. Paul's Church was filled to overflowing.

In the afternoon, in the Community Hall a special service was held, when Bishop W. M. Mochochoko was introduced to the general public. Members of sister churches were present. Devotions were led by Bishop Mothapi. Mr. J. Modise was chairman. The speakers stressed the fact that the African was awakening to his rightful place in the scheme of things. The speakers were Messrs. J. L. Lobere, J. M. Seleke, L. K. Ntlabati B. A., Evangelist Mokone of the Bantu Methodist Church of S. A., and Mr. Motle of Pretoria, and Bishop Mochochoko replied. The speeches were interspersed with the singing of hymns.

Bloemfontein Sport

The cricket season closed here on March 29, when the last match for the Cooper Cup was played. The presentation of trophies will take place on April 25 in the Bantu Social Institute, at 8 p.m., when the Louisiana Band will render dance numbers. Admission will be 1/-. Matlala's C. C. has captured the C. W. Champi cup and Fair Players, took the I. Masike and Cooper cups.

On Saturday, April 4, B. A. F. A. played matches against teams from Germiston and Johannesburg. The matches were played from 1 p. m. The standard of the game was low, and the local sides were never extended. The match against Germiston resulted in homesters netting 7 goals to 2. The local B. team beat Jupiter Sweepers B., by 5 goals to 2, and the Jupiter senior team lost 0—2.

MINIMUM WAGE FOR AFRICANS

Proposal By Labour Party

Recommendations that a minimum wage of £6 a month for Natives be introduced and that attention should be given to housing schemes for Natives were made in a statement submitted by the South African Labour Party to the committee of inquiry into the living conditions of urban Natives which sat in Johannesburg last Thursday week. Mr. D. H. Epstein, M.P.C., was the spokesman of Labour Party delegates.

The statements urged that "immediate and effective measures be taken to change the dreadful conditions of want and underfeeding, ill-health and squalor, under which almost the entire urban Native population live."

Regret was expressed that the question of wages had been omitted from the committee's terms of reference, the party being of the opinion that the basic problem was that of inadequate wages. There was nothing more urgent than the fixing of a minimum wage of £6 a month, as had already been provided in certain wage determinations, and as had been done by Durban City Council. If the Johannesburg City Council would follow this example, they would give a lead to other local authorities as well as to other employers of Native Labour.

LOWER RENTS

Such a minimum wage, if supplemented by improved social service, reductions in rents and transport charges would contribute much towards improved conditions, which would react to the benefit of both Natives and Europeans.

The Labour Party pleaded for a substantial reduction in the present rents. One-fifth of the total income was too high a proportion for rent in the case of the Native because of his low income.

The present housing programme was grossly inadequate to meet the needs of the urban Native population. "Not all Natives live in municipal townships, and those who cannot obtain accommodation, have to live in overcrowded slum districts, for which exorbitant rent is paid.

"We are therefore of the opinion that the Government should allocate additional and adequate funds for sub-economic housing, and that the sub-economic housing schemes already decided upon but stopped or curtailed should be proceeded with without further delay. The crime of slums must go, and nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of an intensive and adequate re-housing drive."

FEB 7 1942

TRANSPORT COSTS

It was advocated that the municipalities should take over private transport systems so as to give the entire Native populaion the benefit of low transport charges.

The party supported the request for improved educational facilities for Natives.

The appalling incidence of ill health and disease among the Native population demanded, in the interests of the Native no less than that of the Europeans, that full and free medical services be made available to them.

Urging the need for provision for aged and indigent Natives, the party recommended that the urban and State authorities should put into operation an old-age pension scheme.

Though the terms of reference did not entitle the committee to take evidence on the condition of rural Natives, the party felt obliged to point out that urban and rural conditions re-acted upon each other. "We are therefore desirous of taking this opportunity of drawing the Government's attention to the appalling conditions of Native farm labourers. They are shamefully underpaid and their living conditions are dreadful. Their physical degeneration must cause alarm to the country."

The Government was urged to appoint a similar committee to inquire into the living conditions of rural Natives and to fix a minimum wage and provide improved conditions of life and work.

ASKS EQUAL WAR TERMS FOR AFRICA

MAY 23 1942

Pittsburgh Courier

3-6a

By GEORGE PADMORE
(Foreign Correspondent)

LONDON, May 21 (Censored)—Progressives, Socialists and other liberal democrats in this country are carrying on a campaign similar to that in America headed by the famous international writer and Nobel prize winner, Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, and other well known intellectuals.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Addressing a Colonial Conference called by the Fabian Society to hear reports upon the reasons why the colored races are not supporting the war as they should, Sir Drummond Shiels, a former under-secretary of state for colonies in the Labor Government, said that "the conference was out to consider the relationship between the white and colored races in light of recent events, particularly in the Far East."

Other speakers sketched the background of the collapse in Malaya, Singapore and Burma where the natives either remained passive, considering the war a struggle between two sets of imperialists which did not concern them. Or as in Burma join up with the invader in the hope of getting back the land which had been expropriated from them.

Dr. Haden Guest, Labor member of Parliament for North Islington and a specialist on West African affairs, told the conference that very little has been done effectively from the standpoint of the native races. It was a rotten era and deserved to be destroyed. We need now a new attitude to our own civilization and to world civilization.

ATLANTIC CHARTER WHITTLED DOWN

Criticising the Atlantic Charter as it applies to the colored races, Dr. Haden Guest, said: "The Atlantic Charter has been whittled down as far as India and Africa were concerned. The difficulties caused in India are well known.

"Telegrams had recently been sent from West Africa to the prime minister asking for a definition of war aims. The reply sent back by Mr. Churchill side-stepped any clear and definite aims. If we do not include the colored peoples in our war aims we are acting narrowly and selfishly. The world problem presented by the Nazi challenge to civilization can only be settled by a world solution. We must state our aim as that which will bring into the world an equalitarian civilization into which all people, irrespective of race, creed and caste and color, should enter on equal terms.

DEMOCRACIES MUST LEARN

Dr. Haden Guest who has studied the race question in the Soviet Union, told the conference that the democracies have much to learn from the Soviets in this respect. "In 1917 Russia was a metropolitan power and had colonies in Siberia, the Far East and Central Asia," said Dr. Guest.

"The condition of the people in these areas was of a low grade, some of them were as backward as the people of Africa. But it did not occur to the Bolsheviks to adopt any policy when they came into power other than that of complete equalitarianism. Many of the colonial peoples of Russia were illiterate—in some cases alphabets had to be invented—they were deeply sunk in superstition, and the position of women was impossible. The situation was parallel with Britain's Colonial Empire today. Since that time the resources of these areas had been developed by the Soviet government and large sums of money spent on the education and health in the same way as in Metropolitan Russia."

ALL RACES SERVE IN RED ARMY

Dealing with the war against the Nazis, Dr. Guest, who won the military cross in the last war, told the conference that in the Red army all races—white and colored, served in the same units as equals. There were no "jim-crow" organizations and colored Asiatics from the Soviet Republics held high rank in the various armed forces including the Red air force.

"We have proclaimed our gratitude to the Soviet Union because of the valour and magnificence of her armies, but some of these armies which have driven back the Nazis are colonial armes made up of people who 20 years ago were as backward as some of the natives in Africa."

Concluding his discourse, the M. P. added: "If Africa is to come into the war with maximum effect it must come in on equal terms and its resources must be developed by applying socialism. It is easier to apply socialism to primitive communities than to complicated and industrialized ones, as the Russian experience shows. The Africans can skip the stage of industrial revolution and become fully developed socialist states."

Dr. Abayomi, in reply, expressed gratitude for the reception—one of a series—and expressed pride in the presidency on that occasion of Dr. Carr, whom the best critics in Britain regarded as the leading figure in education in Africa. The honour extended to him in London was to Nigeria and to West Africa. He was conscious, however, that in the great field of ophthalmology one man alone could not achieve what was necessary.

The League of Coloured Peoples

APR 2 5 1942

On April 16 the League of Coloured Peoples held a reception at Overseas House to meet their newly appointed secretary, Mr. John Carter, B.S., barrister-at-law, of British Guiana. Mr. Rice (of Overseas House) and Dr. Harold Moody (founder and president of the League) were hosts. Among those present were Sir Angus Gillan, Mr. R. Dunbar, Mrs. Moody and Captain C. Moody, West Indian members of H.M. Forces, Officers of the Indian Navy and Canadian and American Air Force. It was a cheerful gathering of members of the League and other sympathetic organizations.

The programme was marked by the presence of Mr. Penney, West Indian and American dramatic artist, who gave a brilliant and moving performance. He began with an Ode to Britain, his own composition of 30 years ago, in which he gave a truly West Indian portrayal of the glories of the Mother Country. This was followed by a humorous tale of a French boy's first game of cricket, entitled, "Alphonse Plays Cricket." Turning from comedy to tragedy, Mr. Penney characterized Othello in the finale of the play. He displayed consummate skill in blending pathos and depth of feeling with a certain reserve, which makes him the artist he is. He closed his recital in the role of "Adam" in As You Like It. This was just as warmly received.

APR 2 5 1942

Dr. Moody introduced the new secretary, and Mr. John Carter, after thanking Mr. Rice and Overseas House for so generously offering the use of the Hall of India for this reception, told of the work of the League in promoting tolerance and understanding among European and non-European peoples and the part it hoped to play.

Mr. R. Dunbar (British Guiana), who will conduct the London Philharmonic Orchestra to-morrow, April 26, was also introduced by Dr. Moody and was wished every success in his coming performance, and this closed a most entertaining evening.

Ibo Representation

West African Pilot

WE ARE authoritatively informed that some branches of unions composed of Ibo-speaking peoples have become apprehensive at the apparent injustice meted to the Ibo-speaking peoples (who constitute the most populous tribe in Nigeria) by an inadequate representation in the Legislative Council of Nigeria, and that some of them are making resolutions in order to approach Government on this matter.

Provided the demand for further representation of the Ibo-speaking peoples is carried out constitutionally, backed by well-reasoned arguments, and taking into consideration circumstances created by the war, this Newspaper will support it to the last, just as it did the requests of Ijebu Ode, Ibibio, Cameroons, Ondo, Benin, and other sections of the Protectorate of Nigeria, represented as "divisions" in the Legislative Council.

5-6a

The Ibo-speaking peoples number about four millions (according to responsible writers like Lord Hailey, Miss Margery Perham, Dr C. K. Meek, and Mrs Sylvia Leith Ross), and for all these people to be represented by only one Nominated Member of the Legislative Council is a challenge, if not an affront, to their national pride.

Lagous

We submit that since the Yoruba tribe, which is as great a tribe as the Ibo, in any respect, has elective representation for three members and nominated representation for five (Abeokuta, Ijebu Ode, Oyo, Ondo, and Colony) "divisions," it would be most unjust, most unreasonable, and most un-democratic, for the Ibo-speaking peoples to have no elective representation whatsoever and only one nominated representation for Ibo "division."

MAR 3 - 1942

We respectfully suggest the granting of the franchise to some important towns in Ibo-land, in addition to His Excellency nominating five Unofficial Members to represent the Asaba, Onitsha, Enugu, Owerri, and Port Harcourt "divisions" of Ibo-land, without further vacillations which might be embarrassing to Government in the long run. There are capable aboriginal Ibo folks to represent the above-named "divisions."

THE LETTER of Captain Bertie Sachs of the R.A.M.C., who is serving in this country, which he wrote to his mother in South Africa and which was published in one of the papers in that country, as reproduced in this Newspaper, last Saturday, reflects a curious mentality.

Captain Sachs apparently wondered at the aspiration of the Native Nigerians towards higher administrative posts in the Civil Service, because that was not the practice in his adopted country, and that point so impressed him that he had to write to tell his mother. To him, also, Nigerian house servants appear to be bone-heads, because they could not satisfy him.

Lagos

We do not necessarily quarrel with Captain Sachs for his impression, but we must insist that the Postal Censor should be more discreet about what he passes out of this country. Such letter as that of Captain Bertie is only good for propaganda purposes, and especial care should be taken with these South African folks.

Why should Africans not aspire to higher administrative posts? Or why should that evidently surprise anybody? Relations within the Empire should be cordial, especially at this time of war, but apparent insults from one section to the other cannot bring this about and they should be discouraged at all cost.

Dr. Abayomi, in reply, expressed gratitude for the reception—one of a series—and expressed pride in the presidency on that occasion of Dr. Carr, whom the best critics in Britain regarded as the leading figure in education in Africa. The honour extended to him in London was to Nigeria and to West Africa. He was conscious, however, that in the great field of ophthalmology one man alone could not achieve what was necessary.

APR 25 1942

On April 16 the League of Coloured Peoples held a reception at Overseas House to meet their newly appointed secretary, Mr. John Carter, B.S., barrister-at-law, of British Guiana. Mr. Rice (of Overseas House) and Dr. Harold Moody (founder and president of the League) were hosts. Among those present were Sir Angus Gillan, Mr. R. Dunbar, Mrs. Moody and Captain C. Moody, West Indian members of H.M. Forces, Officers of the Indian Navy and Canadian and American Air Force. It was a cheerful gathering of members of the League and other sympathetic organizations.

The programme was marked by the presence of Mr. Penney, West Indian and American dramatic artist, who gave a brilliant and moving performance. He began with an Ode to Britain, his own composition of 30 years ago, in which he gave a truly West Indian portrayal of the glories of the Mother Country. This was followed by a humorous tale of a French boy's first game of cricket, entitled, "Alphonse Plays Cricket." Turning from comedy to tragedy, Mr. Penney characterized Othello in the finale of the play. He displayed consummate skill in blending pathos and depth of feeling with a certain reserve, which makes him the artist he is. He closed his recital in the role of "Adam" in As You Like It. This was just as warmly received.

Dr. Moody introduced the new secretary, and Mr. John Carter, after thanking Mr. Rice and Overseas House for so generously offering the use of the Hall of India for this reception, told of the work of the League in promoting tolerance and understanding among European and non-European peoples and the part it hoped to play.

Mr. R. Dunbar (British Guiana), who will conduct the London Philharmonic Orchestra to-morrow, April 26, was also introduced by Dr. Moody and was wished every success in his coming performance, and this closed a most entertaining evening.

Ibo Representation

West African Pilot

WE ARE authoritatively informed that some branches of unions composed of Ibo-speaking peoples have become apprehensive at the apparent injustice meted to the Ibo-speaking peoples (who constitute the most populous tribe in Nigeria) by an inadequate representation in the Legislative Council of Nigeria, and that some of them are making resolutions in order to approach Government on this matter.

Provided the demand for further representation of the Ibo-speaking peoples is carried out constitutionally, backed by well-reasoned arguments, and taking into consideration circumstances created by the war, this Newspaper will support it to the last, just as it did the requests of Ijebu Ode, Ibibio, Cameroons, Ondo, Benin, and other sections of the Protectorate of Nigeria, represented as "divisions" in the Legislative Council.

5-6a

The Ibo-speaking peoples number about four millions (according to responsible writers like Lord Hailey, Miss Margery Perham, Dr C. K. Meek, and Mrs Sylvia Leith Ross), and for all these people to be represented by only one Nominated Member of the Legislative Council is a challenge, if not an affront, to their national pride.

Lagos

We submit that since the Yoruba tribe, which is as great a tribe as the Ibo, in any respect, has elective representation for three members and nominated representation for five (Abeokuta, Ijebu Ode, Oyo, Ondo, and Colony) "divisions," it would be most unjust, most unreasonable, and most un-democratic, for the Ibo-speaking peoples to have no elective representation whatsoever and only one nominated representation for Ibo "division."

MAR 3 - 1942

We respectfully suggest the granting of the franchise to some important towns in Ibo-land, in addition to His Excellency nominating five Unofficial Members to represent the Asaba, Onitsha, Enugu, Owerri, and Port Harcourt "divisions" of Ibo-land, without further vacillations which might be embarrassing to Government in the long run. There are capable aboriginal Ibo folks to represent the above-named "divisions."

PILOT West Africa

THE LETTER of Captain Bertie Sachs of the R.A.M.C., who is serving in this country, which he wrote to his mother in South Africa and which was published in one of the papers in that country, as reproduced in this Newspaper, last Saturday, reflects a curious mentality.

Captain Sachs apparently wondered at the aspiration of the Native Nigerians towards higher administrative posts in the Civil Service, because that was not the practice in his adopted country, and that point so impressed him that he had to write to tell his mother. To him, also, Nigerian house servants appear to be bone-heads because they could not satisfy him.

Lagos

We do not necessarily quarrel with Captain Sachs for his impression, but we must insist that the Postal Censor should be more discreet about what he passes out of this country. Such letter as that of Captain Bertie is only good for propaganda purposes, and especial care should be taken with these South African folks.

FEB 23 1942

Why should Africans not aspire to higher administrative posts? Or why should that evidently surprise anybody? Relations within the Empire should be cordial, especially at this time of war, but apparent insults from one section to the other cannot bring this about and they should be discouraged at all cost.

Better Educational Policy

Pilot West Africa

VARIOUS Unofficial African Members of the Legislative Council, during the debate on the Appropriation Bill, stressed the importance which they attach to the provision of a better educational policy in this country, and they asked the Government to bend its energies to it without any more delay.

We associate ourselves with the views expressed by the representatives of the people, in this respect, and hope that the Government will note their criticisms of the educational policy, with a view to putting things straight when better times return. As the honourable members pointed out, there is more than one reason why there should be a change of outlook about education in Nigeria today.

If it is the real desire of the trustees to bring up Nigeria to the status of full manhood, in the shortest possible time, their chief weapon for doing so lies in universal and compulsory elementary education. If this had been provided for in peace time, the stupid reports and gossips quoted by speakers in the Legislative Council to press home their points would not have been able to thrive.

Lagos

Ignorance is always a fertile soil for disaffection and discontent. Where it abounds, it is always a hard job to uproot it and replace it with something better. But lack of education is the best soil for the growth of ignorance.

Prolonged Chieftaincy Disputes

West African Pilot

TODAY, in the Western Provinces of Nigeria, Ilaro and Ishara are two focal points where chieftaincy disputes continue to agitate the minds of the inhabitants, impeding their other efforts to adjust domestic questions. It also continues to affect their war efforts.

MAR 13 1942

In the former, the dispute had lasted for five years, and a good deal of money had been spent by the contending parties. Successive Administrative Officers have taken part in the solution, and yet the end seems not to be near. In the latter, almost the same thing has happened, reports upon reports on the issues involved having been made by District Officers and the paramount ruler in the administrative division.

After all these efforts had been spent, we hoped that decisions would be taken in consonance with the traditions of the people concerned, and also in compliance with the majority public opinion in the two places. But instead, the disputes continue unsettled and mischief makers and adventurers find good grounds for hunting.

It is time the Gordian Knots at Ilaro and Ishara were loosened in the interest of the people. We are sure that when these disputes are settled in accordance with the wish of the majority of the people, all the efforts of the inhabitants will be more concentrated on how to help to WIN the war.

2 African University Graduates Are Made Cadet Education Officers

West ~~African~~ Pilot

Messrs Titus Oluseye Ejiwunmi, B.Sc., and M R E Okorodudu, B.Sc., have, according to the latest issue of the "Nigeria Gazette," been promoted Cadet Education Officers.

Mr Ejiwunmi's promotion dates as from September 15, 1940, and Mr Okorodudu's as from January 2, 1942.

The two men who have been receiving expressions of congratulation, are ex-pupils of the Higher College, Yaba, where they specialised in teaching before proceeding on Government Scholarship to the United Kingdom, to complete their studies.

Mr Ejiwunmi went to England in the year 1937 to study in London University, after passing the Inter-B.Sc., and specialised in pure science.

He took his degree in two years, and spent an extra one year in a post-graduate course.

Lagovs

He returned here in 1941, and had since been a Master at the Higher College, Yaba.

MAR 2 - 1942

Mr Okorodudu went to England in 1938, also after passing the Inter-B.Sc., taking, as his speciality, Biology.

He returned early this year and has also become a Master at the Higher College.

Native Administration Service

MAR 14 1942

NATIVE Administration Teachers, Policemen, Warders and hospital staffs hold important positions and their conditions of service should claim equally important consideration. Their status is no less than those of their colleagues who are employed by the central Government, and they should be given equal opportunity.

West African Pilot

Instead of paying the teachers wages which have brought about complaints in the past, we recommend that these NA servants should be paid according to Government rates for its teachers who possess the required qualifications. As for Policemen, it is regretted that most of the guardians of the law in Native Administration employment do not possess the same training and education as those engaged by the Government, but all the same consideration should be given them.

West Africa

We advise that barracks for Policemen should be provided by the Native Administrations, as is done by the Government. Those who show aptitude should be given the necessary encouragement. As for Warders, the same conditions as Policemen occur and they should be given the same consideration and facilities. Hospital staffs should be provided with free accommodation and better conditions of service.

MAR 14 1942

If these things are done, we are sure that service in the Native Administrations will improve.

Cadet Education Officers

West African Pilot

ACCORDING to an announcement in the latest issue of the "Nigeria Gazette," Messrs T. Oluseye Ejiwunmi, B.Sc. (London), and M. E. R Okorodudu, B Sc. (London), have been appointed Cadet Education Officers. We know that this news will be welcomed in this country by those who have been watching what our Government would do for holders of Government scholarships who have proved their mettle.

1942 Lagos

It is regrettable that the men were alleged to have been offered £200 per annum and that they were not appointed Education Officers at once, as is done in the case of Europeans, but the future is full of possibilities, and it should be the avowed aim of our Government to remove any discrimination in the Civil Service. The more Africans are given their due, the more solid will be their faith in the sermonettes about Democracy.

WHITE LOOKS AT BLACK.

A Briton's Impressions.

APR 1 1 1942

By STEPHEN SANDWELL.

If anyone had told me a year ago that I should visit the West African coast as a member of a ship's crew during the second phase of the Great War, I should not have believed him. Nor should I have believed it possible to find contentment here. I had heard that the world was made in six days, and that Sierra Leone was left till last, and that it was Saturday afternoon.....

I have been disillusioned and pleasantly surprised. And I want to tell you about my first impressions in this article... Before I do that I must tell you how I came to sea.

They told me that everything came from the sea. So I came to sea for a while to draw close to the heart of things. Like so many others of the lost generation. I was baffled and bewildered in a world at war. I sat by my open hearth in a Kent cottage, twenty miles from the beginning of the rickety Nazi empire of the crooked cross. We kept open house to the men of the fighting forces. We were friends. They were Britain. Our conversation was of home and mothers and sweethearts. We talked of the past. And we talked of the future. These young men of Britain will have to make their own future. They will make a new Britain, a new world. We had begun to learn to kill and be killed about the time we were learning to shave. We fight for a better world while the old men and the old-minded men pooh-pooh our ideas. We have ideas and thoughts and we have feelings. We have wakened up to win the war. and we propose, with or without your permission, to stay awake after it. And to think a little during it.

And so, a year ago, the young men of Britain sat with me round my fireside. War clouds hung heavy over Europe. And as we talked I felt that I wanted something more than talk. I wanted to share the lives of these young Britons—to share their lives and to chronicle their deeds. But not as a man of arms. That I could never be. My life is set on a four dimensioned plane and my rule is No Arms: No Armour.

Nevertheless my outlook had changed. I felt I had outlived my London, with its theatres and cafes and clubs and my work in newspaperdom, I had written and talked of these things till both my mouth and pen were dry. I had also outlived, outwritten and outspoken our village and country. its people, its rivers, its streams, its soils, trees, birds hills and coasts. I was a writter with nothing more to write; I had used up all my copy. I needed new stimulation I imagined I would find it in America. They offered me a job in Kansas City. Or I would go to Califonia for the sunshine Then go perhaps to Tiber or ever sail to New Zealsnd with its honeyed soil and giant trees and great trout in the rivers.

I was undicided. I was frustrated,

Then I met a sailor in a train with a far-away look in his eyes. And I understood. When we arrived at the port town darkness was gathering and there was a mist and in the distance the soft murmur of the sea.

It was a call which could not be denied. I told my people. I told my friends. I told the Ministry of something. They expressed neither pleasure nor surprise. In two months I was at sea. bound for Africa. I was taken out of myself I was usefully occupied. I had a Minister's word for it that I was helping others to "prosecute" the war. I myself was merely observing and passing on. I received neither encouragement nor thanks—only further instructions when things went wrong.

It was with a great deal of pleasure that I viewed the idea of settling down on the ship. But I was never allowed to settle down. I was always getting new jobs and getting to know fresh side of the sailor's life and fresh insight into the sailor's habits. I could not get used th receiving no morning mail. And I could nor get used to seeing no morning press from London, I could nor get used to having no telephone. But my bed was confortable and the food plentiful. well cooked and excellently served.

Time went on—as time has a habit of doing—and we eventually arrived in Free town harbour and dropped anchor.

During the two months the ship has been there most of my time has been spent ashore.

On my first view I saw impressed, not so much by things as they are as by a vision of what they might become. It took me a long time to accustom myself to the slow pace of life. Everything moves so slowly. The whole atmosphere reminded me of living on a farm. The temp of the day is ruled by the goats which trot or is it stumble? about your street. Their was the first voice I heard in the morning and the last noise I heard before going to bed, Odd noises at night drove away sleep further than I had thought possible, Even silience long waited did not bring repose.

Altogether, Sierra Leone seems to be exactly what one maks it. But there is little privacy There may be solitude; but privacy no. Perhaps I have sought peace in the wrong places; perhaps my plunge was too sudden.

Many Freetown folk I found friendly and stimulating. Their conversation was intelligent and well-informed, thanks largely to the enterprise of a daily newspaper. the population is readily and steadily becoming a reading public and an educated community on an unexpected scale.

I found far too many cafes and far too few good ones, I saw far too many churches but very few full ones. And I discovered that things I need like watches and trypewriters and books were scanty beyond belief, Night descends with a suddenness that make me glad to shut out the bats and toad. But I soon discovered that one takes little notice of these things in West Africa. Even when a lizard landed on my pillow I was told to ignore it.

Then there is the problem of lighting. Kerosene Candles sound romantic, But their light is not good to read by nor is it very helpful to shave by, In many Freetown houses and every where I went in the bush I found my hand feeling automattcally for the switch and cursing

The Bush at night seemed to me one huge mass of astronomy and one large hum of insect life. Romance was more to be brought with you than to be found alread there, Cheerful compamionship was everything. Only with a friend did I feel alive. There was a strange, empty feeling in the air when I was alone

Native Affairs Commission

FEB 28 1942

In its annual report, recently presented before Parliament, the Native Affairs Commission issues a somewhat grave warning against the establishment of Bantu trade unions to provide redress against economic exploitation.

The Commission fears that a "semi-barbaric community," lacking acquaintance with the rudiments of economics, suddenly given the machinery that has proved such a blessing to the civilised world, might be led on to become a danger to their own selves. Fears are also expressed of these trade unions falling into the hands of unscrupulous Europeans or not responsible African leadership.

Brighter prospects and better security, the Commission feels, are provided in the evolving machinery of wage determination and other social legislation.

Whilst it cannot be denied that recent wage determinations have brought relief to certain classes of African workers, it still remains true that a very large bulk of them remain beyond the scope of these determinations. Whilst this development necessarily has to make gradual progress, farm and mine labourers and domestic servants do not have very rosy hopes of finding much relief with its help from heavy economic demands made on them by their rising standard of living. Whilst the slow evolutionary movement of wage determination takes form, it would be unfair to expect starving people to have no other means of redress. Rather should the Commission advocate closer co-operation between European and Bantu trade unions. The problem has its own peculiar difficulties, but these are not insurmountable.

The Commission speaks of African loyalty in the most eulogistic terms. It is gratifying to note this in the report. It is indicative of White appreciation of African good will even in difficult times.

Throughout the report, however, there is an unfortunate and insistent clinging to the notion of segregation remaining the mainstay of national policy. This is regrettable, particularly when the Prime Minister himself has given pronouncement to his belief that "segregation has fallen on evil days."

FEB 2 8 1942

The Commission is aware of the inevitable failure of economic segregation. Reserves are poor and overcrowded, industry is inviting Africans to towns and better conditions. The latter, the Commission fears, will constitute a very serious threat to Segregation. It is most unfortunate that African progress and South Africa's industrial development should be hampered by the fear of the African rising to a higher plain. It is to be deplored that the Commission has lent itself to the exposition of a fixed policy opposed to the inevitable development that must come to South Africa. The Commission appears to look with a sulk on the industrial development of this country, as it sounds the deathknell of Segregation.

The Native Affairs Commission was created at a time when other ideas on Native policy prevailed. In the present changed situation, its difficulties have to be understood in their proper perspective. It would be a gesture welcome among the Bantu community and in keeping with the spirit of the Atlantic Charter if the Government appointed a Parliamentary representative of the Bantu on the Native Affairs Commission. That would broaden its outlook and make Col. Reitz's idea of co-operation a reality.

Finally, it would be a step forward, at once in accord with the Prime Minister's declaration that European contact must be a blessing and not a blight for South Africa, if the Native Affairs Commission was composed of men free from political party ties. As long as political considerations dominate the Commission, its work shall remain hampered and it shall be unable to serve the country impartially and to the best of its ability.

MEN AND MATTERS

THE ANGLO-ETHIOPIAN TREATY. After many months of anxious waiting, we are at length pleased to announce the fact that the Anglo-Ethiopian Treaty has at length been sealed, signed, and delivered. At this writing the information at our disposal does not warrant a complete review of the current and future benefit to Ethiopia which Africans the world over are expecting to accrue from this historic document. We are, however, informed that the total independence of Ethiopia will in no wise be affected by the agreement by which normal diplomatic relations will be restored and that there is a military convention by which provisions will be made between Great Britain and Ethiopia, and by which the United Kingdom will provide Military assistance in the reorganisation of the armed forces of Ethiopia. Meanwhile, Mr. R. G. Howe is reported to be immediately proceeding to Addis Ababa as His Britanic Majesty's Minister. The Emperor's request for British Official Administrative Assistance for reconstructive purposes is also receiving the active consideration of the Government at Westminster. According to our information the agreement will remain valid for a period of two years. Inasmuch as reconstruction cannot be effected without financial aid, the British Government will finance the Emperor's reconstruction plan, during the first year, to the extent of one and a half million pounds, and one million pounds during the second year. It is obvious that owing to strategic conditions, in which Great Britain is vitally interested, the military convention which has been signed, provides for such British military forces as may be necessary for the maintainance of Ethiopian independence. The Administration of the Ethiopian Courts will be aided by some British Judges. Slavery in Ethiopia will also be totally abolished. It will be seen by the foregoing that the Emperor of Ethiopia is, with British aid, determined to introduce those vitally necessary reforms which he had previously planned but had been obstructed by many of his visionless Chiefs and the invasion of his country by the Italian adventurer who is currently experiencing the first fruits of his ruthless adventures. Meanwhile, it is devoutly to be hoped that Africans of vision and industrial capacity added to administrative experience will extend every possible aid towards the rebuilding of an ancient Empire to which, ethically at least, they possess some claim. For, the period has arrived when the Black and the Brown descendants of Mother Africa must awake and contribute their industrial, financial and intellectual quotas to the ressurrection of that Ancient African Empire which should prove the rallying point of All Africans who have something of value to contribute to an Ethiopia which has stretched forth her hand to an all-Beholding God!

African Labour Conscription

Points from Kenya Committee's Report

APR 1 6 1942

"THE WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE we received indicated that if regulations for compulsory service were on the Statute Book it would not be necessary to invoke them to any considerable extent. The view was again and again expressed that the mere fact of such regulations being in existence would be sufficient to secure an adequate supply of labour, and instances were given of Natives seeking work voluntarily to avoid the Government-assisted scheme of recruitment."

APR 1 6 1942

In those words the Committee appointed by the Governor of Kenya "to inquire into the question of the introduction of conscription of African labour for essential services" epitomises its attitude to the matter on which it was invited to tender advice.

Mr. Walter Harragin, then Attorney-General and Director of Man-Power, was Chairman of the Committee, the other members of which were Mr. A. E. Hamp, Acting General Manager of the Kenya and Uganda Railways and Harbours; Mr. P. de V. Allen, Labour Commissioner; Mr. H. R. Montgomery, Deputy Director of Man-Power, and a former Chief Native Commissioner; Archdeacon W. E. Owen; Major C. M. Taylor; Mr. W. A. C. Bouwer, M.L.C.; and Mr. W. H. Billington, J.P.

The temporary scheme of assisted recruitment, which provided between 12,000 and 15,000 additional workers during the last three or four months of 1941, and which had virtually ceased to function, was considered to have inherent objections.

Pleads Cause Of 30,000 Persons Of African Descent

MAY 2 - 1942

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.— Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, head of the department of sociology, Atlanta University and editor of PHYLON, lectured last week at Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, New York; and at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. At Vassar he spoke on "The Future of Africa In America" and emphasized the part of the thirty million persons of African descent on the American continent.

He pointed out that the whole religious and scientific opposition to Negro equality has evaporated and that today there are Negroes measuring up to the best of American culture.

"While the average of the culture among Negroes is lower than that among whites, nevertheless, the Negro is increasingly demanding equality of treatment and must be granted this if democracy triumphs," he declared.

CONDUCTS CLASS MAY 2 1942

At Yale he conducted Professor Kennedy's class on "American Society"; then after a dinner given by the Graduate Club, he addressed the Club and its friends on THE FUTURE OF EUROPE IN AFRICA.

He stressed the fact that the world has invested in Africa, six thousand five hundred million dollars in capital since the first World War and that Africa was exporting, before the opening of this war seven hundred million dollars worth of exports annually.

"This makes Africa an important part of the world economy; and yet in the current plans and discussions for peace, nothing is said about Africa," he added.

"On the contrary, England has made Ethiopia not independent, but really a British Protectorate," he asserted.

"She has granted no further democratic powers to the peoples of West Africa, while ten million Negroes in South Africa are being held in subjection to three million whites," he charged. MAY 2 - 1942

He declared that unless plans are made for inducting Africa into the New World democracy, there can be no permanent peace.

SATURDAY, FEB. 21, 1942

"Independent" Ethiopia

FEB 21 1942

Abyssinia, according to British Government spokesmen is now a free sovereign country, with the Emperor at the head. An agreement between Abyssinia and Great Britain provides for the assistance of the former by Great Britain and advisers in this connection have already been appointed.

As an indication of the Emperor's earnest to democratise his country, he has issued a decree abolishing slavery in Abyssinia whilst he has contributed an armed force to help the Democracies.

That Abyssinia has been the first country to have its independence restored is a fact that will be generally warmly received by the African communities all over the world. But then, in spite of all Great Britain's magnanimity in this connection, the agreement has a clause which raises great anxiety in the African mind. Italian property in Abyssinia will be safeguarded by Great Britain to be returned to our enemies when the war is over, property to the value of £80,000,000. FEB 21 1942

The country has been "magnanimously" given its "independence." It has been said in the British Parliament that there are elements in South Africa which would not countenance the establishment of an independent Black State in Africa, but the restoration to Italians of the right of domicile in Abyssinia by liberal Great Britain has quite sinister forebodings for the intended "security" and "independence" of Abyssinia. It will be a "friendly" arrangment which will place the Negus in quite a difficult position when it is remembered that it is these very Italians who fought and dethroned the very Emperor now "restored" by Britain.

When Queen Wilhelmina is restored to her throne in Holland, are we going to witness German establishments in Holland guaranteed to Hitler's robbers by Great Britain and Queen Wilhelmina forced by her own Ally and friend to recognise them ? What Geneva is notorious for must not be repeated at this critical time of the War. It is no more a question of colour.

However, Haile Selassie must be finding cold comfort in the knowledge that he will be expected to protect £80,000,000 of Italian property and at the same time protect those Italians who will be undermining his authority in an endeavour to return Abyssinia to Italian sovereignty. In the mean time he will keep safe Italian property (whilst he fights them) when it is all over he will return it to them to give them another start against him. Why not expropriate it and pay the owners compensation ? That is decent enough.

We shall, however, see what we shall see.

AFRICA

New U. S. A.?

Intelligence from Africa, as reported by TIME's resident correspondent on the Gold Coast, Henry B. Cole:

"After this war, if I say 'Hello chappie, I'm for the U.S.A.,' don't think I'm referring to New York or don't think my kit is packed for any other part of Uncle Sam's domain. APR 13 1942

"By Golly, no! You'd better ask me what I mean. Then I'll tell you I refer to the United States of Africa. Well, don't knock your head off. It's not my idea, anyway. It's General Smuts's.

"Addressing forces of the Union of South Africa recently, whilst on a tour in the East, General Smuts told the men that they were building 'a greater South Africa which will ultimately stand foremost in a U.S. of Africa.' APR 13 1942

"Has the pattern been made clear? Sure. It's by no means fanciful. The spectacle is a worldwide association of kindred states deliberately aiming at decentralization, but also at local and regional collaboration. . . . It would also provide a model for the rest of the world in the difficult days of post-war reconstruction—if and only if South Africans accept the Rooseveltian slogan of 'no color bar.'*

"The transformation of a Union of South Africa into a U.S. of Africa is a task which General Smuts is capable of undertaking with a view to give Europe a lesson."

This American Negro Set South Africa Back on Its Heels and Made History

By Mike Quin

(Special to the Daily Worker)

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., May 3.—"There were lots of demonstrations in Bombay," said Luchell McDaniel. "Lots of them. There was a demonstration for defense against Japanese invasion. There was a demonstration for Indian independence. And there were others. But the biggest demonstration of all was just the big demonstration of poor people begging for bread. And it went on all the time."

In those few words he told the whole story of the Indian dilemma.

This was India seen through the eyes of an American Negro who fought valiantly against fascism in Spain and who is now risking his life again carrying the cargoes of democracy as a seaman, not to earn a living, but because "I hate fascism and I know that it represents everything that oppresses my people and blocks the road to their freedom."

Luchell is a soldier and a realist. He can view the disadvantages without dismay. He knows the complications of the struggle to which he has pledged his life and is not confused.

"There are 150,000 people in Bombay," he said, "who have never slept in a house. They were born in the streets and they live in the streets begging for crusts of bread. If they stop begging they'll starve. How can they think of defense?

PUT GUNS IN THEIR HANDS

"But those Indian people who do have something to eat are thinking plenty about defense and doing everything they can. But they've got to have guns in their hands. You can't fight the Japanese just with your hands.

"Everywhere among these people they are talking about Russia and admiring Russia. They credit Russia with the saving of democracy."

In Durbin South Africa, the next port of call, Luchell and the other Negro crew members experienced something that required a strong mind to cope with.

ROTTENEST PLACE IN WORLD

"I saw my people living like animals and treated like dogs," he said, "while the white people lived on their backs. South Africa is the rottenest place in the world.

"They couldn't walk on the sidewalk, they couldn't go in the buildings, they couldn't even sit on chairs.

"The Woolworth Co. has a big store there, a block square and 14 stories high. I walked in there and pulled a sit down strike when they wouldn't serve me. I yelled out that I was an American and this was an American store and that Negroes were fighting in this war for democracy.

"They sure got excited. I sat down there and demanded to be waited on and said I would sit there forever until I got equal rights. And I got them.

"They are scared in South Africa. They were desperately trying to get ready for defense, and how could they when 80 per cent of the population is Negro? They don't include the Negroes in defense.

"They are scared, and when I said I was an American and demanded American treatment, they said, 'Since you are an American sailor we will give it to you.'

"Later I went to a movie. I was the first Negro who had ever been in there and they didn't dare keep me out. I was sitting in the middle of the house and when the lights went on at one time they all saw me and there was almost a panic. But I stuck there. I stood up for human rights.

A PEACEFUL RAID

MAY 4 1942

"Some of the other Negroes on board didn't come out so good and were not allowed anywhere. So next day we raided the town. We were not tough or violent. But it was a raid just the same.

"We organized every Negro on the ship and every guy who looked like a Negro and went ashore in a body. We went right down the line, one place after another—told them we were Americans sailing a ship to help win a war for democracy and human rights, and demanded to be treated as human beings.

"We didn't threaten or get tough. We talked about the war—talked about their own danger and the importance of people standing together to fight fascism.

"They served us every place we went. They looked worried and confused, but they served us.

"Nothing like this ever happened in Durbin before. I think it did them good. From then on we had our rights and we kept them.

"The other fellows on the ship—the white fellows—liked what we did. They were proud of us. It made us all feel a little better.

"But to see your people living like that is hard. When we got to Cape Town, none of the Negroes went ashore. We could have all right. But we were too heart-sick. We didn't want to see our people like that any more.

"From there we went to Trinidad where the Axis submarine shelled the harbor while we were lying there, but didn't hit us.

"When we got to New York I paid off the ship and bought a train ticket to Lumberton, Mississippi, my home. I hadn't been there in sixteen years and there were the greatest changes.

"For one thing I had a pullman ticket through the South, and such a thing for a Negro was unheard of when I was there before.

"I was treated with the greatest courtesy in the world by black and white people alike not only in Lumberton but in other places. I spoke to twelve white audiences on the war question at their invitation, and I talked to them about how things like the poverty in Bombay and the treatment of my people in South Africa endanger all of us, black and white alike.

"I told them how we can't live like that. It won't work. I told them how we have to stand together and build human brotherhood and they applauded.

MAY 4 - 1942

LINE IS FADING

"Things weren't all changed, but they were different. The old dividing line which used to split the town into black and white had disappeared. Negroes could go uptown or anywhere and attend the movies. Black and white sat in different sections and that is not right either. But before they could not be in the same building.

"I thought maybe these changes were because of the war, but Pop said no. Pop said it had been changing right along—that the war changed it still more, but it was going on before that.

"When I left Lumberton Negro and white people came together to see me off, and we were all together on the platform equal and friendly.

"It made me feel happy. There is such a long way to go. Things aren't right by any means. Jim Crow is still on the loose. But it made me feel we're at least pointed in the right direction."

San Francisco is Luchell's adopted home. Here he numbers his friends in the hundreds, black and white—black and white together and equal, not separated.

Of his return here he says: "People don't seem to take the war seriously enough. They don't seem like they realize there's a war going on here, which is a mistake."

Like all the other fellows I've written of (and this may be getting monotonous but it's the plain, honest truth) Luchell is down on the front right now signing up to carry another cargo for democracy—and damn the torpedoes.

MAY 4 - 1942

He's willing to sail dynamite through hell to see his people and all other people united in friendship.

He fought fascism with hand grenades in Spain and gained the fabulous nickname of Fantastico for his bravery. He fought fascism in the streets of America, and now he's fighting it on the seas.

Without forgetting to be ashamed of our shortcomings, we Americans have a lot to be proud of.

We've got guys like Luchell, for instance.

Mr. C. Enitan Brown Addresses L.T.C. African Workers' Union

The Comet — Nigeria

On the occasion of the presentation of Registration Certificate to the Lagos Town Council African Workers' Union, Mr. Cuthbert E. Brown gave the following address :—

Chairman, Town Councillors, Fellow Trade Unionists, ladies and gentlemen. My advice to you is: Co-operate.

First of all, let me address myself to the Lagos Town Council Workers' Union.

JAN 7 1942

The Lagos Town Council Workers' Union is strongly advised to adhere to the task it has set before itself to perform, as read to this gathering by the General Secretary under Aims and Objects of the Union.

My next advice is almost unnecessary. It is that you should maintain the standard of efficiency of members of your Union.

I support the views of your President that your Certificate would be used as a tool and not as a weapon.

I direct the attention of your Union's Executives to that portion of His Excellency's broadcast talk of November 20, 1941 where he pointed out what their duties should be. I advise your Executives to carry out that advice as strictly as possible.

I understand that the term Trade Union is applicable both to Union of employees as well as to Federation of employers. As such, I advise that Trade Union which is known as the Lagos Town Council, on your behalf, to reciprocate your good intentions. I notice among the objects of your Union you pledge yourselves to be loyal to the Lagos Town Council Authority or Authorities and the Government.

One good turn deserves another. At the risk of being branded an extremist, I advise you to leave no stone unturned when you are requesting either the Lagos Town Council Authorities or the Government for improved conditions of service and better pay. One important note I feel it is my privilege to strike this afternoon, and it is this: The Lagos Town Council may safely be regarded as part and parcel of the Nigerian Government. Ask me why? Because the President of the Lagos Town Council is the Commissioner of the Colony who is a very very high Government Official.

To-day, every intelligent person has realised that the Nigerian Railway is a full-fledged Goverment Department. This fact has been amply borne out by the grant of concessions made personally by His Excellency the Governor to members of the Railway Workers' Union with retrospective effect from October 1, 1941.

I advise the Lagos Town Council Workers' Union to hope that similar, if not better concessions will be granted to its members without having to stage a trade dispute, necessarily, before such concessions are granted. I advise you to believe that the Lagos Town Council Authorities are more willing to grant you those concessions than you are to press for them.

West Africa

I advise your Union as well as all other Trade Unions present here this afternoon, whether they are Trade Unions of employees or of employers to regard victimisation, intimidation and other mean and underhand trick as things belonging to the limbo of the forgotten past.

I advise your Union to regard any person who still believes in those vices as a safe instrument of management, supervision or control as being very very unwise.

I say this because His Excellency the Governor, the father of Trade Unionism in Nigeria and Supreme Head of all employers and employees in the Nigeria Civil Service, minced no words when he declared:-

"Trade Unions in Nigeria are of fairly recent growth, but they have already gone a good way further than in a great many other Colonies where they have been in existence longer. Their institution has, of course, been warmly encouraged by the Government which realised that in the long run they will benefit not only employees but also employers and the Government.

An African proverb says, "He who has a champion need not do the fighting himself." To which I add this English proverb : A champion needs the confidence of his group. Is it not hindering the good work and its attendant mutually beneficial results which are in sight, if any employer either directly or indirectly through agents should seek to victimise, intimidate or use any other underhand and mean trick to impose his 'Ego sum' er "I am" on any member or officer of the Trade Union of his employers?

Trade Unions of employees and employers had better find bases of agreement and strive earnestly and sincerely to co-operate.

Kindness is a basic law to be observed in practising the art of "operation.

JAN 7 1942

I advise you to note that the art of co-operation, like any other art, can, and will produce finished articles which are pleasant to behold provided three important conditions are fulfilled.

1. Conscious application of all the skill which the artist has previously acquired through experience; through long practice, through diligent study and through carefully planned schooling.

2. Respect for other people's convinctions; the customs of all other peoples and just aspirations of all classes of men and women who constitute an Association or Union of whites, blacks, or yellows.

3. Courtesy to the labourer in tattered trappings: to the stranger within your gates, and vice versa, to the way to advise that side by side with the existing machineries of conciliation and of arbitration a machinery of mass education for Trade Union members should be created in this country by Government ?

It is easy to go on advising. But is it as easy to carry out an advice ? As a Trade Unionist myself I cannot escape sharing in the task which I have set up for local Trade Unions to perform.

JAN 7 1942

With co-operation firmly rooted between employers and employees, the slogan "equal opportunities for all" will sound sweet in all ears.

I cannot do better than wind up this short address by passing on the words of Hon. C. E. Rooke, General Manager of the Nigerian Railway to you all.

To the Lagos Town Council Workers' Union, he says 'softly, softly catching monkey.'

To the Lagos Town Council Authorities he says, " I know not discrimination of colour class or creed. The only discrimination I known is of brain, character and ability." Merit should be duly rewarded.

Respect and courtesy, to be of value, must be mutually observed.

A son's advice to his father is known to be beneficial and necessary for the common good of the family on occasions. This is one such occasion. Resort to litigation produces an unpleasant experience.

Any sin of omission or of commission which gives rise to it, is looked upon with disfavour by local Trade Unions. Such sin as Strike or Look out, for instance. My advice is that the L T C Workers Union and the L T C Authorities should strive hard to make such sins mutually exclusive from their social relationship

Mutual understanding develops friendship. Lawsuits breed mutual hatred. This is why I venture to suggest that, as far as Trade Unions are related to Government, less emphasis should be laid on legislation. More emphasis should be laid on education. As Government does realise that in the long run the institution of Trade Unions out here will benefit not only employees but also employers and the Government, is it out of the rank and file of manual workers, to the stream of clerks and messagers; to high placed officials as well as to the underdog in your Department, particularly and in this vast Dependency, generally.

Finally, I advise you very seriously to remember always that we all spring from one common origin, travelling in the same direction towards the same end—the all important achievement of getting deserved reward for services rendered in the Labour Camp of this country and in other spheres of life.

Science teaches us further that there is courtesy due even to the meanest creature, so that not willingly should we see an insect suffer, nor treat without consideration a stray dog in an alleyway, nor root up growing things want only.

If we must so highly regard inhabitants of the animal and plant kingdom, how much more must we be sympathetic and considerate to our fellow creatures.

WHY CRIPPS FAILED

APR 18 1942

Pittsburgh Courier

The high hopes with which the British Tories sent Sir Stafford Cripps to India with its bogus "some-of-these-days" independence offer have been dashed by the astute leaders of the Indian people.

Pittsburgh, Pa

It is a favorite trick of the world's imperialists to get some fake liberal or former radical to woo aroused peoples when it is suddenly discovered that these despised folk are needed to save investments.

The Indian leaders remembering similar promises of "after-the-war" dominion status during the last World War, were not taken in by the "new" proposals, especially when there was insistence that defense authority be left in British hands.

The rule of India, like that of other colonies, is based on military force, and when that force remains in the hands of alien rulers there can be no real independence nor successful defense against foreign invaders, as recently demonstrated in Malaya, Burma and Java.

The British investment in India is around eight billion dollars from which an annual profit of $900,000,000 is realized, enabling a large majority of the British Tory class to live in luxury while (according to Sir James Grigg, finance member of the Indian government) the annual per capita income in India is three cents a day.

SLEEPWALKING IN INDIA

If the problem of India can still be solved, the solution can rest only on a candid recognition of the factors that have led to the present impasse. The responsibility for the breakdown of negotiations is many-sided. Long ago the British people should have recognized the urgency of the Indian problem. The kind of proposal just taken to India by Sir Stafford Cripps should have been taken, at the latest, when the war broke out with Nazi Germany. Then there would have been time for the adjustment of misunderstandings and differences. The British made the error of waiting until the enemy was at India's very gates.

But now that the offer has been made and rejected, the American people, and even the peoples of India themselves, have a sharper knowledge of the inherent difficulties and complexities of the problem. It is not simply a question, as many Americans supposed and as some Indian leaders still pretend, of whether "the people of India" should be given their "freedom." India is a maze of vertical and horizontal divisions. How can one find a solution that will satisfy at once the provinces under representative rule and the states under local princes; the upper castes and the Untouchables; the Hindus and the Moslems? Whatever questions may be raised regarding their details, no one can question the sincerity of the proposals brought by Sir Stafford Cripps. The fact that the All-India Congress party rejected the proposals chiefly because they seemed to make non-accession for a province too easy, while the Moslem League rejected them because they seemed to make non-accession too difficult, is itself an indication of the effort of the British to adopt the fairest compromise.

Though the British proposals are doubtless subject to later discussion, criticism and adjustment, common sense would dictate their acceptance on at least a provisional basis. There is a disheartening unreality in the response of some of the Indian leaders. The reply of the All-India Congress party, for example, is an insistence on points that have now become academic. It consists of the repetition of slogans that have suddenly lost their meaning. Indian leaders who have had no experience or training whatever in the matter insist that they be placed in immediate charge of defense. They talk of the "freedom of India," when, unless they cooperate fully with England and the United Nations, this may mean today nothing more than the freedom to be conquered. They choose a time when all of India may be reduced to slavery by Japan and Germany to insist on the immediate democratization of the states under the Indian princes They have been trained in the habits of protest, and seem unable to change quickly enough to the habits of responsibility.

Strange as the notion may seem to them, many of the Indian leaders, together with their practices and philosophies, are the products of English liberty. The very principles to which they are now appealing were developed by the great English liberals. Appeals to such principles move only a people who themselves profess them. It is true that the English have at times put leaders like Gandhi and Nehru in jail, but under the all-embracing despotism of Hitler or the Japanese, the Gandhis and Nehrus would never be heard of. The philosophy of non-resistance works only against a ruler with a conscience. Under the Nazis or the Japanese, such a philosophy could not get itself preached. We may be sure that German and Japanese publishers would not be printing any Indian works of protest.

Contrast the situation in India with that in the Balkan States. The British Government is pleading with the people of India to defend themselves in their own interest. In the Balkans Hitler is now engaged in forcing the Bulgarians, as he has forced other Balkan peoples, to fight on his side in a war in which they have nothing to gain and everything to lose. He can do this because he has gained life and death power over the Bulgarian leaders, and they know he will not hesitate to use it. Neither Hitler nor the Japanese would ever make India anything approaching so reasonable a set of proposals as Sir Stafford Cripps has just made; but in behalf of whatever proposal they did make, they would not hesitate to murder thousands of hostages to make sure that it was carried out.

Only by now surmounting their habit of past distrust of the British can the Indian leaders face squarely the present reality of the threat of invasion and conquest by Japan.

GREAT BRITAIN AND INDIA

Britain's offer of post-war settlement of India's problems has been rejected by the responsible leadership of both Moslems and Hindus. Thus Sir Stafford Cripps's mission came to naught after three weeks of active negotiations in New Delhi. The colored world watched with unparalleled interest every stage in the development of the British plan for the final liberation of India's millions. For, the ultimate outcome of these negotiations which are bound to be renewed, will provide a definite gauge as to the extent Anglo Saxon world is prepared to extend democracy to the darker races held at bay through one technique or another.

If outright dominion status is granted India—not in the form of a "post-dated check" as Gandhi put it—but at once, it would be an unmistakable indication that Great Britain has come to the belated realization that white rule or supremacy is no longer tenable in a world in which the much dreaded conflict of color looms more and more ominously on the horizon.

Oddly enough the British plan for India's liberation is being hastened now more by pressure of Japanese bayonets than by India's passive resistance. The loss of the Malayan campaign with all the attendant racial consequences has shaken the very structure of British colonial administration and has caused British authorities to re-examine their policy in the light of a new order that is being ushered by the onrushing events of a global conflict.

England, of course, is pressing for a post-war settlement of the Indian problem for fear that Africa and the West Indies might articulate their demands for similar consideration and treatment before the fortunes of this war are decided. And, if America finds it expedient to support the British position, it is because our government is fearful of the emotional reaction which an immediate settlement of the Indian problem would have on the Negroes of this country. The effect of such a settlement would unquestionably heighten the Negro people's hope for a solution of their own problems while giving added impetus to the mass movement for political, economic and social equality.

If Britain solves the Indian problem with dignity and equity, America will gather considerable moral encouragement to solve her own Negro problem with dignity and equity. The two issues are not wholly unrelated. They involve human rights, democratic freedom, natural aspirations. In so far as they represent these things, they share a common cause, a common ideal. To delay facing them is to postpone the inevitable, for the world of color will not long endure the yoke of white oppression and domination.

AFRICANS NEED MORE LAND, MORE WAGES, MORE SOCIAL SERVICES

An Impressive Deputation

(BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.,)

IN Parliament, these days, the Budget debate on the Opposition side, becomes less and less a criticism of the organisation and financing of Government, and more and more a continuation of the general stream of talks on the "folly" of the Government's entry into the war and the "persecution" of the "Africaner volk" through the Government's internment policy.

MAR 4 1942

This year, Mr. Werth, the Hereinigde Party's shadow Minister of Finance, assured this direction to the debate which took up the four Government business days last week, by prefacing his lengthy amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply by another demand that we should pull out of the war now; and any slight tendency the Opposition might have had to argue the later parts of his amendment dealing with work and wages was finally smothered by one of Mr. Pirow's periodic irruptions into the House, this time with a motion asking for the adjournment of the House to debate, as a matter of national importance and urgency, the treatment meted out to interned Afrikaners in our gaols and prison camps.

AFRIKANER INTERNEES

Fortunately Mr. Speaker did not grant Mr. Pirow's request. Instead, he told Mr. Pirow that he could find ample time and opportunity for all he wanted to say in this matter in the budget debate itself.

In the speeches that followed from all sections of the Oppositions, the burden of the complaint was that Afrikaners imprisoned for what in the eyes of the Opposition is the negligible if not the commendable offence of being enemies of their country, are being treated "worse than Kaffirs."

In the descriptions of that treatment that accompanied this accusation lies the best proof of the long standing necessity for reform of our penal system—and on the strength of their remarks last week, the Opposition ought to be the strongest supporters of such reform.

HOUSE LISTENS TO NATIVE CLAIMS

For the rest, in the welter of matters affecting their constituencies for which members hope to get a hearing in the Budget debate, the interests of the Africans were mainly the concern of the Natives Representatives. The House, however, gave a sympathetic hearing to our claims, particularly is this true of Mr. Hemming's appeal for the resumption of the purchase of land. Mr. Hemming supported this appeal with very telling figures from the recent report on overstocking in the Transkei, the congestion of population on the available land, and made a case which the Minister of Finance will find difficult to, answer.

Mr. Molteno used the debate to press again the urgent need of old age and disability pensions, and of a national poor law which will assume the same responsibility for the African as for all other sections of the community.

I took the opportunity offered by the Railway budget and the absence of any promise from the Minister of Railways of further improvement in the still very low wage rates of Non-European workers, in spite of his huge surpluses, to protest against the failure of the Government to maintain the standards set for private employers by the Wage Board.

I also questioned the foundation of schemes of cost of living allowances which give least to those who earn least and therefore need most, and permit the Government here too to pay less than private employers are called on to pay.

THE SENATE IN ACTION AGAIN

The Senate has returned to work with an excess of energy derived, no doubt, from its long rest. Indeed, it promises to be very busy in the near future. Next week it is to sit for two evenings, as well as every afternoon. It will be concerned not only with private members motions and other business, but will also debate the votes for Departmental administration under special motions by the Ministers concerned. Already it has discussed the vote for Posts and Telegraphs, when Senator Rheinallt Jones had a good deal to say on the complaints by Africans as to the treatment meted out to them in Post Offices and other public offices.

On a motion by Senator Sydney Smith, Labour Senator for Natal, calling upon the Minister of Railways and the Government generally to pay living wages to its African employees, both Senator Malcomess and Senator Brookes presented facts and figures to show just how far Government falls behind private employers in the wage and other conditions of employment of its African employees. On another occasion, they told the Minister of Railways of the difficulties experienced by Africans in getting food or other attention on the Railways and asked that trains should carry non-European attendants.

IMPRESSIVE DEPUTATION MEETS DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

MAR 4 1942

But the centre of interest for all of us last week was undoubtedly the very impressive deputation from the Natives Representative Council and the National Congress received by Deputy Prime Minister, Colonel Denys Reitz. For one whole day, this deputation sat in conference ary for Native Affairs, and with the Minister and the Secretary for Native Affairs, and which the African people feel so strongly—education, conditions of military service, the recognition of trade unions, social services—and did so with a precision and a pointedness that reflected their growing experience in public affairs.

This was quite the most efficient, hopeful and encouraging meeting of its kind in the experience of all of us.

The members of the Deputation are to be congratulated both on the amount of hard work and organisation put into the preparation and presentation of their case and on the self-imposed discipline which enabled them to get through so much in the time.

Shooting Of Africans

The use of firearms against Africans has become almost a daily occurrence of late, and in many instances of such cases neither motive of gain nor any reasonable provocation is evident.

Just the other week-end it was reported in the press that a certain Mr. Coen Van Der Merwe, of the Winterton area, was charged before the Assistant Magistrate, Mr. B. C. Harris, with having shot at two Natives on January 22.

It was alleged that the Natives, who were employed by Mr. Stockel, were in the habit of passing through his lands on a path to and fro from their work. On this occasion Van der Merwe stopped them and ordered them back, and, it is stated, fired three shots at them.

He was found guilty and sentenced to a fine of £10 or 14 days' imprisonment.

Another European was accused recently of firing a shot and hitting a Native through the lower jaw. The Native after falling to the ground got up and ran away and discovered he was bleeding from a wound in his lower jaw. This European is said to have called out his name and went after him, telling him he was only trying to scare him.

The Native said in court that he and this European had no ill-feeling towards one another in the past.

These are just a few but typical instances of outrages of this kind. What is more disquieting is to observe that public opinion is not only indifferent to this sort of thing but indirectly approves of it. We read recently in the European press that a petition praying for the release of a certain Mr. Marthinus Lourens, recently sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment on a charge of culpable homicide in regard to the death of a Native, is being signed in Christiana.

There is evidently a dangerous element in this country which regards the life of an African of less importance even than that of a beast. These people will brook not the slightest protest from an African, and if he dares make one he will surely be dispatched without ceremony with a bullet. Some will shoot at an African out of sheer sport so low in their esteem is the life of a black man. In the event of one being called to account he is not ashamed to plead that he thought an African was a baboon or a monkey, or that he merely shot in innocent play!

The African has profound respect for the white man's law and justice, and he can only hope that the judiciary in this country will take a serious view of these cases. The life of a black man is just as sacred as of any other human being.

Native Affairs Commission

56

In its annual report, recently presented before Parliament, the Native Affairs Commission issues a somewhat grave warning against the establishment of Bantu trade unions to provide redress against economic exploitation.

The Commission fears that a "semi-barbaric community," lacking acquaintance with the rudiments of economics, ~~suddenly~~ given the machinery that has proved such a blessing to the civilised world, might be led on to become a danger to their own selves. Fears are also expressed of these trade unions falling into the hands of unscrupulous Europeans or not responsible African leadership.

Brighter prospects and better security, the Commission feels, are provided in the evolving machinery of wage determination and other social legislation.

Whilst it cannot be denied that recent wage determinations have brought relief to certain classes of African workers, it still remains true that a very large bulk of them remain beyond the scope of these determinations. Whilst this development necessarily has to make gradual progress, farm and mine labourers and domestic servants do not have very rosy hopes of finding much relief with its help from heavy economic demands made on them by their rising standard of living. Whilst the slow evolutionary movement of wage determination takes form, it would be unfair to expect starving people to have no other means of redress. Rather should the Commission advocate closer cooperation between European and Bantu trade unions. The problem has its own peculiar difficulties, but these are not insurmountable.

The Commission speaks of African loyalty in the most eulogistic terms. It is gratifying to note this in the report. It is indicative of White appreciation of African good will even in difficult times.

Throughout the report, however, there is an unfortunate and insistent clinging to the notion of segregation remaining the mainstay of national policy. This is regrettable, particularly when the Prime Minister himself has given pronouncement to his belief that "segregation has fallen on evil days."

The Commission is aware of the inevitable failure of economic segregation. Reserves are poor and overcrowded, industry is inviting Africans to towns and better conditions. The latter, the Commission fears, will constitute a very serious threat to Segregation. It is most unfortunate that African progress and South Africa's industrial development should be hampered by the fear of the African rising to a higher plain. It is to be deplored that the Commission has lent itself to the exposition of a fixed policy opposed to the inevitable development that must come to South Africa. The Commission appears to look with a sulk on the industrial development of this country, as it sounds the deathknell of Segregation.

The Native Affairs Commission was created at a time when other ideas on Native policy prevailed. In the present changed situation, its difficulties have to be understood in their proper perspective. It would be a gesture welcome among the Bantu community and in keeping with the spirit of the Atlantic Charter if the Government appointed a Parliamentary representative of the Bantu on the Native Affairs Commission. That would broaden its outlook and make Col. Reitz's idea of co-operation a reality.

FEB 28 1942

Finally, it would be a step forward, at once in accord with the Prime Minister's declaration that European contact must be a blessing and not a blight for South Africa, if the Native Affairs Commission was composed of men free from political party ties. As long as political considerations dominate the Commission, its work shall remain hampered and it shall be unable to serve the country impartially and to the best of its ability.

Which Education?

(By HERBERT TAKA)

57

APR 2 1942

A little while ago there was a great deal of unnecessary commotion about schools, in consequence of a proposed innovation in the Government's granting system. The cause of it was a simple misunderstanding. Perhaps it was a deliberate distortion of explicit proposals, since editors are expected to safeguard the public against misinformation, by refuting false allegations and furnishing enlightenment where necessary.

Native education in this Territory is still, to a great extent, Missionary enterprise. If the Basuto are to receive any durable benefit in the matter of education, there must be more co-operation among the Missionary bodies. There must be a closer supervision of Missionary activities by the Government; a uniform educational policy must be ensured.

There is a tendency to carry denominational differences far outside religious domains, much to the prejudice of the Native's educational interests.

It may be recalled that Missionary work in South Africa was originally prompted by purely humanitarian motives. Humanitarians were essentially social reformers. They had a broad vision of human life and set themselves to combat the limitations which threatened society with misery in any form. In keeping with typical Anglican humanitarianism, Dr. Philip did not hesitate to challenge even the Legislature of the Cape when it appeared to him that some of its measures were opposed to the civilised sentiments of a community that is conscious of its obligations to those depending on it for guidance.

The Missionary bodies together with the Government of this Territory are under the obligation of guiding the Basuto. The Mosuto must be familiarised with the peculiarities of the world around him. He must be so handled by his guardians, as to be ultimately self-supporting, knowing to how respond appropriately to the various challenges of modern life. This means that there should be more concern about the type of education to give to the Natives, than the statistics of converts to this or that Mission.

In order to be effective, education must be adapted to the nature of the soil in which it has to grow The education to be given to the Native must be based on his racial experience; the basis of that education must be reconstruction (not extermination) of the ethical conventions of tribal life. The error of assailing every Native custom as heathenism must not be perpetuated.

The Native is at present murmuring strong discontentments. After this war he will ask poignant questions about what he has been taught. It will be wise of the Missionaries and the responsible heads in the state offices, to ask themselves now: By which education can we best promote the Native's advancement?

GENERAL SMUTS ON RACE RELATIONS

Trusteeship The Only Solution

JAN 31 1942 ~~MAR 4 1942~~

THAT South Africans as a community should give far more attention to matters of Bantu health, housing and food and should extend help and sympathy far more than was at present the case, was stated by the Prime Minister, General Smuts at a meeting convened by the Institute of Race Relations at Cape Town last week.

General Smuts said that segregation had failed to solve the major problem of the African continent, and that trusteeship of Africans on the part of Europeans offered the only prospect of happy relations between European and African. His hope for South Africa was that European and African would work together to build the future pattern of Africa.

One thing that would have to be done soon, said General Smuts, was to look after the health of Africans. The problem would have to be taken out of the heat of politics and controversy regarding the Native problem, and be brought down to calm, scientific enquiry before one could emerge from the present tangles.

General Smuts said that in the 19th century the world had been moving towards something like internationalism, but that after the last war something very ugly had arisen in Central Europe, which intensified the race feeling. In the Nazi system, race became not only an idea, but also a religion.

Nazi ideology had also come to South Africa, he said, with its ideals of a "Herrenvolk." This was almost a reversion to slavery, and had the effect that some people in South Africa were more inclined to accept the idea of race superiority.

In recent years, said General Smuts, there had been a migration of Africans to the Union, and especially to the Transvaal. This migration extended almost to the Equator. The result had been an intermixture of various tribes. There was also an urbanisation of Natives, an almost revolutionary change which segregation had completely failed to stop.

There was also the detribalisation and industrialisation of Africans. The change was very far-reaching, and none even today could see the limits.

Fellow South Africans Must Stand Together

Trusteeship, however, had a dual aspect. Firstly, the guardian who had a superior position to his ward had to look after the ward, and the temptation was still very strong to emphasise the idea of mastery and lordship on the part of the trustee. The whole concept of trusteeship, though, was meant for the benefit of the ward and not the trustee. This was the only basis on which a happy relationship between European and African could be obtained.

General Smuts said he hoped there would never come a day when Africans and Europeans would no longer look upon themselves as co-Africans and fellow South Africans standing together in the hour of danger.

There was much, he said, that could and should be done in the discharge of the duty of trusteeship.

JAN 31 1942

There was, for example, education. Missionaries had done much, and the Government had followed halteringly.

Better Health Services For Africans

In the spheres of health and housing, practically nothing had been done for the Non-European, and a start was just being made. There was a death rate among the children, a sickness rate among adults which could not be tolerated if South Africa was to be a prosperous, good and happy country.

The country's resources were at present locked up in the war, and it was difficult to make a move, but he hoped that in the years to come there would be health services not only for the European, but also for the African, which would do justice to the duty of trusteeship.

General Smuts stressed the need for better feeding and nutrition among Africans. In regard to Native wages, he said, in the big towns alone all the evidence showed that the African could not support a family in most places on the wage he was getting.

One of the factors that was helping to overcome the racial idea was what was happening in North Africa, where today Europeans and Africans were doing their duty to their country.

The happiest relations existed between these two sections in the new big army. This would build up happier and more wholesome relations and would be helpful in building the South Africa we were looking forward to.

The War Department announced Sunday that American-Filipino forces have hurled back a new Japanese attack on the Bataan peninsula front with "heavy losses" to the enemy. It was also announced that artillery fire from the island fortresses smashed a concentration of small hostile boats off Patungan Beach.

The Japanese made a "heavy" attack on the right center on the American-Filipino line. Military observers in Washington thought that the heavy bombing attacks might be the forerunners of a long-expected offensive. American-Filipino land casualties were described as "relatively light" and the bombing damage slight.

INVASION FLEET

The small Japanese boats, presumably an invasion fleet, had been assembled by the enemy almost opposite Carabao Island, site of Fort Frank, farthest outlying American fortification, and about 10 miles due south of Corregidor. A similar concentration of barges and small boats was hammered to pieces several weeks ago by the big guns of the fortresses.

The Corregidor attack marked the fifth successive day that Japanese airmen have bombed this rocky island fortress, but anti-aircraft fire from Fort Mills, the War Department said, kept the planes at "extremely high altitudes and as a result the bombing was inaccurate."

MAR 30 1942

In New Delhi, India, Sir Stafford Cripps, Britains Indian freedom emissary, said Sunday that the British war cabinet proposed to create "a new Indian union which shall constitute adominion, associated with the United Kingdom and other dominions by a common allegiance to the crown." Sir Stafford told a press conference that the plan envisaged India as equal to Britain and the dominions "in every respect, in no way subordinate in any aspect to its domestic and external affairs."

BOSE REPORTED DEAD

Meanwhile, S. Chandra Bose, one-time Nationalist colleague of Mohandas K. Gandhi and Congress Party President Azad Sunday was reported as having been killed in Japanese air plane crash. Gandhi and Azad paid tribute to Bose, accepting the news at face value.

On the Russian front, stubborn German counterattacks to regain the initiative on the Kalinin sector northwest of Moscow were report- dispatches which said the Nazis ed crushed Sunday in front line were in complete rout after a five-day battle. The attacks were probably aimed at relieving the trapped German 16th army at Staraya Russa, which the Russians have been reducing for a month.

NEGRO GROUND TROOPS

At MacArthur's headquarters a spokesman announced that American Negro ground troops, mostly skilled technical workers, are among the forces in Australia reinforcing the large numbers of Australians and New Zealand airmen and troops which have returned from distant wars to defend their homeland.

The Canadian commander announced that new thousands of Canadins have reched Great Britain from North America.

Chinese forces, authough outnumbered and under repeated enemy attacks, are still holding their lines near Toungoo, Burma, a British communique in New Delhi, India, said Sunday.

A Very Welcome Step

READERS of this Newspaper will surely welcome the news published elsewhere in this issue to the effect that the European Assistant Secretary of the Lagos Town Council may shortly leave these shores for a temporary service elsewhere and that while he is away, only part of his pay will be met by the Council.

As it is now well known, we stand against the appointment of two Assistant Secretaries in the Council services, because it savours of waste of money. An now that the Council is going to be relieved of one, w welcome the news and hope seriously that in future o ly one Assistant will be appointed, and that a African.

By the time the secondment of Mr McNab expires we hope that the decision would have been definitel taken not to have two officers for the same post in th Council. We hope that other problems facing the Council will be solved in the same spirit too, that is, with the aim to cut down the expenditure of the Council by weeding out the extra items and personnel who constitute an extra burden and necessitate the impositio of increase in taxation.

Curing Venereal Diseases

JAN 17 1942

Discussing the incidence of Venereal Diseases among the Bantu in Natal at a session of the Daughters of Africa annual conference held at Imbumbulu last week, Dr. C. N. Dhlamini of the Durban City Health Department revealed that during the last ten years there had been a marked increase in admissions to lunatic asylums of Bantu patients and that of about a thousand infants born in Durban between June 1940 and June 1941, 517 died, mostly from Venereal Disease effects or their complications.

There is not much that is new in this. Every report on the health of the Bantu has the same gloomy story to tell and each year sees the picture grow gloomier when it is remembered that Turberculosis also takes its due toll simultaneously with Venereal Diseases.

Science has already furnished Man with means of stopping the spread of Venereal Diseases and of checking their incidence to the lowest minimum Medical opinion drills into the lay mind the importance of prevention, but it remains to be wondered if South Africa tackles this problem with that sincerity of purpose with which she is wont to tackle others. A patient infected with venereal diseases for instance may be subject to treatment until past the infectious state and may then be released with little or no guarantee that recrudescence of the disease will not make him a source of infection to those about him. In some cases a few injections after the infectious stage has been passed are considered enough to warrant his unmolested diffusion of the disease.

In civilised countries, like Great Britain for instance, the sufferer from this malady is subjected to continual treatment extending over a period of two or three years and by the time he is declared cured the medical adviser has ensured that he will not be a source of infection to others and that as far as is possible all chances of a recrudescence of the disease have been removed.

This is not more than South Africa can do. Instead, we are willing to spend so many thousands of pounds on inadequately staffed hospitalisation which at best does us as much good as has already been outlined above.

And in order that the combat of V.D., should be successful the campaign to enlighten the African on preventive measures must not be confined to urban areas. Clinics where treatment and free information may be obtained need to be established in every rural location or reserve as well as in urban locations, adequately staffed.

The very attitude of the medical officer must not be of a moralist with very "pessimistic views on the morals of the savage." He must be out to fight, not the patient's morals, but the patient's disease. Too many "good" people to-day, quite sincere and meaning all good by their attitude, help the spread of these diseases by frowning contemptuously on their victim—helping only to make the victim recoil from scientific treatment and haunt the environs of the medical charlatan.

Whilst medical help is urgently needed, sight must not be lost of factors, mostly economic, that make the African such fertile ground for these particular diseases. Overcrowding in the reserves forces Africans into seeking work in urban areas where they are housed in large compounds or barracks. This form of housing is one of the most immoral pieces of conserving supplies of labour because it is directly at the expense of the Black Man's health.

560

If South Africa wants to conserve her already dwindling supplies of labour—as Professor W. M. Macmillan has already warned the country—and if she wants to be an A 1 nation she must exert herself more fully and honestly to give the African in towns opportunities to lead a healthy home life. It must be realised that the African is not an animal that can thrive very well, amidst the complex factors that enter into life in the modern world, torn from the balancing influences of a home.

JAN 17 1942

As long as South Africa views this problem with one eye cocked against its economic aspects, Venereal Diseases will continue to constitute a drain on the country's finances only to maintain ever-increasing palliative services. The problem of the spread of Venereal Diseases cannot be solved apart from that of low wages for African workers.

JAIL 3 WHITE 'AGITATORS' IN SOUTH AFRICA

12/5/42

Arrested For Threatened Strike To Enforce Color Bar

(Chicago Defender London Correspondent)

LONDON — (Censored) — As a result of Jim Crow practices and recriminations by white mine workers of Northern Rhodesia against native workers, which some time ago precipitated a riot and bloodshed, three white agitators have been arrested for subversive activities in the famous Rhodesia copper belt.

The men under arrest are C. W. S. Maeyer, F. S. Maybank and J. P. Theunissen. An official statement by the British Colonial office in London stated: "As it has become clear during the past few months that certain elements on the copper belt have been deliberately fomenting an agitation of a subversive character, directed against the war effort, the government of Northern Rhodesia has found it necessary to detain certain of the individuals concerned.

"The governor has sent a message to officials at various branches of the Mineworkers' union, informing them of the action taken by the government, and saying that he appeals to them with confidence to use their influence to prevent any disorders. He has made it clear that the government is fully resolved to take all necessary steps to maintain law and order."

Fear For Production

Maybank and Maeyer are officials of the Northern Rhodesia Mineworkers union and Theuissen is employed in the copper mines at Launshya. A spokesman for the colonial office, speaking of the arrests, said: "The Mineworkers union on the copper belt is exclusively European and aims at keeping the best jobs for Europeans. As so many of its members are key men, it is in a position to hold up production."

It was recalled that in 1940, the European workers went on strike for higher wages. At that time they were receiving 20 shillings per day of eight hour shift. After negotiations with the management, they were granted a war bonus bringing their wages up to L.75 per month. As a consequence of which the Africans also struck and rioting occurred. Several natives were killed when police and troops were called in to suppress the disturbance. However, the Africans got an increase from two shillings per day to three shillings and additional rations.

The arrested labor leaders requested some months ago that the governor should discuss with the union certain proposals then before the legislative council. According to government statement, most of the union's demands have been granted. After many concessions had been made to the white miners the union gave an undertaking last January to make no more demands.

The government is afraid that the natives might go on strike again and hold up copper production should the white workers down tools.

12/5/42

In Northern Rhodesia, like the Union of South Africa, the white workers are considered the "labor aristocrats." They have a monopoly on all skilled and semi-skilled jobs for which they receive a minimum wage of 20 shillings per day. Colored workers are not allowed to join the Mine Workers union, which excludes them under the color bar clause. The existence of the color bar in industry is one of the biggest grievances of the native workers in Africa.

ETHIOPIA IN THE UNITED NATIONS

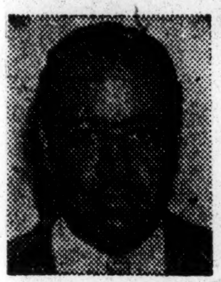
Dec. 27, 1942

By Ben Davis, Jr.

The Worker
New York, N.Y.

LEND-LEASE aid has, at last, been granted to Ethiopia, first victim of the mad onrush of the Axis bandits toward world domination. Haile Selassie has been restored to the throne in Addis Ababa, and Ethiopia is now a full fledged member of the United Nations--the 30th nation to sign the declaration. Congratulations to the brave Ethiopians and to the United Nations.

This small kingdom, symbol of the aspirations of the black people of Harlem, the Chicago South Side, Mississippi and all over the world, is now an official member of the family of white, yellow and brown peoples fighting for the destruction of Hitler and all his works.



Ben Davis, Jr.

This is no "war of races," but a knockdown, drag out fight by all races, creeds and colors who prefer freedom to slavery. When Ethiopia, in a recent message to President Roosevelt, offers her all to the cause of the United Nations it is recognition that she can only hold what she has and advance further if there is a complete military victory of the United Nations over Hitler and his satellites.

Eight years ago when Ethiopia was first invaded by Mussolini the world was considerably bestirred, but not bestirred enough, thanks to the Munichites in America, Britain and France who tried to appease Hitler's little man by giving him the Negro kingdom. The Negro people of America marched, in Harlem and elsewhere, alongside their white anti-fascist brothers in the labor movement and various people's organizations.

The restoration of Ethiopia's independence — notwithstanding the limitations upon her soverignty—indicates that there are forces far more powerful in this war, than the power of any statement made by a single national leader, as important as those statements are.

The dominant section of the English imperialists, who were led by Chamberlain, the appeaser, now find themselves compelled to fight for the return of the very independence of Ethiopia which they turned over to Hitler's puppet. The principles of the Atlantic Charter, of the Four Freedoms, which are the spur for the people to hasten the doom of Hitler, demands this result.

Dec. 27, 1942

Imperialist statemen cannot deny this avalanche of marching mankind, although they yield begrudgingly point by point, and freedom by freedom. "...Even conscious imperialists have been conscripted by history for a war which is essentially anti-imperialist," writers Earl Browder in "Victory--and After." The Worker, N.Y., N.Y.

As the people see the need of offering their very lives for their country against Hitler barbarism, so they see the need of tearing down the barriers of racial discrimination, and the onerous imperialist exploitation which stands in the way of victory coming at the quickest time with the least cost.

That's why getting the peoples in motion in all phases of the war effort is the key to victory. NOT so long ago the Navy Department was writing letters from Washington that the best interests and morale of the Naval forces required that Negroes serve only a messmen in the Navy. The officials have had to take a couple of bites out of those letters; for Negroes have been inducted for combat service. The Worker

This reversal of policy was only a matter of months. The token induction of Negroes just as the token employment of Negroes is by no means sufficient. Whole letters will have to be eaten before we win the war in the quickest time at the least cost.

The imperative logic of military necessity, of people in motion for equality, of the heroism of Dorie Miller the gallant patriotism of Joe Louis, and thousands of Negroes in and out of the armed forces who are fighting for victory are gathering irresistible momentum. They can, must and will scale new heights of freedom, because that is what we need for victory. Woe to defeatists, Fifth Columnists, hesitators and vacillators who stand in the way of the march of history.

Africans Lack Initiative And Enterprise---------

Says Elijah E. M. Cele

-6a

The world refuses to fondle, pat and spoil those who inhabit it. Life, as interpreted by what we see happening around us everyday, is a struggle to the man who really lives. Indolence and stagnation are the last things this our world will tolerate; one must move; either forward or backward.

The man who really lives realises that, if he is to find a place for himself under the sun, he must "throw his soul into gear and pull out." He realises that it is he, and not somebody else, who is the architect of his destiny.

The Bantu are very often accused of laziness and lack of initiative and enterprise. If we want to be honest with ourselves, we should certainly admit that these accusations are not altogether unfounded. I shall not be tempted -- and I contend that all good Africans should not be tempted— to be blind to facts and to allow racial prejudice to influence our judgment and opinions. We should always remember that he is a wise man who owns his shortcomings.

The accusation that as a race we are lazy, while there may be cases which seem to support it, is not supported by facts. While it is not my desire to enlarge on this subject [i.e. that of our being accused of laziness], I might, at this juncture, say that when one sees how, as a race, we glaringly lack —for, indeed, we do, much to our shame—initiative and enterprise, one might be tempted to think, and thus to give it as one's opinion, that as a race the Bantu are indolent.

I call it a sign of lack of initiative and enterprise on our part to ask —sometimes to beg— for outside help in a case where, with good leadership and willingness to lend a hand on the part of those to be led, we could do without it. Far too often we hear some leaders when faced with say, some financial difficulty, saying: "We shall ask our white friends to lend us a hand......" Our leaders, whoever they may be, should endeavour to see that this practice is discontinued, for not only is it a bad reflection on them, but, in addition to giving "our white friends, the impression that we are incapable of self-help and should, therefore, be treated as a child race for a long time to come, it encourages the African masses not to cultivate the quality of independence.

I am convinced that it is time the Bantu appreciated the true significance of the gospel of self-help.

Again, it is a sign of what, if not of lack of initiative and enterprise on our part, if we are contented with seeing non-Bantu traders doing booming businesses in Native areas where some of us could easily do the same? The writer may be excused if this remark savours of politics for it is not his wish to be entangled in the political net. The writer's ardent desire is merely to point out those facts which every thinking man or woman sees and is aware of.

What was said to Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, namely, that they would get nothing except by the sweat of their brow, should spur everyone to a greater determination to look life straight in the eye.

There is sufficient evidence to show that the price to pay for indolence and lack of initiative is greater. The pitiable events that occur around us daily bring it home to us very forcibly that indolence will bring only much suffering in its wake.

It, therefore, behoves everyone to attempt to find a place for himself in the world and to realise that happiness will come only after a struggle—and it might be a very painful one.

Allow me, Sir, once more through the medium of your valued paper to issue this official statement for the information of the public in general and young Natal in particular.

Since our first appearance, in your columns, now eleven months ago, much has taken place, that has culminated in the birth of the above movement which was formally constituted on the 13th of July 1941.

Eleven months ago, when we sounded the call, the faint hearted and defeatist dared to challenge the feasibility of organising the young people at this panicky period, but the wonderful response we have had, left us in no doubt about the sense of responsibility of the youth of swarthy Africa, testifying that eleven months ago, we read the inarticulate aspirations of the people aright: for we postulated then, that the youth of Africa were not behind any in national consciousness and in the willingness to offer their whole selves in National Service.

May I repeat then, a few thoughts, the substance of which was foreshadowed in the "Ilanga" of the 7th May, 1941 to indicate what we stand for.

(a) While we realise that there are hardships and difficulties under which the nation labours; while we realise the ability and the duty of the Government to solve these problems for the people, we realise much more the fact that reforms which are external to the people themselves, e.g. Political Rights alone, are at best part only of the nation's need to-day. Hence we address our energies first and foremost to making African youth better men and women, enlightened, efficient, and devoted to the National ideal.

This does not in any way minimise our respect for organisations engaged in the political aspect of the struggle—this should serve merely to clarify our standpoint.

(b) We believe that national liberation is a worthy ideal, which must be bought at high price, hence we prepare our youth for self-sacrifice—through sacrifice and not charity or eternal petitions to the powers that be.

(c) We are aware of the major difficulties facing the nation to-day, Poverty, Disease, Ignorance, Lack of opportunity etc. We are resolved to fight these directly and indirectly with all our might, placing premium on comprehensive general national advancement, nor are we unmindful of the magnitude of the task, nor the fact that these problems cannot be solved by some "wave of the magical wand," some formula, some particular form of economic club alone.

In short we stand for a new and better Africa, in which the African shall be able to measure up to the highest obligations and attainments expected of a civilized, free people.

Let me also say that being a national organisation, we are non-competitive. We are pledged to a policy of respect for the ventures of others who in various ways endeavour to better the lot of the African. And while we bear allegiance to no existing organisation, we bear hostility to none, and, in practice shall have occasion to co-operate with existing organisations.

Though this letter is official, at best it is a Press statement. We have our official constitution.

The following are the men who have been entrusted with the management and direction of the affairs of the Nuay:— M. T. Moerane, Director of Services; Chief A. J. Luthuli, Secretary for Finance; G.N.C. Buthelezi, Secretary for Field Services; M. J. Gumede, Secretary for Organisation; J.K. Ngubane, Secretary for Information.

Inquiries should be sent to any of the above, at Box 2227, Durban, or to M.T. Moerane, Umphumulo Institute, P.O. Maphumulo, or to J.K. Ngubane 128 Umgeni Road, Durban.

Nigerians Say Speech Of September 9 Left An Unfavorable Impression

LONDON — Declaring that Mr. Churchill's speech in Parliament on September 9, has created an "unfavorable impression in Africa," representatives of 20,000,000 Africans in Nigeria have sent a cablegram to the British Prime Minister asking him to explain the Roosevelt-Churchill Atlantic Charter and its application to the colored races.

In his speech, Mr. Churchill said: "At the Atlantic meeting we had in mind, primarily, the restoration of the sovereignty, self-government and national life of the States and nations of Europe now under Nazi yoke . . . so that is quite a separate problem from the progressive evolution of self-governing institutions in the regions and peoples which owe allegiance to the British Crown."

The first African spokesman, Nnandi Azikiwe, editor of The African Pilot, to answer Mr. Churchill, declared: "That a British prime minister could utter such a statement during an unparalleled destructive war, which has cost the colonial peoples their material resources and man-power is, indeed, a revelation. What, now, must we expect to be our fate after the war? Must we believe in platitudes? . . . Indeed, the 'Four Freedoms' may be said to be good enough for 'the States and nations of Europe', but when the interpretations are applied to us, 'that is quite a separate problem'.

"Good God! And the words are straight from the lips of our Prime Minister," Mr. Azikiwe said.

In the meantime, Africans and the West Indians in London are determined to have their respective countries and peoples included within the meaning of the Atlantic Charter. They have organized a representative delegation to discuss the matter with the secretary of state for the colonies.

Several members of the House rose to the defense of the colonials. Dr. Haden Guest, Laborite, demanded the abolition of all forms of racial discrimination in the empire, and asked why more use was not being made of native troops. Sir Percy Harris, Liberal, said:

"There was real suspicion that the Prime Minister was the obstacle to any constitutional change, and his opposition to the passage of the India Bill through the House of Commons in 1935 justified that suspicion. A statement from him now that he was prepared to recognize the right of India to full parnership in the war would make a profound impression. If Mr. Churchill would hold out the hand of friendship and equality to the Indian people it would make a great difference to the course of the war."

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

MAR 14 1942

NEWS of the immediate erection of a new 400 bed Non-European Hospital at Coronation Township, Johannesburg, is very welcome indeed. The completion of this hospital, in addition to the 30 beds for Non-European tuberculosis patients at the old chronic sick home at Rietfontein will undoubtedly help to relieve the incredible over-crowding at the Johannesburg Non-European Hospital.

For many months past, readers of "Umteteli" have been acquainted with the sad state of Non-European hospitalisation in the Transvaal, and this paper will not cease in its efforts to ensure that the needs of the population for decent health services are being met.

While General Pienaar's announcement is a step in the right direction, his speech on Tuesday contains a number of features likely to create continued uneasiness in this matter. He said that the revenue of the Province had fallen short of estimates and that it was therefore impossible to embark upon a comprehensive hospitalisation plan at present. He also said that the provision of hospitals should really be a matter for the State and not for the Province.

At the same time, the legal position is, as pointed out by the Prime Minister the other day, that the Provinces are legally responsible for the provision of hospitals.

It is, of course, well and good to argue about the legal responsibility, but at the same time it must be remembered that lives are being lost through shocking hospital overcrowding and that many people who require urgent medical attention, cannot obtain it.

We fully agree with General J. J. Pienaar that the State and not the Provinces should bear the burden of hospital provision. But in the meantime no one should be allowed to shift the responsibility, on to somebody else while people urgently in need of medical treatment are kept suffering.

While the Government loan, which will enable the erection of the Coronation Township Hospital, may perhaps be regarded as a forerunner of a coming change in policy, the case of public health services would be much better served if the State were to take over immediately the provision and care of hospitals.

Factors That Hinder African Progress

MAR 2 1942
FEB 7 1941

Sir,

In my July article when at Utrecht, I wrote on "Leading Factors and Hints to African Success" and today I comment on "Factors that hinder African Progress." The general attitude towards the European is that "Africans are denied of all rights, depressed and underpaid." I say this is "True and Good." I say it is good because "Misfortune sharpens genius" and "comfort forgets itself. This attitude is so deep in the African's mind that his concentration and attention are absorbed by the same attitude hence he overlooks the "European goodness" and the most important is apparently the remark of the unrighteousness of the European with his brutal and unchristian-like rules and pick-up vans; and forgetting the very most important.

FEB 7 1941

On Sunday October 26 I attended the African National Business Association at the Inch-cape hall in Johannesburg where I heard R. V. Selope-Thema, M.R.C. give a lecture on "Nationalism." In all African meetings, Africans ask, "When are the Pass-laws abolished? How can we get rid of the Pick-up van? For what is this worrisome Special pass? When are the salaries increasing? etc. etc." and forget to attend National Meetings" said Mr. Thema. This is so true, so much so that they do not only forget to attend National meetings to share ideas and plans for improvement but also even to enroll in the National Co-Operative Societies such as under the management of B. J. Malinga, B.A.A.C.P. in Durban and the "Pan-African stores and General Services Ltd." under A. D. Mdontswa in Johannesburg This attitude hinders African Progress for they "worry over worries" and forget "Unity is power" and that "God helps those who help themselves" and so strive for self-improvement. If all Africans attend meetings, support co-operative societies, support African Business etc., there can be no need to crave for European employment and when the Europeans are short of labour, they will be bound to raise salaries and so up the ladder we go.

Such gentlement as Dr. J. L. Dube, Ph.D. M.R.C. of Ohlange, with his Ohlange Institute, "Ilanga" newspaper and powers of organisation; R. V. Selophe Thema, M.R.C. of Johannesburg with his untiring powers of organisations and fair representation of Afrian views; R. G. Baloyi, M.R.C. of Alexander Township, with his heavy Commercial powers; A. W. Geo Champion, of Durban with his wonderful influence, loyalty to his people and inborn ability of organising; Prof. D. D. T. Jabavu, B.A. of the Cape, with his educational power and newspaper; H. Selby Msimang, of Driefontein, Ladysmith formerly of Bloemfontein, with his untiring enthusiasm in African Organisations; A. D. Mdontswa, of Johannesburg with his presentation of easy means of National Improvement; R.R.R. Dhlomo, of the "Bantu World" in Johannesburg, with his amazing powers of drafting manuscripts for National Books; R. T. Caluza M.A., B.Sc., of Adams College, with his talented Musical ability and commercial powers etc. are very good examples for imitations.

TRUSTEESHIP

JAN 31 1942

GENERAL SMUTS' recent speech to the South African Institute of Race Relations at Cape Town brought the strong light of realism to bear on the relationship between African and European. The question of trusteeship has been much debated, but, chiefly owing to lack of knowledge of its meaning and implications, little agreement has ever been reached on it.

Now, at last, interpretation has been provided. As General Smuts pointed out, there is a tendency to hark back to the idea of superiority and to lay undue emphasis on the idea of the mastery, overlordship and domination of the guardian over the ward. The whole concept of trusteeship, however, is one of benefit for the ward and not for the trustee. There exists a sacred trust, and, as General Smuts said "It is this point of view that we have to put into practice."

In a question such as that of trusteeship, the long view must be taken; it will be of vital importance in generations to come, and it concerns not only South Africa, but the whole of the African Continent. It is appropriate, then, that the Prime Minister's declaration should be made at the time that the Pan-American Conference was sitting, for both General Smuts and President Roosevelt possess the broad concept of Hemisphere Politics as against narrow nationalism.

General Smuts looks forward to the day when the "Good Neighbour" policy will apply throughout Africa: the major problem of that policy undoubtedly will be the relationship between European and African, and we hope that General Smuts' definition of trusteeship will mark the beginning of a new and better era in the relationship between the two peoples of Africa.

Chiefs Are Gaoled On Charges Of Kidnapping

MAR 9 1942

ONDO (BM)—The sentences of 10 and 14 years' imprisonment passed by Mr Justice Jackson, Assistant Judge, Warri Province, on Chiefs Legbira and Ajadi respectively, for kidnapping will it is believed, serve as a deterrent to those who indulge in child stealing here.

The case had been on since September 1941, and in all 13 persons were arraigned by the Police.

In the course of the prosecution, evidence was given to show that the children were kidnapped to be offered as sacrifice to the Ora by execution in a bush outside the town.

FEB 13 1942

As the Court could not find sufficient evidence to convict 11 of the accused persons, they were accordingly discharged.

But the Court was satisfied with the evidence given against the two Chiefs Leghira and Ajadi, who were found guilty and sentenced as stated above.

The School-Year Opens

AFTER the long Christmas holidays, our schools and colleges are beginning to resume their activities for the new year. Most of the schools all over the country have resumed work and already plans are being made for the new year and we want, in this leader, to wish the teachers and pupils a progressive year.

There are many aspects of our school life that are not what they should be. Quite often, such aspects of school life have come in for criticisms in the Press, and we can only wish that teachers and school principals will give their closest study to these criticisms and see where improvements can be made.

One very important aspect of school life much justly criticised is the inadequate feeding of children and its evil effort on the health of the pupils In this respect, it is most disconcerting that even highly placed educational men in the Provinces are alleged to place very little value on the feeding of those in their charge.

JAN 28 1942

This is a grievous fault which the Education Department should watch and visit with serious punishment. Another aspect of our school life which requires yet more attention is the training of the pupils to make good use of their hands and develop initiatives. We hope that during the present year due notice will be taken of these points.

Mixed Farming Schools

THE scheme just started by the Agricultural and Education Departments in Oyo, in co-operation with the Oyo Native Administration, is a welcome practicalisation of the much preached doctrine of "back to the land." For a long time, this doctrine had meant no more than an empty talk to most people who were provided with no means of putting them into practice.

The scheme is no doubt a move in the right direction, since it has been stressed over and over again that this is an agricultural country. Here, then, is a start to make many a young man realise his ambition, to use his hand and head.

The scheme, as it is, provides the means of training only a limited number of youths, but we have no doubt that in due course the number of those in training will be increased to take in a fairly large group of literate youths. This, no doubt, will depend on the encouragement received from the students and people generally.

We congratulate the Oyo Native Administration, the Agricultural and Education Departments on launching out such a laudable scheme. We hope that within a short time, the institution will become a progressive centre for the training of youths from other divisions and that other Administrations will follow this example Nigeria needs many more mixed farming schools.

European Assistant Secretary Of Town Council Is Going

JAN 27 1942

It is unofficially understood that Mr Angus McNab, European Assistant Secretary of the Lagos Town Council, may shortly relinquish his appointment here temporarily.

5-60

In connection with this report, it is further understood that this relinquishment is occasioned by the circumstances which necessitate the secondment of this Town Council official for special duties in other parts of the Empire, probably in East Africa.

As a result, the salary of the officer in question will only be paid in part by the Lagos Town Council and the part not paid will accrue to the Council and go to relieve part of the expenditure which the Council finds to be mounting every day.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Readers of the "West African Pilot" will recall that recently we criticised the appointment of two Assistant Secretaries in the Lagos Town Council, one an African and the other a European (vide "Pilot"

Watch South Africa

WE are no alarmists but we believe that a stitch in time saves nine. Before the war, we sounded several well-timed warnings most of which were pooh poohed then. But in the last few months efforts are being made energetically to adjust situations.

FEB 4 1942

Our keynote today is: "Watch South Africa." We admire the zest and energy of this youthful country. We feel proud at the tremendous strides of this young member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. It appears, however, that South Africa is destined to play a by-no-means inferior part in the future control of this continent, judged by the sentiments expressed by South African leaders and the economic realities of the present war.

5-60

Now that Nazi agents are reported to be engaged in acts of sabotage in South Africa, it is time Great Britain paused and considered certain factors in connection with this young member-State of the British Commonwealth.

West African Pilot
Lagos

Nazi sympathisers are known to thrive in South Africa. South Africa is busy establishing markets in Africa for her manufactures. South Africans have insisted on their being consulted with reference to the future of the African continent. South Africa is fast becoming a militry power. Added to this is a rider: Is it not significant that, so far as we know, no South African troops or material of war have been used for combat purposes beyond the confines of Africa? Watch South Africa.

ETHIOPIA'S REQUESTED LOAN AND TREATY

The Comet - Nigeria

NOV 29 1941

It is rather generally known that some time ago the Emperor of Ethiopia submitted a draft treaty to the British and added thereto a request for a loan to enable the Ethiopian Government to proceed with the complete re-organisation of that unfortunate country. A rather long time has elapsed since that request was made and, upon the Emperor's request for a reply to his communication to enable him to proceed with those urgent reforms which he had outlined, Mr. Winston Churchill is reported to have replied: "I beg your Majesty not to be distressed by the delay attached to the signing of the treaty. The delay arises because the British Government wishes nothing to exist in the treaty which could be interpreted as binding to your sovereign rights or to the independence of Ethiopia. What you have just heard proves that the agreement on which we are to base our work will be signed in the near future". In our opinion, the terms "binding to your sovereign rights or the independence of Ethiopia", appears to our undiplomatic minds as being rather ambiguous. We are quite aware that England's Prime Minister is experiencing a rather hectic time just now, but it should be realised that the Emperor finds himself in a similar condition owing chiefly to the democratic reforms which he is endeavouring to introduce, despite the latent opposition of some of his old-fashioned and undemocratic chiefs, but he is nevertheless proceeding with a herculean task which cannot effectively be accompanied without the conclusion of the treaty and the acquisition of the loan. It should also be borne in mind that the darker races within the British Empire who are active and loyally supporting the British Government's war effort are anxiously looking forward to the complete restoration of Ethiopia's complete independence without any diplomatic strings, whatever. These peoples may be inarticulate but they are not brainless. Hence, it is devoutly to be hoped that the Prime Minister of England will not unduly delay his decision upon The Emperor's natural request for that signature and loan.

Twenty Million Africans Ask Churchill To Explain Atlantic Charter Meaning

Courier — Pittsburgh Penn.

56a

FEB 7 - 1942

By Our London Correspondent

LONDON, Feb. 5. (Censored)—The following cablegram has been sent to the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill on behalf of 20 million Africans in Nigeria, the largest British colony on the West Coast of Africa, according to an official statement from Downing street. Here is the full text of the message to the Prime Minister:

"Understand you stated in Commons that Atlantic Charter not applicable to colored races in Colonial Empire, and that the 'restoration of sovereignity, self-government, and national life' is applicable only to the states and nations of Europe.

"Must we assume that the Deputy Prime Minister's statement to the West African Students' Union of London that the Atlantic Charter would benefit the colored races as well as white, is misleading and unauthorized?

"Are we fighting for the security of Europe to enjoy Four Freedoms while West Africans continue prewar status?

FEB 7 - 1942

"On behalf of the Protectorate and Colony of Nigeria, we respectfully request clarification of the Atlantic Charter regarding Nigeria.

"This will enable us to appreciate the correct bearing of 21 million Nigerians in the sea of international politics."

Liberian Airfield Is Rushed

FEB 6 - 1942

To Receive U. S. Planes Flown Across Atlantic

56a

MONROVIA, Liberia.—(ANP)—American engineers are rushing work on the airfield being constructed here to receive United States planes flown across the Atlantic from Brazil for use in the war against the Axis nations.

Located near Monrovia, the capital city, the field is being built by the Firestone Tire and Rubber company and will be the main eastern terminus of the new aerial ferry and transport service operated by the Pan-American airways. It was authorized last August 19 by President Roosevelt. Pan-American will also operate transport planes over the same route to carry planes' parts and to return ferry crews.

From a military point of view, Liberia, which is actually about the size of the state of Ohio, lies in a strategic position. It is within easy striking distance of Dakar, the Vichy-controlled French port coveted by the Nazis.

This little nation is also important as a rubber center since Asiatic sources are now closed to America. Rubber plantations are growing steadily in size. Americans hold options on nearly 1,000,000 acres and have explored up to 100.000 acres. Currently around 20,000 natives are working on these plantations under more than 100 American supervisors.

FUND FOR INJURED AFRICANS

JAN 3 - 1942

THE Mayor of Johannesburg, Mr. A. R. Thorburn, has opened a relief fund for the families of the killed and injured in the accident to the train carrying passengers to Orlando Township on Christmas Eve.

During his visit to the Non-European Hospital on Christmas Day, Mr. Thorburn spoke to many of the injured people, and told them that everything possible would be done to help them in their trouble.

It was stated on Saturday that all money given to the fund would be used to help the families of the killed and injured, and that no money would be used to pay the cost of running the fund.

JAN 3 - 1942

Mr. Thorburn himself started the fund with a gift of £25. The Bishop of Pretoria has also given £25. On Monday afternoon, £100 had already been collected.

Many people have expressed the hope that the families of the victims will not suffer financial loss because of the tragedy.

The Mayor For Distres

JAN 3 - 1942

Deeply moved by the tragic results of the train smash at Langlaagte on Christmas Eve, the Mayor of Johannesburg, Mr. A. R. Thorburn, has decided to open a relief fund for the Native families which have lost a breadwinner or mother in the crash, and to tide the families of the seriously injured over the period of convalescence. Conributions may be sent to the Mayor's Office, City Hall, and will be suitably acknowledged.

The Mayor visited the wards of the injured men, women and children in the Non-European Hospital on his Christmas morning rounds, expressed his deep sympathy with them and the families of the 24 who were killed, and said he would see that everything possible was done to alleviate distress arising from the accident.

A welfare officer of the Municipal Non-European and Native Affairs Department ascertained that nine of the dead came from Orlando and at least five from Pimville. Several have not not yet been identified. The names and addresses were also obtained of the families of the injured. Efforts will be made to get into touch with all the families affected and to do what can be done to relieve hardship.

APPEAL TO PUBLIC

"The public can play a very great part in helping to relieve any distress by giving money," said Mr. L. I. Venables, assistant manager of the department. "We can give the assurance that any sums sent to the Mayor will be properly administered and that every penny will go to the assistance of the families, without any deductions for administration. Among the the dead and the seriously injured are many men and women on whose earnings big families depend. They are now suffering hardship which the public can greatly allevaite by a generous response."

Enquiries at the police laboratories revealed that the 24 dead consisted of three women, one child and 20 men. Fourteen men had families, who are now without means of support unless the mother goes to work, with consequent neglect of her children.

One family of eight sat round a little Christmas tree with second-hand scraps of decorations, waiting deep into the night for the father to come home with a few Christmas presents and some special food, only to find on Christmas morning that the father was among the dead in the accident.

In other cases the breadwinner of the family will be incapacitated for several weeks, if not longer.

It is these people, who have no savings or other assistance to fall back upon, that need special help from the public, the Mayor said.

NATIVE TRUST TAKEN TO TASK

Land Restrictions Criticised

JAN 31 1942

The policy of the Native Land Trust was criticised at the annual meeting of the council of the South African Institute of Race Relations last Thursday week. The council decided to draw up a statement for submission to the Government showing the weakness of the trust policy.

Senator J. D. Rheinallt Jones said a serious position had recently arisen in the Transvaal, where the tenants of land controlled by the trust resented restrictions imposed on them. Absentee landlords had in the past permitted the Natives to cultivate their land in any way they pleased. Now that the trust had taken over, restrictions had been imposed to protect the land from deterioration. The Natives did not understand the need for the restrictions, and the utmost tact would be needed to solve the difficulties which had arisen.

The trust should abandon the practice of giving Natives very small allotments. The allotments were not large enough to enable the Native peasant to support himself without going into the towns to work some months in the year. It might also be desirable to permit Natives to lease land in European areas, not as owners but as tenants.

Senator E. H. Brookes said that Natal had so far benefited very little from the new trust policy. Province was negligible and the Zulu people were disappointed. The amount of land bought in that There was great reluctance on the part of the trust to allow individual purchases of land. Collective farms under State control might be a good thing, but until Europeans adopted this system the Natives would never agree that they should do it.

Mr D. B. Molteno, M.P, said enormous prices had been paid by the trust for land. In fact, a "racket" had grown up. The rents payable by Natives or the price paid by them for the land should not be based on the prices paid by the trust to vested interests.

FREE EDUCATION

It was decided to press for compulsory free education for non-European children between the ages of seven and 14. It will begin with the urban areas and will involve increased subsidies to attain ultimately equal and adequate financial provision for the education of all sections of the population.

JAN 31 1942

A committee will be appointed to work for the achievement of the objects stated in the resolution.

On the motion of Mr. Douglas Buchanan, K.C., a resolution was passed in favour of a full State medical service to cover all sections of the population.

Mrs. H. C. Horwood said that the present public health system was unco-ordinated. It was not possible to maintain a rigid distinction between preventive and curative services, nor between mental and physical health. There were to-day at least four different health authorities, but did not recognise administrative boundaries. A resolution was passed urging the Government to extend invalidity grants to coloured people on the same scale as for Europeans and to raise the grants to a standard adequate to maintain decency and comfort.

Rhodesian Amalgamation

Views of Mr. T. S. Page, M.L.C.

To the Editor of "East Africa and Rhodesia"

JAN 29 1942

SIR,—The amalgamation issue as regards the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland is by no means dead, and though it was considered necessary to postpone discussions at the outbreak of this war, there should be no reason for that postponement to be prolonged until the end of the war.

That aspect of the matter which comes uppermost at a time like this might be put in the form of the questions: "How can we assist in the progress of the war by setting free man-power and material through joining these three territories? Can this be effected? What are the main difficulties? Are they insuperable?"

Here are three neighbouring territories under the British flag. Each has a population of Europeans and Africans in different ratios, but even in Southern Rhodesia, which has the largest European population, the African is largely in the majority. Each territory is largely dependent on the other for many things. Each has its own complete administration from Governor downwards, with separate Customs and immigrations rules restricting communications. There are separate departments for agriculture, veterinary services, education, health and so on, complete with own staff and organisation working separately, with the minimum of co-operation or co-ordination. War effort has recently been co-ordinated and a Secretariat set up in Salisbury, but in no other way has anything been done to simplify matters.

In the cases of Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia administration is greatly impeded by their dependence of the wishes and control of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Not only are matters of policy referred to him, but many minor subjects and petty details, causing delays and extra and unnecessary work. This was serious in the days of peace, when airmails were regular and speedy; today the position is impossible.

Great Britain is not only bearing the brunt of the war, but is suffering as we are not likely to be called upon to suffer. She is putting every ounce of her weight into the war effort, while we do very little in comparison. Why cannot we see to it that our man-power and effort are the best that can be given? Is there not much waste of both which could be eliminated? Why should it be necessary to maintain large staffs of able-bodied men who are engaged in duties which are triplicated through lack of union? If Great Britain had worked on the lines laid down for these territories, Hitler would have been in London ere this.

What is supposed to be the main obstacle? Divergence of Native policy. Is this divergence real, or is the result of variations caused by a divergence of circumstances? Let those who understand the position get together and work out a solution of any difficulties, real or imaginary. Let us concentrate on getting rid of this duplication and triplication, and let a Greater Rhodesia do its best, as it cannot do now, for King and Empire.

Let us hope that practical results will mature from the conference which is to be held early in the New Year of representatives of these three separate territories which should be united.

JAN 29 1942

Yours faithfully,
TOM S. PAGE.

Africans Lack Initiative And Enterprise--------

Says Elijah E. M. Cele

The world refuses to fondle, pat and spoil those who inhabit it. Life, as interpreted by what we see happening around us everyday, is a struggle to the man who really lives. Indolence and stagnation are the last things this our world will tolerate ; one must move, either forward or backward.

The man who really lives realises that, if he is to find a place for himself under the sun, he must "throw his soul into gear and pull out." He realises that it is he, and not somebody else, who is the architect of his destiny.

The Bantu are very often accused of laziness and lack of initiative and enterprise. If we want to be honest with ourselves, we should certainly admit that these accusations are not altogether unfounded. I shall not be tempted -- and I contend that all good Africans should not be tempted— to be blind to facts and to allow racial prejudice to influence our judgment and opinions. We should always remember that he is a wise man who owns his shortcomings.

The accusation that as a race we are lazy, while there may be cases which seem to support it, is not supported by facts. While it is not my desire to enlarge on this subject [i.e. that of our being accused of laziness], I might, at this juncture, say that when one sees how, as a race, we glaringly lack —for, indeed, we do, much to our shame—initiative and enterprise, one might be tempted to think, and thus to give it as one's opinion, that as a race the Bantu are indolent.

I call it a sign of lack of initiative and enterprise on our part to ask — sometimes to beg— for outside help in a case where, with good leadership and willingness to lend a hand on the part of those to be led, we could do without it. Far too often we hear some leaders when faced with say, some financial difficulty, saying : "We shall ask our white friends to lend us a hand......" Our leaders, whoever they may be, should endeavour to see that this practice is discontinued, for not only is it a bad reflection on them, but, in addition to giving "our white friends, the impression that we are incapable of self-help and should, therefore, be treated as a child race for a long time to come, it encourages the African masses not to cultivate the quality of independence.

I am convinced that it is time the Bantu appreciated the true significance of the gospel of self-help.

Again, it is a sign of what, if not of lack of initiative and enterprise on our part, if we are contented with seeing non-Bantu traders doing booming businesses in Native areas where some of us could easily do the same? The writer may be excused if this remark savours of politics for it is not his wish to be entangled in the political net. The writer's ardent desire is merely to point out those facts which every thinking man or woman sees and is aware of.

What was said to Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, namely, that they would get nothing except by the sweat of their brow, should spur everyone to a greater determination to look life straight in the eye.

There is sufficient evidence to show that the price to pay for indolence and lack of initiative is greater. The pitiable events that occur around us daily bring it home to us very forcibly that indolence will bring only much suffering in its wake.

It, therefore, behoves everyone to attempt to find a place for himself in the world and to realise that happiness will come only after a struggle—and it might be a very painful one.

Prison Reform: The Future Of The Medical Aids: Degrees Needed In Social Sciences For Africans

DEC 20 1941

(BY MARGARET BALLINGER, M.P.)

SOME time ago, I mentioned in these columns that the Minister of Justice had appointed a Committee of Enquiry to investigate the working of our penal system. Further information is now to hand on this matter. It appears that the Committee is purely a departmental committee designed to investigate only the matters raised by Senator Hartog in his speech last session in the Senate, particularly the incidence of recidivism, that is, the falling back into crime of people who have once been in gaol.

It is a great pity the composition and the terms of reference of the Committee are so restricted, particularly as it now appears that the Committee will not take public evidence. However, if the Committee does its business well, it will be bound to review the whole of our penal system as it affects those who fall into its clutches, that is, the treatment given to convicted persons inside our prisons, and the tendency of that treatment to enable them to become law-abiding members of the community, or to strengthen their anti-social tendencies. If it does this, there will be no doubt of the character of its findings, and the way will be paved for a much needed reform in a Department of State which, if not reformed, threatens to become one of the most expensive departments of Government, and one of the least sound, socially.

In the meantime, it is understood that the National Council of African Women will discuss the whole question of prisons and the prison population at its forthcoming conference in Johannesburg, and will draw up a memorandum on the subject as it affects Africans, to be submitted to the Committee of Enquiry.

The Future Of the Medical Aids

The future of the "Medical Aid". scheme, under which Africans are being trained at Fort Hare, has recently been called in question by two circumstances : first, the inability or the unwillingness of the Department of Public Health to place those students who are now emerging fully qualified under the scheme, and secondly, the decision of the University of the Witwatersrand to give full medical training to Non-Europeans. A Committee of Enquiry, under the Chairmanship of Mr. Douglas Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs, is now busy investigating this matter.

It is natural that the provision of full medical training for Non-Europeans should put the value of the medical aid scheme again in question since the scheme was intended to provide both a training and avenues of employment in medicine for Africans so long as full medical training was not open to them in South Africa. The course is too long and expensive for the qualification and opportunities it gives once full medical training is available. At the same time, it will be a great pity if the faculties built up by Fort Hare in connection with the scheme are to cease to be used to their fullest. There is widespread need and there should be plenty of openings for African social workers with a knowledge of the principles of public health and allied subjects, openings which could only be filled adequately by Africans. There is much to be said, therefore, for the institution at Fort Hare, of a Department of Social Sciences which will offer specialisation in public health to those students who feel drawn in that direction. In this way, the faculties of the College could be used to open wider fields of science and occupation to Africans than the Medical Aid Scheme could ever hope to do. This line of development will, I believe, be fully discussed with the Committee of Enquiry which has visited Fort Hare this month, and is also to take evidence in Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban.

Gleanings From Life

By Jo The Cow

DEC 20 1941

HEROES OF MY FATHERLAND

5-6a

(From Moments Of Feeling)

You sit down on a cold stone and think what existence means for an African. On him existence does not confer the right to citizenship. It means frustration. You will sometimes become depressed. As you have seen tragedy on every side of the African's life, you sometimes have wondered if your own nation has anything to be proud of in all Creation! Yes, there is much to be proud of. Sometimes you have felt the need for heroes. In difficult times you have wondered why we have been unable to produce heroes—because you have been told that crises beget heroes!

But, no, do not allow suffering to blind your eyes. Think of the greatest heroes of your own race, African Womanhood. They are the heroes of my Fatherland. They are so numerous and so close to you that you cannot see them in their proper perspective in the scheme of things national.

What greater heroes could you have, than they who will constantly give birth to millions of bright souls, that live only to be mauled and crushed by the rigours that a Colour-conscious world has placed in my people's way? These mothers, fated, nay, destined ever to bring forth a new Africa, and to watch their beautiful offspring, jewels of a mother's love, wrecked in front of their eyes, and themselves unwilling spectators—they take it all with philosophic composure and an immortal resolution to live and never succumb, even if God himself allowed (if he could act otherwise) Disease, Poverty, Malnutrition, Repression, Humiliation unbridled freedom to wreak their worst havoc on Africa's emergent soul. These mothers will not waver. Giving birth to children becomes a painful and cruel ordeal under these circumstances — but they will bear all this, and more, these heroes of my fatherland. Their heroism imparts a noble quality of endurance to the nation's character.

What, if their innocent nakedness is the sport of human cormorants that have regard for neither the sacred nor beautiful in the human frame; what, if poverty and dire need will drive them headlong into the arms of the rogue in whose soul beastliness is the prime inheritance from his animal ancestor; what, if the womanhood of my fatherland will be censured by the unprincipled, scorned by the pretentious, raped by the knavish; what, if amidst the inhumanity of excessive wealth, extreme want will force them to tread the crowded streets of our wealthy towns, with infants of blood compound, starving here, dying of malignant disease there; cursed and scorned at the rising of the sun only to be raped at its setting; what, if blows of untold violence shall come in multiple turns, tragic and ruinous—they find the heroes of my fatherland serving their national apprenticeship with immaculate constancy.

They see into the future, you see. They take all that happens with a philosophic smile, behind which is an inflexible will to live. The price is heavy, someone must pay if the nation will live. They pay it gladly — these heroes of my fatherland.

You and I will split hairs on the dialectical, shaping the nation's mind but they give the nation something more precious —stability of character.

It is painful Sir, but God surely meant them for a greater purpose. They take it all with a sigh that comes of unbounded strength, they take it like true martyrs — without a groan, these mothers, heroes of my Fatherland. I admit, God is Necessity and Necessity is God and He is great. I have never loved them the more, nay, I have never felt their greatness as I do now. The power in them makes me tremble, when I realise how we are blind to that which is strentgh in us.

If thou wilt know inhuman frustration, wrecked lives, shattered dreams, suffering that mauls the soul and mutilates the human form — Creation's one of many prides; if thou wilt know the cold steely sting of grief; the cruelty of constant anxiety; the disconcerting feeling of insecurity; if thou wilt know this and all that kills the beautiful in life, go to African mothers — the heroes of my fatherland. They are great Sir. I would be thrice as great as Aggrey and four times as great as the immortal Shaka, but I still would not equal them. The world has never produced finer humans than these women— they are something to be proud of.

They have been born, are being born, shall continue to be born until Africa sits in the councils of the world.

Services For Africans

DEC 20 1941

At its last session, the Natives Representative Council drew the Government's attention to practices in the Railways and Post Office which aggravate racial friction between Black and White when White clerks whose duty it is to attend to African patrons in these services take undue advantage of the public services to make the African the defenceless victim of their narrow racial prejudices.

A sane and practicable suggestion was made that as the mere provision of separate counters did not solve the problem of segregating the races, Africans should be employed wherever Africans patronised the services.

We, as much as sane thinkers among Europeans, realise that this cannot be a happy country for posterity if our respective attitudes are based on suspicion, ill-feeling and hatred. Actually, Africans have gone almost the whole way to meet the European, in an honest endeavour to understand him and that way to build happier race relations. For instance, we read, write and speak both his official languages; help him to mine this country's wealth at great profit to himself because of our cheap labour and are at great pains to understand his attitude to life and way of living. The response we seem to get for this verges more or less on a repressive attitude, now and then reluctantly philanthropic, and that, mostly when its continuation jeopardises White interests.

Mr. D. L. Smit, Secretary for Native Affairs and Chairman of the Council said that the end of war would usher in a period of hope for the African. With all due respect for Mr. Smit and with all our esteem for his services in the interests of our welfare, we submit that delaying action now is one way of piling solvable questions for post-war reconstruction when we shall all need all our energy and thought for the very complex situation that shall emerge out of the present holocaust—winning the victory to lose the peace again.

And whilst South Africans—Bantu, European, Asiatic and Coloured—are shedding their blood to ensure to all men, irrespective of colour or creed, freedom from fear, our own Government is placed in the singularly fortunate position of being in circumstances to make a beginning now with the practical ensuring to all men freedom from fear. The employment of Africans in public services patronised by their kinsmen is one field where a very welcome and re-assuring beginning could be made.

Retirement Of Africans At 55

West African Pilot — [illegible]

THIS Newspaper has always advocated that Africans in the Nigeria Civil Service should be allowed to retire voluntarily after the age of 50, as in the case of the Europeans, and this plea has also been taken up by the Nigeria Civil Service Union which is also fighting for it. But it is always a matter for regret to us when we realise that some Africans, even at the age limit of 55 years, still beg to be retained for a year or two more in the Service. To be retained for what?

The compulsory retirement of Africans, after reaching the age of 55, was re-emphasised in the Legislative Council, in 1937, when one of the African Honourable Members asked a question about it and the Government answered in the affirmative (vide "Gazette" No. 22 of April 1, 1937). Since this is so, what is the justifiable reason for trying to retain men already 55? We know of such cases in some Government departments at present.

On grounds of economy, these men should be made to retire, even if they do not wish to do so. This step is also necessary in order to avoid congestion at the bottom where brilliant young men are aspiring for promotions to posts of responsibility whilst at the top those who have had their days and should go loiter to do so. These men are not even indispensable, because they go on leave from three to six months a year and others do their work. Supposing they die? NOV 10 1941

Some plead that they wish to save a little more to make their old age less burdensome. If before 55, these men cannot cater for their old age, what is the guarantee that they will be able to do so within the few years that will be granted them as extension? Government should always insist on the compulsory retirement of Africans at 55. NOV 10 1941

Trade Unionism In Nigeria

West [illegible] Lagos

NOV 3 - 1941

NIGERIA, like the rest of the Colonial Empire, has become awakened to the possibilities of trade unionism. Recently, there have been scores of trade unions springing up among us. More than ever before, in the history of this country, the working classes have come to a realisation that they must co-operate for the amelioration of their conditions of service or await their doom patiently like a sheep led to the slaughter.

NOV 3 - 1941

We welcome this renascence among the labouring masses of Nigeria. This awakening is an augury that the people of this country mean to march side by side with the other peoples of the Empire and the world to the new day that is being promised those who are at present suffering under the heels of totalitarian and capitalistic tyrannies. It is a healthy sign that in the march for progress Nigeria is not to be left behind.

Trade unionism should be encouraged in this country to the fullest extent, but Nigerians must understand that in their zeal to form trade unions they should not overshoot the mark. Efficiency should be the keynote of their determination. If that is accomplished, then their claims for better conditions can be pressed home with all the constitutional means at their disposal.

The examples of the Labour Party in Great Britain and of the American trade unions should be beacons to guide the footsteps of Nigerian trade unionists. A central organisation such as the Trade Union Congress of England will help to hasten the day when the power of collective bargaining in this country will be the pivot for the solution of our labour problems. # Duse Mohamed Ali

ALTHOUGH he came to live among us, after he had passed his 65th birthday, yet the ten years of his sojourn among us have depicted Duse Mohamed Ali, Founder and Editor-in-Chief of "The Comet," as one who has been a leavening influence in our social and political evolution.

NOV 21 1941

Duse Mohamed Ali is a product of Egypt, North Africa. His spirit revolted against ideologies which were merely definitional and non-functional in their application, and he became a voluntary exile from the land of his birth. His book, "In The Land of the Pharaohs," is still regarded as one of the factors which laid the foundations of the ultimate realisation of Egyptian autonomy.

When he arrived here, barely ten years ago, his indomitable spirit and philanthropy were demonstrated by the founding of "The Comet," which has since served Nigeria creditably. Recently, a change was made in the organisation of "The Comet" and it was converted into a limited liability company, with Mr Ali, we understand, still its redoubtable Editor. That News-Magazine is now published twice a week. NOV 21 1941

On this occasion, the 75th birthday of Duse Mohamed Ali, we take this opportunity of wishing him many happy returns of the day, praying that Allah might spare him many more years of usefulness in the service of the country of his adoption, and the continent of his birth.

Natives Food and Control

DEC 6 - 1941

Giving evidence before the committee of inquiry on Native conditions, in urban areas in Durban recently, Mr. Maurice Webb of the Institute of Race Relations referring to the malnutrition, said that in normal times South Africa artificially raised the price of the Natives staple food-maize in order to subsidise the export of an alleged surplus that the Natives needed but could not afford to buy.

"In the war-time fruit becomes surplus owing to shipping shortage," he continued. "The effect of control so far has been to make the fruit scarce and dear to the ordinary purchaser. In normal times grapes can be bought in bulk at 2d. a lb. Last year with a fruit surplus, they were difficult to obtain at 6d. a lb. Then followed a wasteful distribution of oranges." Mr. Webb suggested that the Government should set its own house in order before asking other employers to improve Native labour conditions. DEC 6 - 1941 He recommended that the Government should pay wages equal to or above the wage determination minima, house all its employees in model houses, provide all its employees with a model balanced diet, recreation facilities, sports grounds, night-schools and adult education facilities.

The Roosevelt Flying Corps

West African Pilot

THE EMPIRE Air Training Scheme was pooh-poohed by us as an exemplification of Jim Crowism of a type which is bound to create doubt in the minds of Nigerians with reference to their status in the shape of things to come, after the war.

Lagos

NOV 3 - 1941

It is, therefore, a pleasant relief for us to note the efforts being made by Mr J. A. Barker, an African, in order to organize the Roosevelt Flying Corps, which, to all intents and purposes, is an ambitious programme which is capable of realization, provided necessary support is forthcoming from the proper quarters.

NOV 3 - 1941

In order to train Africans to become Pilots, Air-Gunners and Observers, Wireless Operators, and Ground Technicians, the organization must have spacious land, excellent classroom facilities, and first class laboratory equipment. These cost a lot of money. Aviation Instructors are specialists who do not teach or demonstrate without adequate financial considerations.

Despite the difficulties to be faced, we give this project our Editorial blessing and wish it the best of luck in the world. But we must warn those who are organising it that, in order to attain to any degree of success, the following equation is sine qua non: 5 percent Inspiration plus 95 percent Perspiration equals 100 percent Aspiration. With this formula in view, we wish the Roosevelt Flying Corps the success that it deserves.

Working On The Mines

APPRECIATION OF THE FREE BIOSCOPE ENTERTAINMENT

DEC 6 - 1941

When the Africans working on the Mines are sitting round and enjoying every minute of the "pictures" (the free bioscope entertainment every week), they do not know how much trouble has been gone to in order that such happy evenings can be arranged. But an immense amount of work has had to be thought out and carried our before the pictures can be screened at the various Compounds on the Witwatersrand.

To show you that the pictures are suitable, we may tell you that every one of them has passed, that is, has been approved by, the Government Censor, before being screened at the various Compounds each week.

DEC 6 - 1941

The Mines are desirous of showing bright pictures that will really interest the Africans, give them pleasure and entertain them; and to this end the Transvaal Chamber of Mines appointed a special Selection Board to choose just those films which the Africans are most likely to enjoy. There have to be many, many films, as you can imagine, to provide for all these free bioscope entertainments every week [87 Compounds]; and these films are stored in a special depot at the W. N. L. A. Compound in Johannesburg and taken from here as required.

DEC 6 - 1941

You have heard what fine hospitals there are on the Witwatersrand. Hospitals are necessary everywhere for building back to health — good health — those who have been ill, and the free bioscope entertainment is given once a week at some of the Mine hospitals. The patients love the bioscope, and who knows but that it helps them to get better all the quicker.

DEC 6 - 1941

In addition to the pictures being shown once a week on the gold mines of the Witwatersrand, they are now screened similarly on the coal mines in the Witbank (Transvaal) area.

Everywhere the Africans appreciate the pictures.

Bantu Municipal Representation

DEC 6 - 1941

In many things pertaining to Bantu welfare Durban has never really felt that she could take the lead and show South Africa what a British city can do for South Africa's cinderella community—the Bantu. In matters of Housing and Health, for instance, she has always had grand schemes, but not much has come of these to set an example for South Africa.

But this did not mean that Durban had lost all its sense of moral justice or those cherished ideals of fairness which the city inherited from its British ancestry.

Not very long ago, the City Council had the courage to fix a reasonable minimum for its Bantu employees. It needed a high sense of duty and justice to pass this, for many White South Africans still allow themselves to believe that in spite of the African's growing efficiency and needs, he can always do with a little less still. Some still naively believe that a few economic advantages for the African will spell the ruin of White South Africa. Durban chose to live above this narrowness and accepted the more reasonable minimum.

But she has not stopped there. Plans are on foot for the placing before Parliament of representations whose outcome is designed to be the election of representatives of the Bantu onto Town Councils.

This is only driving the principle of segregation to its logical conclusion, if Segregation is not to be synonymous with repression. It is, in fact, nothing new to South Africa. By an act of Parliament the Bantu were granted representation in the Union Senate and Assembly. If they can be represented in the country's highest Legislative body, it is only logical that in order to have this machinery work smoothly and faithfully meet the requirements it was designed to satisfy, the Bantu should be represented on smaller legislative bodies too—like the Provincial and the Town Councils.

It is in perfect keeping with the spirit of the Atlantic Charter to grant the African this representation. Town Councils certainly have more to do with the life of Africans than Parliament in matters of detail, and their voice in the former will certainly contribute to a more informed and intelligent appreciation of difficulties that contact between Black and White has raised in the sub-continent.

South Africa is a young and growing country. This war has greatly widened the sphere of this country's influence—and now, more than at any other time in her history, South Africa is being called upon to show the world how problems of race contact can be solved. The solution of this will influence, for the good or the bad, the attitude of those countries in Africa which may be entertaining dreams of a United States of Africa—dreams entertained by our own statesmen too.

And as South Africa grows, the so-called "Native Problem" too assumes greater proportions. It is not an issue to be left to indecision and time. That would be fatal for posterity. The Black man has as much staked in it as the White man and upon the regulation of relations between these two depends the happiness or otherwise of Black and White posterity.

Foundations for a securer and united South African nation, embracing Bantu, Europeans, Coloureds and Asiatics must be laid now on principles of justice for all men—and Durban's endeavours in this direction deserve the unwavering support of all true South Africans.

56a-1942

Duty Of Bus Conductors

DEC 10 1941

THERE appears to be a notion among some men engaged in the motor transport industry as bus conductors, that they can be men who do not care for good manners, civility and those other qualities that make good public servants. Some of these men often do things which reveal that they do not know what is their responsibility to the public whom they serve and to the employers who make it possible for them to earn their daily bread.

West African Pilot
Lagos, W. Africa

On this point, the case reported in this Newspaper, a few days ago, in which two bus conductors fought for passengers and had to use teeth on themselves before they could be parted points out that some of these men can be classed as irresponsibles, and being so they are not qualified to be engaged in the public service.

We advise bus owners to be strict with their employers on this score. Civility and good manners count a lot, and any hint that these qualities are absent in any man, or any set of men, should stand against them as bus conductors. In this respect, we commend the action of Messrs J. N. Zarpas in willing to co-operate with their patrons by hearing their complaints.

We hope that the public will make a wise use of this opportunity. Anonymous letters condemn themselves, and are useless. All complaints should be made by responsible persons who really have grievances to make. We also advise other bus owners to imitate this wise move by Messrs J. N. Zarpas and Company.

No More Discrimination!

West African Pilot
Lagos, W. Africa

NOBODY who has followed the policy of this Newspaper, since its inception four years ago, will accuse us of repetition when once again we refer to the question of race discrimination. It is our pet theme and we have never allowed any opportunity to pass by without preaching the doctrine of race equality and fraternity, not only in the British Empire but throughout the world, because it is our firm and sincere belief that it is the only panacea for the world's ills.

We believe that all the troubles in the world today could be traced to the question of one race, one group or class of people, claiming superiority over and trying to dominate or keep down others whom they consider inferior. We believe that everywhere there is trouble, the gravity of the trouble may always be taken as a sure index of the extent to which one "superior" group or race attempts to repress others.

We believe that no race, class or group of people are superior to others, but that given equal opportunities all races of mankind can rise to the highest pitch according to individual ability and energy. This is why we welcome the recent pronouncement of Mr Ernest Bevin, published elsewhere in this issue, that after this war, there would be no more race discrimination in any part of our great Empire.

DEC 11 1941

Indeed, the utterances of leading labourites like Major Attlee and Mr Bevin have given us heart, as sure indications of a new day for the Empire, when everybody will be given equal opportunity to rise to the best position his ability can carry him in the service of his fellowmen.

An All-Nigeria Salt Control

DEC 2 1941

WHILST we fully appreciate the efforts being made by the Government to protect the people of Nigeria from salt sharks, we have to submit that stricter measures have still to be taken before anything near a perfect distribution is effected. News reaching us from the Provinces, and what we see in Lagos, have led us to this conclusion.

West African Pilot
Lagos, W. Africa

At Oshogbo, for instance, it is impossible for about 98 per cent of those issued with permits to obtain salt. Whilst the permit holders can obtain no supply, some owing bad debts, or those having "friends" in mercantile "courts" are alleged to be getting ready supply. Of the 100 people who buy salt for retail in that town, only a few sell publicly. Some are alleged to be selling privately at one shilling and six pence per cigarette tin.

We recommend the immediate taking over by Government or Native Administrations of the stocks of salt in this country, to be retailed by responsible officers. We use the word "responsible" with emphasis for there is no length to which the ingenuity of profiteers cannot reach.

56a

DEC 2 1941

In Lagos, we suggest that market sellers should be given more than one bag a week. Strict vigilance should be exercised by the public and the law officers to see that the present arrangements work well. If the hitch continues, we advise that an all-Nigeria salt control system should be instituted.

Appalling Chaos In Native Education

56a

OCT 11 1941

The reasons for the present "appalling chaos" in Native education in the Transvaal were analysed by the Rev. F. A. Winter, C.R., in an address recently delivered to the Education Committee of the Transvaal Teachers' Association.

Father Winter pointed out that the total enrolment of Native scholars in primary schools in the Transvaal was about 121.000. which represented about one-third of the children of school-going age. For the other two-thirds there were neither proper schools nor qualified teachers available. All available space in existing Native schools was full to overflowing.

Each province, said Father Winter, administered Native education separately, the cost being borne by the Government. In the Tranvaal the Education Department paid the salaries of all teachers, but the Department provided practically nothing for buildings or equipment. The salaries of Native teachers were "shockingly low."

The speaker considered that the lack of funds, and the inadequate pay of Native teachers, especially in the primary schools, were the principal difficulties in the way of better educational facilities for Natives in the Transvaal.

Dealing with the first of these, he said: "The appalling chaos and lack of steady growth in Native education is due to the failure of the Central Government to make adequate grants for this purpose. The remedy lies in the education of public opinion. Ultimately, the cost of Native education must come out of the nation's revenue and be voted for exactly as is that of European education.

"At the moment there is a block grant which never varies, and thus does not arouse criticism in Parliament. The rest comes from the Native Development Fund, which is financed out of direct Native taxation. It is ridiculous that the poorest section of the community shuld thus be expected to pay for its own improvement. Native education is the Cinderella of the public services."

On the subject of pay for Native teachers, Father Winter said that better scales were urgently necessary, and that proper provision should be made for the superannuation of Native teachers. At present no provision was made for pensions for any Native teachers, whether in primary or secondary schools.

Nazism Among Negroes

5-6a

During recent months Negro Nazi agents in America, acting on Hitler's instructions, have been energetic in sponsoring a black "back to Africa" movement in certain parts of the United States, particularly in Harlem, the Negro district of New York, says a message from New York.

The main object of these black Fascists, apart from unscrupulously capitatising upon legitimate grievances of the Negroes, is to split Americans into opposing camps, white against black, and thus to weaken the country as a whole and hamper its defence.

The chief of these negro Nazi dupes, who, fortunately, have only a small following among the blacks in the United States, appears to be one Arthur Reid, president of the "African Patriotic League."

Another black Fascist rabble-rouser is Robert Jordan. He speaks under the auspices of the "Ethiopian Pacifist League." The League formerly had an anti-Fascist programme, but with Jordan's adept guidance, it developed into a pro-Axis group.

WORKS WITH JAPS

Jordan works closely with the Japanese. He, it is said, periodically visits the Japan Institute in New York, which is registered with the United States Department as a propaganda agency for Tokyo. He seems to be an ardent exponent of of the Nipponese cause in the Far East, and his speeches are filled with such statements as this one:

"The Japanese is the friend of the Negro. Racially we are both the same. Japan has no territorial ambitions in Africa. It wants to live in peace with the black man. Japan has done wonders for China. It has fought Communism and it has fought the British. We nationalist Negroes are fighting them both."

A third outstanding negro fifth columnist, who specialises in betraying the interests of his people, is one known as Ras de Killer, who also advocates Japanese control of the whole of Asia. Like others of his ilk, de Killer is in favour of transplanting all American Negroes to Africa.

The propaganda, which is being fed into Harlem generally by a variety of anti-Democratic organisations, concentrates on building anti-British and anti-Soviet sentiment among the Negroes. Every leaflet and every street meeting agitates for an intensified effort to prevent aid to England and Russia, it is emphasised.

The United States authorities are keeping a close watch on the nefarious activities of Hitler's black agents, who, it is officially stated, carry no weight whatsoever with the Negro masses in America.

On the other hand, a number of progressive Negro organisations are doing all they can to combat the subversive doings of the black fifth columnists in their midst.

Rhodesian Amalgamation

DEC 25 1941

Colonel S. Gore-Browne, speaking in the Northern Rhodesian Legislative Council last week on Rhodesian amalgamation, said he thought both sides inclined to overstate their case.

DEC 25 1941

The only real difficulty was in regard to the Native question. He emphatically denied the charge that Southern Rhodesia was ungenerous to its African population, and advocated much greater co-operation between the Native Departments of the two Rhodesias. He thought nine out of 10 Europeans in his territory favoured amalgamation, but that Africans were almost unanimously opposed to it, largely because the Natives of Northern Rhodesia (who outnumbered the European residents by 100 to one) were satisfied with the existing form of government. The idea that, because Southern Rhodesia was a white man's country, Africans suffered more repression there than in Northern Rhodesia was largely the result of injudicious anti-Native expressions of opinion by ignorant people. Colonel Gore-Browne pleaded that Negrophiles and those prejudiced against the African should alike exercise restraint. The present pass laws in Southern Rhodesia were, he considered, temporary measures only. Another point was suspicion of Southern Rhodesia's land policy, though that Colony had, as a matter of fact, an impressive record in the matter of irrigation and soil conservation.

DEC 25 1941 DEC 25 1941

Inter-Dependence of the Races

Finally, Africans feared a colour bar. That issue must be faced. The European worker must, of course, be protected against unfair competition, for it would be disastrous to Africa if the white worker were crowded out. The Northern Rhodesia Labour Party realised the inter-dependence of the races, but Southern Rhodesia carried protection of the European worker too far, with the result that the African received less than a fair share of the semi-skilled work. The leader of the Labour Party had agreed that the issue raised by the Copperbelt Commission should be faced now by consultation between European and African workers and employers. He (Colonel Gore-Browne) thought that African competition was exaggerated, and he urged European workers to adopt a generous attitude, for the success of the country's future policy was largely dependent upon them. Victory in this war would be useless to Rhodesia unless it were bound up with an effort to build an ideal State for all sections of the community.

JAJBHAY WINS SINGLES, DOUBLES AND MIX-DOUBLES

(BY A REPORTER)

The Transvaal Coloured Championhips were concluded last week-end, and a record number of entries were received, including the leading player, Mr. A. Hoskins and Messrs W. Thomas, C. Dupreez H. Jajbhay the S.A. Champion.

After playing the eliminating round Mr Jajbhay played Mr. Hoskins in a five set match. This match was accorded a good audience by the spectators, and Jajbhay started off with full confidence and played an attacking game throughout, keeping Mr. Hoskins on the defence. Jajbhay's usual fore arm drives were well placed and after some brilliant display of tennis Jajbhay won in three straight sets.

A UNIQUE RECORD

Jajbhay and Dupreez met Hoskins and Thomas in the Doubles final, this match went full five sets. and after gruelling struggle for games, Jajbhay and Dupreez won the final. In the mix doubles Jajbhay and Miss Joel played Thomas and Mrs. F. J. Hariss and won 4—6, 6—0, 6—3. He was once again congratulated for having won all three titles thus creating a well deserved record in the Coloured Union for playing 8 years, and has now decided to retire from all South African Championships. after winning 61 championships within the above short period, a unique tennis record.

NOV 29 1941

The retirement of Mr. Jajbhay from active tennis will be a great loss to the Tennis Union and Tennis enthusiasts. In the ladies singles Mrs. Meyer beat Miss T. Reneke 8—6, 6—4,. in the finals. Ladies doubles was won by Mrs. Sauls and Miss Reneke against Miss Dupreez and Mrs. R. Jacobs.

Problems of Mining Finance

AUG 1 3 1942

PROBLEMS OF MINING FINANCE were discussed by Dr. W. A. Lewis in an address to the Conference on Mineral Resources and the Atlantic Charter, convened under the auspices of the British Association.

He summarised his paper in the following questions :—

(1) What further controls are needed in the London capital market to prevent fraudulent finance, and thus to increase confidence in mining shares ?

(2) Is it desirable to have more foreign capital in British mines, and how can this best be done ?

(3) How far should independent small-scale mining be encouraged, and how is it to be financed ?

AUG 1 3 1942

(4) What further checks on private mining in the Colonies are desirable to prevent exploitation and excessive export of Colonial wealth, or, if private mining disappears, what checks on Government mining, to prevent waste ?

Company promotion needed, he suggested, to be under much stricter legal provisions, as is now done in the U.S.A.

" On the other hand, the London Stock Exchange has itself so tightened up its provisions relating to shares to be dealt in on the Exchange that brokers assure me that there can be no repetition of the scandals of the past.

" Meanwhile, the mining industry has evolved its own method of inspiring the investor's confidence—namely, the emergence of powerful finance corporations standing between him and individual mining companies. These corporations have also non-financial activities : they may give specialist technical advice to, or supervise the operations of, the mining companies under their wing ; they may buy stores for them and market their product ; and so on..

" On the financial side, they have two uses. First, they hold the shares of many different mining concerns, and so spread the investor's risk, at the same time as they make it easier for the mine to raise funds. Secondly, their reputation acts as a guarantee that the mines under their wing are not mushroom concerns, and have the best technical advice and management, so that the public is more willing to buy the shares issued by these mines.

" From the investor's point of view it is a good system, and inspires his confidence. From the point of view of Colonial Governments it can be a disquieting development, because it means that sooner or later an entire Colony may find itself in the hands of one or two corporations.

" There are still areas where small-scale mining is economical, but the small miner does not easily raise funds. He has no access to the money market, and if he is short of personal capital has to act as a ' tributer,' within the limits of indebtedness allowed by his principals.

" This has driven two Governments—those of Southern Rhodesia and Tanganyika—to set up special funds for financing small miners, and where small-scale mining still has a future we may see more Colonial Governments acting as finance houses, as they already do in agricultural finance, borrowing money in London and setting up special institutions to relend to the small concern.

" The other problem is more difficult : how to control the giants. The sanction of private property, if it has any, is the competitive market, whose forces prevent exploitation. When competition disappears, labour is at the mercy of the employer, profits can be excessive, and the whole progress or retardation of a Colony may depend on a directors' meeting in London.

" It was not therefore surprising that Colonial Governments had tightened their controls. Labour conditions, the nature and amount of royalties, deliberate under-development of resources, and the quotas allocated in international restriction agreements were all matters calling for much greater control. The biggest bone of contention of all was profits.

" When the Colonial peoples realise that in 1937 the Trinidad mines earned in profits three times what they paid in wages to Native employees, the Gold Coast mines two and a-half times, and the Northern Rhodesian mines 20 times, and when they read of dividends of 100% per annum, they are apt to get rather sore, to ask why European capitalists are allowed and encouraged to come and take out the principal wealth of their countries, leaving so little in return, and to demand nationalisation, if not expropriation.

" There are easy answers : profits must be set against losses ; good years against bad years ; and not all mines are as profitable as those of Northern Rhodesia and Malaya. Yet the political trend points surely to the fact that sooner or later awakening nationalisms will compel the Colonial peoples to assume control of their own resources. Meanwhile, their Governments will be driven to increased taxation, and perhaps to experiment with joint public-private concerns, such as those in the Belgian Congo and the Dutch East Indies, where part of the capital is supplied by the Government and part by private enterprise."

Lord Samuel on Our Colonies

In a letter to The Times on the need for a forward Colonial policy, Viscount Samuel writes :—

AUG 1 3 1942

" While Parliament and public are more and more uneasy about the Crown Colonies, they are still hardly alive to their own responsibilities. There is no normal agency, continuously at work, which will link the democratic forces of the nation with the processes of Colonial administration, which will diffuse the spirit of British policy throughout the Colonial Empire. I suggest that the missing element should be applied by enlisting more fully the co-operation of Parliament. This could be done by establishing a Joint Standing Committee of the two Houses on Colonial Affairs.

" I do not suggest that such a committee should have executive powers. I would not wish to see the Colonial Secretary required to submit to it his proposals, or account to it for his actions. The French system of committees of the Chamber and the Senate exercising a large measure of control over the executive, or any approach to such a system, would, I am convinced, give us a worse form of government than we have.

" I envisage a permanent committee of inquiry and advice, whose sole duty should be to keep a watch on the doings of the 40 administrations of the Colonial Empire. It would probably find it advisable to send a delegation each year to one or another group of Colonies. It would publish reports on the results of those investigations—with, perhaps, further confidential reports to the Colonial Office when occasion required. Instead of ad hoc Royal Commissions or departmental committees being appointed spasmodically after some riot or disturbance had shown that things had gone wrong, this normal continuous survey would be designed to prevent their going wrong.

" Such an organ in the Constitution might render useful service in several ways. It would supply a channel for the ventilation of grievances. It would bring fresh minds to bear on the solution of problems. It would help to keep both the Colonial Office and the local administrations up to the mark. It might have a useful influence upon the Colonial politicians ; encouraging them by giving credit for useful proposals, while directing the light of publicity on irresponsibility and extravagance.

" And it would be of value to the Imperial Government itself, by giving to a proportion of its members—including many, no doubt, of the younger men ripening for Ministerial office—opportunities of useful service to the State, and of gaining experience at first hand of the actual problems of statesmanship."

Native Military Corps

(BY MAJOR FRANK BROWNLEE)

The question is often asked "What is the part of the Bantu in this war?" Another rendering of this question is "What part are the Bantu taking in this war?" There is a subtle distinction between these two questions and I propose, as far as I am able, to answer the latter in order to show what part the Bantu are taking in war.

This Native army consists at present of at least twelve battalions, each under the command of a European colonel and subordinate officers who have a knowledge of one or more Native languages and who are acquainted with Native customs and mentality. Many of these officers have been drawn from the Native Affairs Department. Some of the officers are hard-bitten campaigners of previous wars.

As far as possible, Native friends, relatives or tribesmen are kept together in a particular unit. This is in order to foster a spirit of camaraderie and to avoid those tribal differences which might lead to friction. So far there has not been the slightest show of animosity between one people and another. This is probably due to the fine spirit of discipline instilled by officers and readily accepted by the men.

So the Native soldier for the first time puts on his uniform and with some timidity lines up on parade, striving to obey orders he does not, as yet, understand, and above all trying to avoid that ridicule which is gall to any self-respecting person. There is no ridicule. If a mistake is made, it is pointed out without any barrack-square bluster. So the recruit gains confidence and in the course of a few weeks he becomes as efficient at drill as the old soldier.

Then he gets a day's leave. With his felt hat tilted slightly over one eye, he struts down the street, loving to hear the click of his iron-shod heels on the pavement, hoping to meet an officer whom he will have to salute. And how smartly he does it. In fact, he often doubles back on his tracks in order to be able to do it again. He meets the same officer, eyes right, salute; but the same thing can't be overdone. About the third time of meeting the officer seems to notice somthing familiar about the soldier's face and he smiles. This, to me, conveys the whole essence of the relation between the South African officers and their men. Kindliness from the superior and respect from the subordinate.

Here are some extracts from letters received from Native soldiers "up North":

JUL 4 - 1942

"It is nearly a month now since we arrived in the land of the Pharaohs. After three months up here I can say without fear of contradiction that the Bantu are really well cared for. I ride about with a major directing him which way to lead the convoy."

Another writer says: "We are not all gloomy. We feel as happy as rabbits up here. We feel proud and not one of us has a grouse. Corporal Kaba has put up weight considerably."

One who signs himself "Pen and Ink" writes: "We are soldiers. We have arrived in the North. When we arrived rocks tumbled over, stars disappeared, the enemies trembled. We stood still in the land of Pharaoh, the land of heat, the land of fleas, the land of turmoil, the desert land.

"When we left South Africa, the enemy rose with might, wishing to end the war before we got to them, having heard that our cannons were furious."

JUL 4 1942

Speaking of the South African soldiers, the writer says: "Their chests are out like the chests of ostriches to protect their little ones." The letter concludes: "Oh you South African men, join and become soldiers if only that you may learn something of this world. South African women, cease weeping for your sons who are in the war. Their lives are in the hands of God."

It is in this spirit that the South African Native soldier finds himself shoulder to shoulder with the democracies in the front line.

South African Unions Grow But Native 'Pass' Laws Remain

AUG 22 1942

(The writer of the following article, W. H. Andrews, is one of the foremost leaders of South African labor. He was formerly a Labor member of the South African Parliament and secretary of the South African Trades and Labor Council of whose executive committee he is still a member. He is one of the leading members of the Communist Party of South Africa.)

Daily Worker, N.Y., N.Y.

By W. H. Andrews

(Special to the Daily Worker)

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (By Mail).—The trade union movement is increasing by leaps and bounds. The A.E.U. had 3,000 members at the beginning of the war, now 11,000. Other unions have grown similarly.

Exclusive

But it is the growth of trade unionism among the Colored, Indian and African workers which is significant. The proportion of organized non-Europeans is still small, but they have scores of unions, chiefly in Cape Town, Durban and Wetwatersrand and Pretoria with a membership of probably 50,000, perhaps more.

The non-Europeans are asking to be organized and the difficulty is to find organizers capable and willing to undertake the task.

Many non-Europeans are in the army but do not bear arms except assegais (spears). They are paid less than European soldiers and their dependants have very little consideration at the hands of the government. Men and women are urged to enter the army and other armed forces and to work in the various war industries, but no amount of agitation has yet persuaded the authorities to make provision for non - Europeans to be other than unskilled workers in industry at very low rates of pay or non - commissioned officers in the armed forces. Even then a non-European non-commissioned officer must if requested take orders from any European soldier even if the latter is a private.

The iniquitous pass laws remain, and all the segregation and other discriminating laws have if anything become tighter during the war rather than relaxed in any way. These are the various reasons given when asked for an explanation of the non - European lack of interest in the war effort.

(Other dispatches received since the above was written report that the pass laws have been relaxed in a few of the larger cities of South Africa.)

AUG 22 1942

While these potential workers and fighters for victory are discouraged and their wishes ignored the fifth column in various forms, Vichy French, refugee riff raff from all over the place are pampered and financed by the government while anti-fascist refugees from Germany and elsewhere are harshly and unsympathetically dealt with, some are interned with the Nazis. Italian prisoners of war are entirely controlled within the camps not by South African police or soldiers but by fascist police and officers. No attempt to win them from fascism but rather to keep them completely under its influence.

AUG 22 1942

Then, of course, we have the local brand of fascism even in the highest government posts, and every where else. Openly preaching treason, extolling Germany, publishing their papers, organizing, drilling, beating up soldiers, blowing up and burning houses, electric light plants, factories, etc.

A few are brought before the courts but the most lenient treatment is given them.

A Native's First Day At The Reception Depot

AUG 8 - 1942

(By Ndlovu)

I was privileged recently to visit a large Reception Depot in the Transvaal, where all recruits from every corner of the Union make their debut into the South African Native Military Corps.

As my car drove slowly through the entrance of the Camp I passed long queues of recent arrivals.

There the recruits stood in suits, coats, shoes, blankets and hats of all sizes and shapes and bearing the signs of having seen better days. They looked a rugged lot, these volunteers with their tattered clothes. There was an air of strangeness about them, wondering what the new adventure will bring them, as they stood holding their papers tightly with both hands.

AUG 8 - 1942

These men came from all walks of life. There were men from the reserves, from the farms and trading posts, ministers, teachers and ex-policemen, young and old alike, but all with one mind to become "Springbok Soldiers."

An officer told me that if a Native wished to volunteer for the Army he went to the Native Commissioner in his district who arranged all his papers and his preliminary medical examination, and then accompanied him to the Reception Depot.

The new recruit is met at this Camp by a genial old "Induna" who is a highly respected member of the Baralong. No matter what time the recruit arrives, the Induna is there to meet him and give him a welcome with tea, blankets and sleeping accommodation.

AUG 8 - 1942

This stage in his military career is filled with excitement, for he receives his greatcoat, a fine-looking hat, 2 lovely pairs of boots, 2 bush shirts, trousers and socks, knife, fork and spoon, in fact a complete trousseau. He just can't wait for, as soon as his kit is checked, he grabs his bag and with little ceremony discards his tattered clothes, such to the amusement of his onlookers and gets or endeavours to get dressed.

Some have their boots on their wrong feet, others have the tunics back to front while others do not know what to do with the tunics, but there was great fun, thrills and peals of laughter, what a life!

When dressed they jump on to the Parade Ground and shout strange words of command and go through very involved turns.

AUG 8 - 1942

But whats this! an N.C.O. shouts to them to fall in—their first order. But it is an interesting order for they now meet a representative of the Governor-General's National War Fund. This officer interviews each man and goes into his financial matters. If the man earned more money prior to enlistment, the fund endeavours to make up the difference and grants subsidies and gratuities.

After this interview another officer, kind and helpful in his ways, explains what the men are to do, how they are to behave towards their fellowmen an towards their superiors; explains their pay and how to go about receiving it; how to write letters and how to have them addressed.

A large lorry draws in the centre of the square. They are told to get their billy-cans and fall in again — what can this mean. All eyes are glued on the first man to put forward his can. Then with a loud haw! he opens his mouth and lifts the can. Yes! this is his national brew—"real Kaffir beer."

The day draws on. He is shown how to stand, to walk and to turn, how to march and salute and to time his movements with that strange formula 1—2—3 up 1—2—3 up, 1—2—3 up and "ama—left" and "ama right."

The fresh open air makes him hungry and gives him a healthy appetite, and towards evening when the days work is over he receives a meal fit for a prince, meat, soup and vegetables, bread and tea and—as much as he likes.

AUG 8 - 1942

And, as the stars come up and the moon lights up the darkened sky, he dances his tribal dance to the clapping of hands.

He is tired and lies down to rest wrapped in his warm blankets. He lies awake and recounts in his mind all the happenings of his first day in the Army. His eyes soon close and then with one more 1—2—3—he is fast asleep.

Emperor of Ethiopia

AUG 13 1942

Dr. R. V. Bingham, general director of the Sudan Interior Mission, writing from Canada to the South African Outlook, said recently :—

AUG 13 1942

"Haile Selassie has during his whole career not only shown himself a man of sterling integrity, but humane to such a degree that on his darkest night, when he decided to flee as a refugee, he liberated the one man imprisoned in Addis Ababa as a traitor. Instead of robbing the Bank of Ethiopia, of which he was the official head, he left it solvent and intact. The Italians collected all its assets and then refused to meet any of its liabilities. One who before the Italian war had established schools as rapidly as he could secure trained teachers, and in every school insisted that the Gospel of St. John and the Psalms of David should form a part of the daily curriculum, was not a semi-barbarian. He gave 500 acres of beautiful land for our leper work, contributed $5,000 for our leper hospital, personally laid the foundation-stone, and officially opened the building on its dedication."

Trade Unions For Bantu

JUN 1 3 1942

JUN 1 3 1942

The decision of the Union Government to recognise Bantu trade unions is a most outstanding victory for Democracy on the homefront.

At a time when reactionary elements ridicule Democracy, describing it as "atomic"—implying thereby its alleged inability to grow—Democracy has not only shown signs of active consciousness, but has actually taken a very live step forward, towards assuring the African that that "freedom from want and fear" promised the world by Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt and specifically promised the Bantu by Col. Deneys Reitz shall not be denied them.

The recognition comes on time and is a definite and conscientious endeavour by progressive elements in the ruling race to meet the reasonable demands and aspirations of the Bantu in one important field. And yet, at best, it is the first great reform and in order to serve the purpose it is designed to serve, it has to be followed by other reforms in the various walks of life where the Bantu meet Europeans in terms of employees and employers. This necessarily means new legislation to regulate the country's economic life in the light of the changed conditions. We have faith in our Government's intention and ability to do this. JUN 1 3 1942

To African leadership it is a victory won after a long and unhappy struggle and brings with it new challenges and new responsibilities. Our leaders express the unanimous feeling of the entire Bantu community when they say the Bantu do not desire to be a burden to the White man and that all they want is opportunity to rise to a higher plane. One door to that plane has been opened already and it is for the African leader to use his newly-acquired weapon to the advantage of the community.

African Woman Named Magistrate In Ikeja District Of Homeland

NEW YORK, Oct. 8, (ANP)—African women who are playing an increasingly active role in the affairs of their contingent welcome the recent appointment of Miss Strlla Thomas, a native of Nigeria, as the first woman magistrate in the history of West Africa, the Council on African Affairs was informed last week.

Miss Thomas, who previously held the distinction of being the first woman admitted to the bar in West Africa, is serving in the Ikeja district of her native land.

In the Union of South Africa, the National Council of African Women, under the leadership of Miss Mina Soga, who visited the United States two years ago, is urging African women to join war work clubs and is actively supporting war funds. It has taken the lead in forming the Non-European Soldiers' Dependents' league which is campaigning for government allowances for the children of African soldiers. The welfare of African children takes a prominent place in the council's program, particularly with regard to medical treatment, housing, education and recreational services.

Bantu women are struggling for full participation in the life of their country and "wish to have an appropriate share of the things of life," said Miss Soga at a recent convention of the council, and, she added, "the Bantu people are willing to enlist and work."

African women who work in the production of military blankets have just formed a Flock Workers union, in South Africa. They look forward to rapid improvements in their low wages and poor conditions, which they believe the recent recognition of African trade unions by the South African government will help to bring about.

"Our Honour Is At Stake"

"Our honour is at stake. I must have a second division."

In these terse words, attributed to our Prime Minister, is expressed the straitened circumstances in which our war machine is finding itself today.

AUG 1 5 1942

The African community submit, with the utmost deference, that our honour need not be at stake. Two million Europeans, not all of whom see eye to eye on the war issue, cannot contribute more than two million can contribute to the country's war effort.

56a

We are steadily drifting to the point where the homefront will be denuded of skilled artisans and technicians. Soon it will not be surprising if production will be unable to meet the demands made on it if the homefront is sapped of more skilled manpower for the fighting forces.

An honourable way out of the impending impasse is to arm the non-Europeans. We do not need to betray our honour before we raise a second division. If the Prime Minister cannot get a second division under prevailing conditions, he must tell the country, in much the same manner as he told the country when the Japanese menace was at its height, that he will arm non-Europeans and forthwith arm them.

That will give him more divisions than one. Our country's honour shall have been saved.

The attitude of very many of our esteemed Prime Minister's White followers is disappointing in the extreme. By the look of things, they appear quite prepared to stake the honour of their country to save themselves from the spectacle of giving arms to a community that has not embarrassed the Government with demands for a declaration of their country's war aims regarding the non-Europeans.

The Non-European s Cause

AUG 2 2 1942

(BY TEMA)

Many of the non-Europeans want to know what interest they have in this war and how its outcome can affect them one way or the other.

I hold that this war is likely to affect them most vitally and I will tell them why.

This terrible war which we are fighting is a war that will decide the future of all the people and all the nations, and particularly will it determine whether the oppressed peoples of the world are to be even more oppressed or whether they will be liberated. On the outcome of the war depends whether or not there shall be a future, for the backward peoples.

How can the non-Europeans believe this, some of them may ask? My answer is that they have the guarantee in the fact that they are fighting together with the three greatest liberty-loving nations of the world—Britain, Soviet Russia, America. Our enemies, Germany, Japan and Italy are at war with us because they hate freedom and are opposed to equal opportunity. They want to enslave the people of all nations and they aim to drive back the oppressed races to the conditions which prevailed a hundred years ago.

Should the enemy win, there will be a long dark and cold night for all the people of the world. For non-Europeans all progress will cease, and nothing but the worst kind of slavery will fall on them.

All the nations in the world, whether civilised or uncivilised, have legitimate grievances, but when I look at the position of the non-European in this country through the eyes of the long past, they are much more fortunate than the peoples of Europe have been. We have endured thousands of years of oppression and suffered untold millions of victims, before we attained the liberty which we now enjoy, and which we now defend, whereas non-Europeans are enjoying already some of the benefits which we gained after thousands of years of continuous struggle and at a cost of the suffering of many generations.

In a way, non-Europeans are also the heirs to the knowledge the great men of the past have won for all mankind, and it must be remembered that the progress that non-Europeans make in ten years, took the Europeans many hundreds of years, and Europeans paid for that progress in ten times more suffering and pain than is paid by the non-Europeans to-day.

All the wonderful discoveries, all the great achievements are open to them to share. It is true they have not yet the opportunity to enjoy the great legacy that the great men of the past have left us, but they have made great progress, andwhat is more important, the road towards opportunity and development is gradually opening to them.

If they put on one side of the scale their just grievances and on the other side all they have achieved in the past hundred years—their awakening from a state of backwardness in human development, of tribal extermination, they will find that their gains much aut weighed their losses.

AUG 2 2 1942

In defending South Africa, in fighting for the cause of freedom which the great Allies represent, non-Europeans are fighting for their own cause and for a South Africa that can and will be mother to all her children, White and Black.

Union Native Policy

Speaking at the opening session of the Methodist Synod (African section) at Bethlehem last week, the Rev. W. Illsley, of Kimberley, who presided, criticised South Africa's Native policy.

Referring to General Smuts's speech on "Trusteeship," in which he emphasised that the population of South Africa was 10,000,000, Mr. Illsley said there would be no new order till South Africa was fit for non-Europeans to live in. There could be no peace while Africans bore unjust burdens imposed by a Government in which they were not represented and until obsolete ideas and unjust legislation, which limited their free and full development, were destroyed.

To face the present challenge, they must be committed to a forward movement which saw the need not for more Christians, but for "more of the Christian." AUG 2 2 1942

African Problems

London is again being plagued with subversive activity in Southern Africa. This time, the trouble is not confined to the Union of South Africa, although lately nationalist elements there have renewed their agitation and the Smuts regime has censored the arrest and internment of several opposition leaders. Pro-Nazi and pro-Jap groups are now showing their hands in Rhodesia, and it's suspected that they're behind labor trouble in local copper mines. There have been a number of sitdowns and "runaway" strikes (the native labor simply decamps into the hinterland), causing the British to increase troop protection in the area. The Axis groups are making wide use of the India trouble in stirring up the African natives.

More Pay For Transvaal Non-European Teachers

It is learned in Pretoria that the Transvaal Provincial Executive Committee has at last decided to review the salaries paid to non-European teachers and to teachers in non-European schools. It has been known for some time that these teachers have found their conditions of service unpleasant to a degree, and representations for some consideration have been made from time to time to the Provincial Executive Committee and the Transvaal Education Department.

The new scale of pay, which will come into operation in the near future, will, it is stated, go some way towards meeting the position of the teachers concerned.

Overcrowding In Mental Hospitals

Oct. 3, 1942

"PATIENTS are having to sleep two in a bed in South African mental hospitals for coloured people," states a high authority who is investigating certain welfare problems. "Ordinary hospital facilities in this country have kept pace fairly well with requirements, but provision for mental cases is far behind."

56

According to the latest report of the Commissioner for Mental Hygiene, which covers the year ended December 31, 1940, there was a shortage of 206 European and 1,962 Non-European beds. Since then the number of people requiring care has increased steadily, and the position has deterriorated further.

In his report, the Commissioner states that there appears to be little or no prospect of fresh accommodation becoming available during the war.

In view of this, he expressed the fear that the time is approaching when patients in urgent need of mental hospital treatment will have to be refused admission.

At the end of 1940 the accommodation available consisted of 4,495 beds for Europeans and 6,094 for other races. The numbers of patients in residence were 4,701 and 8,056, respectively.

APPALLING CONDITION

"In the case of Non-Europeans the position in some of the dormitories is really appalling. Patients are sleeping in absolute contact with each other. They really make a solid layer of humanity, so that there is scarcely room to put a foot between sleeping patients."

A start was made some considerable time ago in the erection of a hospital to accommodate 500 Non-European patients at Krugersdorp, but it is not yet completed, and even if this accommodation is not diverted to other uses, it will only ease the position slightly.

4 Freedoms Rally In Harlem Sunday

N.Y., N.Y.
Nov. 13, 1942

A gigantic Four Freedoms rally to be held in Harlem Sunday afternoon at the Golden Gate Ballroom, 142nd St. and Lenox Ave. is being welcomed by the Negro people with patriotic enthusiasm reaching a new height with the Allied invasion of Africa.

African students at Columbia University and workers residing in Harlem, told Angelo Herndon and Charles A. Collins, members of the Arrangements Committee of the Four Freedoms rally that the Allied offensive would be met by the natives with open arms.

56

Collins told the Daily Worker yesterday that the fight against lynchings and the struggle for the passage of the anti-Poll Tax Bill makes the Four Freedoms rally a decisive factor in mobilizing the American people behind the incipient Hitler agents at work in the South.

Collins made a special appeal to white workers to attend the rally.

Among the many noted speakers will be Congressman Vito Marcantonio who will, along with representatives from other nations, call for the extension of the Four Freedoms to every part of the globe.

Military and Civil Rights Are Insured—Emperor Gives Word to Abolish Slavery

By ROBERT P. POST

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Feb. 3—A two-year agreement between Britain and Ethiopia was announced by Anthony Eden, Foreign Secretary, in the House of Commons today, under which Britain provides Haile Selassie with £2,500,000. It also provides for a British military mission and British advisers to the Emperor as well as for the presence of British magistrates in Ethiopian courts.

Altogether the agreement would seem to amount to a victory for that school of thought—mainly a military one, as opposed to the Foreign Office—that maintains that in the future the British should keep the strictest kind of hand on Ethiopia.

The agreement, which may be succeeded by a formal treaty, provides that in addition to the judges of the high and imperial courts, which shall have British judges on the bench, assessors shall sit on the lower courts where it is deemed politic. These lower courts shall have power to inflict punishment up to five years' imprisonment and fines up to 2,000 Maria Theresa dollars or twenty lashes.

In addition, the British, at the request of the Emperor, according to Mr. Eden, will provide a police commissioner, police officers and inspectors.

FEB 4 - 1942

At the same time Haile Selassie agrees to furnish the British general officer commanding in East Africa all possible assistance, not to make any external war without British permission and to leave the treatment of all Italians, whether military prisoners or civilians, in Britain's hands.

The Emperor also gives the British a "blank check" so far as air transport in Ethiopia is concerned, granting them full authority to fly to, in and over the country, and agreeing not to let any other foreign nation do so without British permission.

Furthermore, in return in the grant of money, the British get the right to use all immovable property belonging to the Italian State without payment, to build on Ethiopian ground anything the Commander in Chief thinks necessary to the conduct of war. He also reecives authority to manage and maintain the Franco-Ethiopian railroad and the Addis Ababa wireless station.

Mr. Eden told the House that the British did not intend to profit by the war at the expense of the independence of Ethiopia, and in response to questions he added that he could not see any objections to other nationalities than Britain being added to the panel of advisers.

He also said that Haile Selassie—whose statesmanship he praised—had agreed to abolish slavery as soon as possible and that if Ethiopia wanted to conider joining the Inter-Allied Council of Nations fighting the Axis her application would be considered.

FEB 4 - 1942

R. G. Howe is going to Addis Ababa forthwith as British Minister, Mr. Eden added.

The agreement is to last for two yearsn whe, if it is not replaced by a treaty, it will be subject to denouncement by either side at three months' notice. If the agreement continues the grant to the Emperor will be reduced to £500,000 in the third year and to £250,000 in the fourth. The grant for the first year will be £1,500,000 and for the second £1,000,000.

ADDIS ABABA—Culminating a program of reform launched in 1924, Emperor Haile Selassie has issued an imperial decree abolishing slavery and serfdom throughout Ethiopia. He also ordered the creation of an anti-slavery bureau and special courts to supervise the execution of his edict.

Emperor Selassie

Selassie was regent and known as Ras Tafari in 1924 when the first step was taken to abolish slavery. He invited the Anti-Slavery Society of England to send him advisers at that time and a group came here headed by Lord Noel-Buxton, grandson of the abolitionist.

In 1935, faced with the Italian war, Selassie was unable to complete his reforms. After the country was conquered by the Fascists, the Italians wiped out Selassie's program and encouraged slavery in order to win the support of the rases, or chieftains, who would lose if forced labor were abolished. With the re-conquest of Abyssinia, the emperor has had to start all over again.

Selassie has also issued a decree reforming the "gabar" system, an established feudal social structure handed down from the Middle Ages. In the future, all gabars or serfs must be paid. Formerly they tilled the land of their feudal masters without payment receiving part of the crop for services rendered.

The last batch of Ethiopian exiles has returned. They are the remnant of those who followed the emperor into exile and settled in Jerusalem where the Coptic Church owns much property and maintains a religious community. Included were ex-ministers of state, noblemen and priests together with their families.

"Fit To Be Free"

FEB 16 1942

"The Ethiopians have shown that they are fit to be free."

Thus last week Foreign Under Secretary Richard Kidston Law* explained to BBC listeners why the British Government had finally got round to restoring the independence of Ethiopia.

But the two-year pact which King of Kings Haile Selassie signed with the British Government bore little resemblance to Magna Charta. In return for $10,000,000 in cash, the Lion of Judah handed the British a blank check. According to the agreement, British judges and assessors will sit on the benches of Ethiopian courts, the Ethiopian police force will be officered by Britons.

FEB 16 1942

The Emperor furthermore agreed to give all possible aid to the British Army, to stage no private wars, to permit only the British and those to whom they give permission to fly over his country. The management of the Djibouti-Addis Ababa railway and the wireless station at Addis Ababa will be in the hands of the Commander in Chief of the British Army in Africa. The Army also received the right to use all Italian property in Ethiopia (assessed at $320,000,000-$360,000,000) without payment. To help guide the Negus' footsteps, British political advisers as well as a military mission will be appointed.

FEB 16 1942

Parliament greeted the pact with solemn rejoicing. In the House of Lords Viscount Cecil of Chelwood called it an "extremely vivid contrast to the German Government's 'New Order.'" Only a few of the Lords had reservations about Ethiopia's new freedom. Though Anthony Eden had assured the House of Commons that Haile Selassie had promised to abolish slavery just as soon as possible, some of their Lordships wanted to know why the pact was signed before the emancipation was a fact.

The newly created Lord Wedgwood, potteries scion and for 35 years a stanchly liberal M.P., went off on another tack. "This overemphasized question of slavery! One can go into a sheik's tent in the [British-controlled] Jordan valley and have one's coffee served by a black slave. Don't let us be too virtuous about these things." What worried Lord Wedgwood was the fact Britain had not seized Italian property in Ethiopia outright.

One voice questioned whether Ethiopia had really been freed. Said Lord Davies carefully: "The agreement . . . strikes some as a hard bargain. . . . So long as Abyssinia is bound down by some of the clauses, it cannot be described as free and independent."

FEB 16 1942

But if Haile Selassie, busy receiving the congratulations of his people, had any such doubts, he kept them to himself. From Addis Ababa, where he has been waiting the British Government's pleasure since last May, he cabled his thanks to Winston Churchill for helping to restore his country's independence.

ETHIOPIA ADVANCES ON PATH OF PROGRESS

FEB 20 1942

British View Appointment by Emperor as Hopeful Sign

FEB 20 1942

Ethiopia's struggle to emerge from the twelfth century to twentieth century customs and practice, greatly advanced under the Italian occupation of that country, is being strongly encouraged by British counsel.

Notable evidence of this is seen in the appointment by Emperor Haile Selassie of Ras Ababa Aragai to govern a large part of the Galla area in the southwest.

Ras Ababa is said to enjoy tremendous prestige with his countrymen, because during the whole of the Italian occupation he held out at the head of an armed force within fifty miles of the capital and defied all the efforts of the Italians to capture him.

FEB 20 1942

He has impressed all British officers who have met him as a man of exceptional qualities. He purposes to set a new standard in Ethiopian administrative practice by paying his subordinates proper wages, thus doing away with the old gabar system, whereby the peasant was forced to supply the local governor and his retinue with labor, food and other necessaries.

Warner's Would Film Selassie's Famous Speech

OCT 19 1942

Called One Of World's Most Dramatic Scenes

OCT 19 1942

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—Haile Selassie, emperor of Ethiopia, was roundly praised in Hedda Hopper's column last Saturday when the noted Hollywood columnist and former stage and screen star said:

"Warner's would like to send a camera crew to Ethiopia to photograph Emperor Haile Selassie and show him delivering his famous speech he made at Geneva when Italy invaded his country. It is one of the greatest pleas for justice and freedom ever made and had nations paused to listen the face of the globe would be different today. The scene is wanted for 'Mission to Moscow.'"

"I saw Selassie many times in London in 1936. He is a great distinguished gentleman. I was in the house of parliament when Lloyd George defended Selassie for more than an hour, but Eden and McDonald wouldn't listen. Baldwin wasn't there that day. It was one of the most dramatic scenes I've ever witnessed.

"It was amusing, too watching Lady Astor. She tried to get in her two cents' worth, but there were so many other speakers, her voice was never heard. Would that Lloyd George were half his age today.

Ethiopia Settling Down

Loyalty of the Rases

Co-incident with the withdrawal of British troops from Ethiopia, the internal situation of the country is unexpectedly satisfactory, states the Times diplomatic correspondent, who continues :—

SEP 17 1942

"The Rases have been loyal. When the Wojeirat Galla tribe, to the east of Dessie, gave trouble, largely in consequence of the intrigues of Italian agents, Ras Seyyum, of Tigre, promptly turned out the militia levy 60,000 strong, and compelled the Wojeirat to hand over 15,000 cattle—largely stolen from their neighbours—and a substantial number of rifles to ensure their future good behaviour.

"In Gojjam, a difficult area in the past, the Crown Prince is Viceroy, and is keeping good order. Ras Hailu, whom the Emperor forgave for his treasons before he left his country in 1936, now resides in Addis Ababa. The recent affray on the Kenya border, in which a British police officer was killed, now proves to have been the consequence of movements of Somali nomads from what had been Italian Somaliland, not from Ethiopian territory.

"Another reason for satisfaction is the fact that, in spite of the general confusion caused by the war, the revenue has fulfilled expectations, and has reached £500,000 in the first year of revived Ethiopian independence. The Emperor, who has spent but a small proportion of his Civil List, has set a fine example of financial patriotism. The chief problem now before him and his advisers is to decide which parts of the expensive European façade set up by the Italian conquerors should be maintained, and which are either too costly for a poor country like Ethiopia to maintain or are unnecessary.

"Second to this in importance comes the training of Ethiopians to take the place of the Italians who have been retained to work certain essential undertakings. British and allied subjects are taking their places when they can be found, but the supply of substitutes is necessarily slow, as the training of Ethiopians must be."

An Ethiopian Conference

Oct. 8, 1942

Economics Discussed in Addis Ababa

An Economic Conference convened in Addis Ababa by the Emperor Haile Sellassie was presided over by Mr. R. G. Howe, the British Minister. The following attended the Conference :—

Brigadier D. A. Sandford, Principal Adviser to the Ethiopian Ministry of the Interior ; Lieut.-Col. C. Matthew, Judicial Adviser ; Lieut.-Col. F. E. Stafford, Financial Adviser ; Mr. D. M. H. Riches, Second Secretary, British Legation ; Mr. Gordon-Smith, representing the United Kingdom Commercial Corporation in Ethiopia ; Lieut.-Col. H. F. Birchal, general manager of the Franco-Ethiopian Railway ; Major R. E. C. Russell, representing the Occupied Territory Administration ; Major P. Rodd, representing the Senior Evacuation Officer ; Lieut. P. Goldbourne, Trade Officer ; Captain A. A. Frost, representing the D.C.F.A., O.T.A. The joint secretaries were Major M. E. Taylor and Ato Tastai Tegagne

The following attended certain meetings of sub-committees : Lieut.-Col. Claxton, D.C.F.A., British Somaliland ; Major W. Pryce-Rosser. Municipal Officer in Addis Ababa ; Major Ashdown, A.D.S. and T. ; Lieut. Hooper, representing the District Command, Royal Engineers ; Captain Bell ; Captain Burwood-Taylor, Transport Officer, Occupied Territory Administration ; and the Director-General of the Ethiopian Public Works Department.

The Conference discussed the following points : (1) the production and export from Ethiopia of cereals ; (2) quotas of imports into Ethiopia ; (3) utilisation of Ethiopian industries for the Allied war effort ; (4) postal and telegraphic communications ; (5) road construction and maintenance ; (6) formulation of a transport policy ; (7) retention in Ethiopia of certain Italian technicians and skilled workers whose services are regarded as essential to the war effort.

The Conference recommended that the Ethiopian Government should conduct a campaign to encourage greater grain production ; that a Transport Board be constituted ; that a competent road engineer be appointed with two assistant engineers ; and that a sufficient number of Italian drivers and mechanics be kept to drive and service road transport, nearly all being Italian diesel lorries.

Oct. 8, 1942

The following estimate was made of available motor vehicles : Ethiopia, 500 heavy diesel lorries ; British Somaliland, 300 lorries between two and three tons (all petrol, except six heavy diesel, and all in bad repair) ; Eritrea, 2,104 motor vehicles on March 7, since when several hundred have been absorbed from Ethiopia.

Major Pryce-Rosser estimated the cost of road maintenance at 100 dollars to the mile, a total of 1,320,000 Maria Theresa dollars a year. The Minister of Communications said the Ethiopian Government was prepared to spend up to 2,000,000 dollars a year on road maintenance, which a sub-committee recommended should be let out by contract to Italian road

ETHIOPIA DECLARES WAR ON AXIS

Roosevelt Grants Ethiopia Lend-Lease Funds to Rehabilitate African Country

BULLETIN! LONDON, Dec. 14—The Ethiopian Legation announced today that it has been advised from Addis Ababa that the Ethiopian Government has declared war on Germany, Japan and Italy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 17—Declaring that "the defense of Ethiopia is vital to the defense of the United States," President Roosevelt has ordered lend-lease aid extended to the Government of Ethiopia, it was officially announced by the Office of War Information, Thursday, December DEC 19 1942

The action was revealed in a White House announcement from the President to S. R. Stettinius Jr., Lend-Lease Administrator, which read:

"For the purpose of implementing the authority conferred upon you as Lend-Lease Administrator by Executive Order 8926, dated October 28, 1941, and in order to enable you to arrange for lend-lease aid to the Government of Ethiopia, I hereby find that the defense of Ethiopia is vital to the defense of the United States."

Friends and supporters of Abyssinia all over the world—especially those colored peoples who, since the war with Italy, have come to look on Ethiopia as a symbol of the hopes and aspirations of the darker races—have been heartened by the news of President Roosevelt's latest pro-Ethiopia gesture as well as the news that Emperor Haile Selassie has granted his people a new democratic constitution.

Ethiopia was extended membership in the United Nations October 9, this year, and, at the present time, is completing reorganization of her new army and is launching extensive training in modern warfare in order that her soldiers may take their place side by side with those of the Allied forces.

ETHIOPIA GETS ENTIRELY NEW CONSTITUTION

DEC 19 1942

Selassie Cheered As He Opens Parliament In Addis Ababa

By GEORGE PADMORE
(Chicago Defender London Correspondent)

LONDON — (Censored — Emperor Haile Selassie has granted the Ethiopian people a new democratic constitution.

Following the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the British Government and admission into the council of the United Nations, Abyssinia has let it be known that as soon as her new army completes its reorganization and training in modern warfare, Ethiopian troops will take the place side by side with other Allied forces and help purge the African continent of the Axis plague.

DEC 19 1942

The Emperor sent the following message to Britain:

"To the British nation we express our admiration and sympathy, in full confidence that the near future will see crowned with success its valiant struggle to save humanity from the domination of enslavement."

Natives Cheer Selassie

Thousands of natives dressed in their "Sunday best" crowded the street of Addis Ababa and cheered the emperor as he drove through the capital from his palace to the Parliament building.

The new assembly consists of two chambers: A senate of 30 members, mostly elderly statemen such as provincial races, governors of districts, judges and high ranking military leaders, and a house of representatives, composed of 60 members elected by the people.

The natives do not use the ballot box, but assemble together in their villages and the towns and after discussing the qualifications of the various local leaders, elect the ones they deem worthy to represent them.

DEC 19 1942

"They know each other," said an Abyssinian official in London. "They know who were patriots and who were Quislings, and none will be chosen who served the Italians; of that you may be sure."

Controls All Finance

The constitution embodies President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms. No Ethiopian subject can be arrested, tried or imprisoned except in accordance with the law of the land. All have the right of free movement. Except in the public interest and in accordance with law no one has the right to be deprived of his property, movable or unmovable. The constitution gives equal rights to all natives of Abyssinia irrespective of race or religion, and all are eligible for all civil and military office.

DEC 19 1942

The constitution also provides for an annual budget submitted to parliament by the minister of finance covering sums to be put at the disposal of each government department. No treasury receipts can be expended except in accordance with the budget.

Liberia Gets FDR Envoy

P. M. Daily
N.Y.-N.Y.

Negro Republic Proclaims Special War Emergency

OCT 30 1942

5-6a

By Stanley Burch
Reuters Correspondent

LONDON, Oct. 30.—President Roosevelt recently sent a special envoy to the West African republic of ~~Liberia.~~ He is Lieut. Col. Henry McBride, who arrived at Monrovia, capital of the Negro republic, after the Liberian National Legislature had proclaimed "special emergency measures for the duration and for six months thereafter."

This is the first word out of Liberia since Oct. 17, when the Reuter correspondent there cabled the first disclosure that U. S. forces had been landed. It is now revealed that American troops, including Negroes, have been stationed in Liberia for the past three months. (Washington has maintained complete silence on these reports.)

Col. McBride, who is described as a "special representative of FDR," has returned to Liberia after a brief visit to Washington.

At his first series of important conferences with Liberia's president, Edwin Barclay, it was said that an atmosphere of extreme cordiality prevailed. McBride then flew from one of Liberia's two newly built airports—Roberts Field—some time ago to report to his Government.

Pass Four Acts

Four important acts providing for Liberia's full co-operation in America's plan were passed by the National Legislature at Monrovia, capital of Liberia, after the longest session in the history of the republic—the legislature sat from October, 1941, to the end of last June, when it adjourned for reassembly this month.

The Acts provided for:

¶ Granting to the Liberian President of special emergency powers until six months after the end of the war.

¶ Authorization of the Liberian President to appoint a National Economy Committee to prevent profiteering.

OCT 30 1942

The legislature passed resolutions approving agreements entered into between the government and Pan-American Airways and a further resolution "approving the agreement entered into between the Liberian Government and the U. S. Government."

The following dispatch was dated Sept. 30 and was airmailed by the Monrovian correspondent of the African World and passed by the censor.

The correspondent wrote:

"American technicians and soldiers have won the affection of the people, especially the Negro soldiers. They can be seen in the streets of Monrovia daily. At a recent fire in Monrovia they rendered invaluable services and thus prevented the fire spreading.

"The Americans arrived in time to participate in Liberia's Independence Day, July 26. The night before the U. S. Army band made its debut in Monrovia when a dance was staged.

OCT 30 1942

"The affair was well patronized and the American charge d'affaires, Mr. R. P. Hibbard, was among those present.

"On the morning of Independence Day the President, as Commander-in-Chief, inspected units of the Liberian frontier force at the military camp at Barclay's training center. He took a salute from the review stand and at the executive mansion from the balcony. British and American diplomatic representatives were present. A state ball was held in the evening at Renoved Pavilion."

Establish Air Mail

The air mail service by which this dispatch was sent opened recently and leaves Roberts Field, Monrovia, once a week. A second air field at Cape Mount has been named Benson Field, for Liberia's second president.

Already new ceiling prices have been ordered by the Treasury Department to ward off profiteering and merchants are "falling into line."

Axis sources on Oct. 18 reported that strength of American forces in Liberia was estimated at "about one division," which would mean between 10,000 and 18,000 men.

OCT 30 1942

The original Reuter cable from Monrovia said RAF patrols had been established at Monrovia to counter U-boats which had been active 500 to 600 miles off the coast.

LIBERIA READY TO SERVE DEMOCRACY'S WAR AGAIN

NOV 7 - 1942

By A. M. WENDELL MALLIET

With the swing of war to Africa and the recent landing of United States troops in Liberia, the Dark Continent and its millions of inhabitants have taken on a new significance in the global war for the survival of democracy. Ethopia, in the east, and Libya, in the north, are still serving as fields of major operations against a brutal enemy.

But it has fallen to the small republic on the West African Coast, Liberia, to assume a role of protector of the Americas, in that her strategic position will enable the United Nations to combat the ruthless Nazi submarine menace and possible bombings from Vichy-Berlin controlled Dakar in French West Africa.

Ready to Serve Again

Military expediencies have made it necessary for the War Department to maintain guarded silence on army moves in Africa, but it is known that important measures are being taken to protect the Brazilian coast, particularly Natal, and to sweep African waters clear of Hitler's under-sea craft from Liberian bases.

The truth is, more news regarding the moves of the United States government in Liberia have come from London than from Washington. We know now that in the absence of U. S. Minister Lester A. Walton from his post in the Liberian capital President Roosevelt sent a military envoy in the person of Lieut. Col. Henry McBride to negotiate on military affairs with President Edwin Barclay.

Mr. Walton, as minister, had negotiated and concluded important treaties with the Liberian government and paved the way for Lieut Col. McBride, whose duties were of a specific and military nature. According to "Who's Who in America," Walton's work consisted in negotiating and concluding treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation, an extradition treaty, a treaty of conciliation, a treaty on aviation and a consular convention.

The conclusion is, therefore, drawn that out of the joint labors of Walton and McBride, the military forces of the United States are now in possession of a seaplane base at Fisherman Lake and two airfields, Roberts Field and Benson Field, and the necessary garrisons for troops, which, according to Axis sources, number between 10,000 and 18,000 men.

NOV 7 - 1942

The Liberian President and Legislature lost no time in swinging the republic behind the United States and associated nations in the total war effort. Recent legislation granted to the President special emergency powers for the duration and six months thereafter; regulation of air navigation and provision for airports of entry; the establishment of a National Economy Committee to prevent profiteering, and restriction of all alien residents who are nationals of countries not in treaty relations with Liberia.

As she served in World War 1, so she is ready to serve again in this the greatest of wars against human civilization. Liberia stands ready to do her share in defense of freedom, justice and democracy.

This is as it should be, for Liberia is a nation born out of the maelstrom of race prejudice, oppression, exploitation and the denial of liberty and justice. The republic was founded as a result of the work of the American Colonization Society. The country, after much opposition from Britain and France, declared its sovereign independence in 1847, and was recognized by most of the then Great Powers in 1848 and 1849, and by the United States in 1862.

The life of the young republic was beset by difficulties. Frontier disputes with France and Britain carved out large tracts of Liberian territory and reduced the area of 2,000 square miles from the republic which it claimed but could not control. Anti-Liberian propaganda emanating in Freetown has been a constant source of embarrassment to the republic.

Nazi Leanings Denied

Charges of pro-German leanings and of special arrangements between the Liberian Republic and the Nazis have been made since the outbreak of hostilities, but they have been denied by well informed persons. It has been said that at no time within the last five years have there been more than 30 Germans in the country, including the German consul-general and his staff.

However, as a neutral nation, Liberia has accorded the usual courtesies to the Germans, who mostly are traders and to the consular officials particularly as Germany had been the republic's best customer. They bought Liberian coffee, piassava and other products, and the ship captains who visited the country were said to have been more friendly than the British.

The future of modern Liberia is said to be tied to the large investments of the Firestone Rubber Company in its rubber development program. Firestone is said to have invested at least $50,000,000 and leased 125,000 acres of land in Maryland County, and Mont Serrado, 45 miles from the Monrovia. Already, rubber production has reached 15,000 tons annually, and it is expected that the 25,000-ton mark will be reached by the end of this year.

Friendly to Firestone

The Liberian government and people are said to be most friendly to the Firstone effort, but some Liberians feel that American exclusiveness and failure to integrate Liberian and American Negro technicians into their vast scheme of development, which in the last analysis depends on the people of the republic, is a slap in the face. Race prejudice and discrimination, it is felt, have been taken too far from their native soil to the insult of a sovereign people.

Possessing a coastline of 350 miles, and a fertile interior, Liberia is a country of 2,000,000 inhabitants and an area of 40,000 square miles. If, under the pressure of war, she adheres to the United Nations' pact and takes the high road of destiny, she is likely to become one of the great states of all Africa and a haven for the oppressed of her race from several lands, far and near. Liberia's President, Edwin Barclay, is internationally known as a well informed and progressive statesman.

"New York Age."

Delayed dispatches from Liberia where Negro American troops are stationed, reported the havoc wreaked when Private John W. Williams, 29-year-old Baltimore "Yank" allegedly went amuck, and obtaining a sub-machine gun, two pistols and a rifle, Tuesday night, killed two other Negro soldiers, wounded an additional pair and a white officer. The soldier, who was reported to have been temporarily crazed, was ultimately killed. Military police said it was believed he had shot himself.

Killed were Staff Sergeant Thomas E. Pittman, 32, of Portsmouth, Virginia and Private John E. McMichael, 23, of Raleigh, N. C. Names of the wounded men were withheld.

African Ritual Will Be Used In Tribute to Late Dr. Aggrey

Invoke Gods And Cut Sod

Will Be Held at Grave In Southland Nov. 26

Nov. 21, 1942

The first African funeral rites ever performed in America will be observed by African students at Salisbury, N. C., on Thursday, Nov. 26, in connection with the celebration of Aggrey Day in honor of the late Dr. James Emman Kwegyir Aggrey, African educator, according to the African Students' Association.

At this ceremony, which is to be conducted under the joint auspices of the West African Students' Union of Great Britain and the African Students' Association of the United States, libations will be offered to the gods, according to traditional African ritual, the sod will be cut, and a piece of the earth in which the mortal remains of Dr. Aggrey lie will be sent to Africa for burial in Aggrey's ancestral home on the Gold Coast.

Born on Gold Coast

Dr. Aggrey was born on the Gold Coast, West Africa, in 1875. He became a teacher in a mission school and later interpreter on Scott's Expedition to Ashanti in 1900. He was a graduate of Columbia University and afterwards professor at Livingstone College, North Carolina, for over twenty years. He was a member of the Phelps-Stokes Education Commissions to Africa and later became vice-principal of Achimota College on the Gold Coast.

In 1927 Aggrey returned to America to see his family. He died suddenly in New York City that same year.

The influence of Aggrey on the African people has been tremendous. His ideals influence many British colonial officials in formulating more adequate policies in Africa. Achimota College on the Gold Coast, Yaba College in Nigeria, Makerere College in Uganda, Fort Hare and Lovedale Colleges, in South Africa and Gordon College in the Sudan are some of the educational institutions which were either founded or reorganized through the initiative of Dr. Aggrey.

He was identified with the movement for intelligent cooperation betwewen the white and black races and the cultures which they represent. His famous parable of the piano keys, in which he taught that only when the black and the white races work together with mutual self-respect and interdependence will there be perfect harmony is accepted by all who are interested in inter-racial understanding.

British officials and representatives of many American organizations are expected to be present. Nwia-Kofi Nkruma, president of the African Students' Association, will cut the sod. Kweku Atta Gardiner, Fellow of the universities of Cambridge and London, and representative of the Students' Union in England, will deliver the address.

~~Patrolman Discusses Rear-End Car Crashes~~

~~A rear-end collision between automobiles may occur when the driver in front fails to signal his intention to stop or slow down or when the other driver fails to observe his signal. It may result from faulty brakes on the following car. Or it may be caused by the fact that the rear car was following too closely to allow for safe stopping in an emergency.~~

~~None of these causes is accidental. Failure to signal is not an accident. It is bad driving. Failure to observe the signals of the driver ahead is not an accident. It is carelessness. Failure to keep brakes in good condition is not an accident. It is the most dangerous sort of carelessness. Following the car ahead too closely is not a accident. It is poor judgment and bad driving.~~

Ethiopia's Economic Needs

During the Economic Conference held in Addis Ababa (a first report of which was given in this newspaper last week), the Ethiopian Minister of Commerce, after consultations with the Adviser to the Ministry of the Interior, submitted the following list of essential import requirements:—

Oct. 15, 1942

Cotton sheeting, 6,000 tons; matches, 1,000 cases; blankets, 150 tons; caustic soda, 500 tons; drill, 360 tons; cotton jackets, etc., 800 tons; spices, 600 tons; incense, 300 tons; sewing threads, 50 tons; cotton yarn, 2,000 tons; hardware, 300 tons; oil, 50 tons; khaki cloth, 1,000 tons; stationery, 120 tons; rice, 300 tons; raisins, 20 tons; soap, 100 tons; sugar, 4,000 tons; empty sacks, 20 tons; muslins, 15 tons; cigarettes, 25 tons; dates, 100 tons; chemical products, colouring matter, etc., 250 tons; medicines, 100 tons; and building material, nails, hinges, elec requirements.

It was stated that the Italian staffs of a hessian and rope factory, flour mills and auxiliaries, a shoe factory, and a canning factory, all established by the Italians, were willing to remain at their work and to submit to inspection and control by a British technical expert appointed by the Ethiopian Government.

It was also announced jointly by the British Minister and the Ethiopian Minister of Communications that a regular fortnightly air service, later to be increased to a weekly basis, was to be operated by the British Overseas Airways Corporation between Addis Ababa and Asmara for the carriage of air mails and passengers, in order to connect with air mail services to Khartoum, Cairo and London.

Steps are being taken to establish telegraphic or wireless telegraphic communication between Addis Ababa and all the main towns in Ethiopia, and to provide greater facilities for civil traffic.

For Kenya's new road programme the P.W.D. has adopted the standards accepted for the national road programme in South Africa. The maximum grade will be one in 20 (the present Limuru escarpment road is one in 8) and the minimum radius of any curve will be 500 feet. The roads are to be of asphalt-macadam and will be 20 feet wide, exclusive of drains.

Defense Of Liberia Put In Hands of U. S., State Dept. Announces; Walton To Return There Soon

Dec. 12, 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Government of Liberia has granted the United States, for the duration of the war, the right to construct, control, operate and defend airports in Liberia and to assist also in the protection and defense of any part of the Republic which might be liable to attack during the present emergency, it was announced by the Department of State on Thursday.

An agreement was signed at Monrovia on March 31, 1942, by the Liberian Secretary of State and Lt. Col. Harry A. McBride, special representative of the President of the United States, under the terms of which the United States was granted exclusive jurisdiction over airports, fortifications, and such other defense areas as may be mutually considered necessary. The Republic of Liberia retains sovereignty over all such airports and defense areas, while the United States maintains jurisdiction over American military and civilian personnel stationed in Liberia.

At the same time, by an exchange of letter between President Barclay and Col. McBride, the United States agreed to extend certain defense aids to the Governmnt of Liberia, and to assist in the improvement and extension of its road system.

The strategic situation of Liberia on the West Coast of Africa, and the consequent danger of attack or aggression by unfriendly powers, led the Government of Liberia to request the Government of the United States to give such aid as might be possible in order to safeguard the independence and security of the Republic. The traditional friendly interest of the United States in the welfare of Liberia resulted in the measures described above. Dec. 12, 1942

American forces, chiefly composed of Negro troops, are now stationed in Liberia in execution of the agreement. The German Consul and his staff recently departed from Monrovia at the request of the Liberian Government, thus eliminating Axis interests from the country.

American Minister to Liberia, Lester A. Walton, came to the United States in February, 1942, for consultation with this Government on matters concerning Liberia, and is expected to retprn shortly to his post in Liberia.

SCHOOLS PACED LIBERIAN CULTURE.

By Edgar T. Rouzeau
Courier War Correspondent Dec. 26, 1942

SOMEWHERE IN LIBERIA, Dec. 24. -- Liberians more and more are turning to America for the specialized knowledge they now realize their sons and daughters must assimilate if the country is to rise economically to the same parity she now enjoys among sister nations in the exercise of statesmanship

No Professional schools Here

This is a country without a single professional school of any kind. This fact becomes amazing when one pauses to reflect that at least 50 lawyers are practising their profesion in and around Monrovia, and that Liberia's status as an independent nation has been largely preserved by a succession of brilliant Negro statesmen, international jurists and politican

This has been the result of an ingenious apprentice system, much more rigorous in some aspects than the standard American collegiate courses in legal training. The Liberian system, however, has been found inadequate for other needs. Although there is no record of any such experiment, the system has yet to produce its first "graduate" in medicine, economics, applied sciences, agriculture or engineering.

Only a sprinkling of Liberian families have had the means to send their children abroad to be educated. But under President Edwin Barclay's 13-Year tenure of office, this hegira of Liberian youth -- not only to America but also to France and England -- has been given material impetus through establishment of a government scholarship fund. The wisdom of the program, now interrupted by the war, has been justified by the number of its beneficiaries who have returned and are making good.

Howard university, Columbia, Wilberforce, Hampton, Virginia Union, New York university and St. Paul Normal and Industrial institute are some of the institutions whose Liberian graduates now hold important government positions. Other graduates from these and other school have found employment with commercial concerns in Monrovia or are planters in their own right. Dec. 26, 1942

Howard University Grad Outstanding

Mrs. Helen Scarborough, who holds the post of assistant superintendent of public education, graduated from Morgan College, Hampton Institute and Howard university and also holds a Master's degree from Columbia. James McCrittic of Howard university, is a teacher and Emmett Harmon, another Howard product, is a former chief clerk of the Bureau of internal Revenue.

Johnson Moore, graduate of Virginia Union, is supervisor of research in the Bureau of Agriculture. Henry Luke, who studied in French schools in Dakar, is supervising government electrical engineer. John Louis Cooper and Henry Grimes products of the RCA Communications institute of New York, are respectively, manager and assistant manager o the Liberian Government radio communication service.

Hampton Well Known - Here

Arthur Sherman, graduate of the Montana School of Mines, is the government's chief mining engineer. John Cooper, of Hampton institute, manages a poultry farm for the Firestone plantation. Two graduates of St. Paul N. and I. Institut have found employment with Pan-American Airways. They are: Andrew Butler and Robert Sherman, while another Varney Sherman, is a teacher in an Episcopal mission school. Dec. 26, 42

Mrs. Essie Simpson George, another Hampton product, teaches handicrafts and child guidance; Maggie L. Dennis graduate of the Lincoln Hospital Nursing School, New York, is superintendent of the Baptist hospital in Monrovia; Mrs. Jeanette Cooper, another Lincoln hospital graduate, is head nurse at the government Hospital, and

Wilberforcean is President of College

Nathaniel R. Richardson, graduate of the Mergenthaler Linotype school, Brooklyn, N. Y. supervises the printing office; Mrs. Anna Kamanda, graduate of Morgan college and Howard university, is dean of Liberia College; Earnest Yancey, of Wilberforce university, is a private planter at Cape Palmas, Liberia, and Miss. Rebecca Cassell, who studied in Italy and France, formerly worked as a government translater.

Bob Reynolds Ignores Carolina Negroes, Wants To Free Indians

AUG 29 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 27.—Reactionary Senator Robert R. Reynolds of North Carolina, who can't boast of being an ardent advocate of extending the four freedoms to the Negroes of his state, was roundly criticized by his colleagues, Thursday, when he arose on the Senate floor and urged that the United States seek immediate independence for India.

Senator Reynolds, who is chairman of the military affairs committee, emphasized, however, that he was expressing his personal views and not for his committee, after Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky questioned him on this point.

Senator Reynolds suggested that the United States use her influence with the British to suggest that India be granted independence now. He said that it was his understanding that if given independence, India would immediately ask to become a member of the United Nations.

"How would the Senator feel if in the British House of Commons someone arose and said, 'We should insist that the American government give its soldiers the right to vote?' he asked.

"Or they might complain that there are localities in the United States where, through the method of imposing a poll tax, some of the voters of the United States have in effect been prohibited from expressing their [illegible] at the ballot box.

"Or they might say that there are some other places where equal rights are not given, where the right to vote, which is one of the elements of freedom, is not accorded, and that that rights is not given to people on account of some condition or on account of the color of the individual."

Senator Norris suggested that stopping the war to give India independence would result in one of the greatest civil wars in all history in India.

Dr. Thurman Speaks On Indian Question

One of America's Great Mystics and Religious Leaders Gives Views.

By PETER DANA

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 27.—"There aren't enough jails in all India," Dr. Thurman said, "to imprison the spirit of present day India that articulates itself in Gandhi and Nehru. The arrest of these leaders after the failure of the Cripps mission and the subsequent British bungling in India, is a clear indication that the Churchill government understands neither the psychology of the total fight for freedom nor the spirit that moves India today."

It was a pleasure to meet Dr. Thurman in the lobby of the Theresa hotel last Sunday morning as he was returning to Washington. A modest, stocky, black man, with resonant voice and smiling countenance, he is perhaps one of the few black men in this country around whom a great, conscious national movement of Negroes could be built, not unlike the great Indian movement with which Gandhi and Nehru are associated.

As a friend of many Indian leaders and as a student of Indian life and culture, Howard Thurman is equipped to speak competently of recent developments in India. As a democrat who knows that political freedom is the condition precedent to human dignity and knows that the Indians are both freedom-loving and keenly aware of their personal dignity, Dr. Thurman is solidly for Indian freedom now, and believes the Indian leaders have reduced to moral absurdity the British and all those supporters of the British position who pretend to fight a war for freedom on the so-called practical necessity of denying India her political independence the more effectively to wage a war for freedom.

There can be, he warned, no other unifying and sparkling principle for the United Nations thah that of the freedom of all peoples and their equality under the law. The very term, United Nations, in the context of the present struggle means united as equals for the freedom and equality of democratic peoples. "What is lost to the democratic side by the imperialist stubbornness of Britain toward India is incalculable; while what is to be gained can hardly rate the questionable [illegible] of face-saving, in view of the great moral defeat Britain has already suffered by her stand." On the military side, Dr. Thurman suggested, the British have failed to appreciate Nehru's call for a policy that will set on fire the hearts of millions of men willing and ready to fight for freedom as free men.

As for those American "experts on the Indian question," who are calling Gandhi and Nehru names and accusing them of sabotaging the cause of democratic freedom, Dr. Thurman says their very words are sufficient commentary on their "expertness" and their understanding of what is going on in the world.

Though he is probably one of the best known of speakers and thinkers in American college and university circles, Howard Thurman, dean of the chapel at Howard university and teacher of philosophy, is not sufficiently known to the general public. He is easily one of the most brilliant and profound men in America, young or old.

He has probably moved more cynical men and intellectual women to tears and further reflection than any speaker of his generation in the United States and Canada. A mystic with ever so practical a turn of mind; a speaker in the tradition of Roger Williams; a preacher of the social gospel with a thorough understanding of the economics and policies of the modern world, Howard Thurman suggests a Christian likeness of many of the best qualities of Gandhi and Nehru, of whom he is a close friend.

INDIANS SEE THREAT IN CHURCHILL TALK

His Remarks Tuesday Are Read to Mean Britain Will Not Liberate India

AMERICANS ARE WARNED

Victories Held Empty as Long as 'British Arrogance' Rules Allied Councils

Nov. 12, 1942

By HERBERT L. MATTHEWS

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEW DELHI, India, Nov. 11—Prime Minister Winston Churchill's statement that he had not become leader of the London government "to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire" was taken by C. R. Rajagopalachari, former Premier of Madras, in an interview this morning, as confirmation of Indian suspicions that the British have no intention of giving up India.

Mr. Rajagopalachari, like other Indian liberals with whom the writer has talked in the past few days, is inclined to minimize the African operations. These observers clearly fear that success will harden the British against any concessions toward Indian nationalism, and Mr. Churchill's speech will obviously strengthen that belief.

"You have occupied some unoccupied countries, such as Madagascar, Algeria and Morocco," was the way Mr. Rajagopalachari expressed it. "You Americans are thinking only of war, but England wants to retain her empire. Will America fight for India after this war if during the war you allow yourselves to be dictated to by Mr. Churchill?

"The American Government can tell the British they must solve the Indian problem. You can win the war without us, but you cannot win it the way you will want to win it.

"If this keeps up, your victories will have exactly the opposite effect from what you hope. The Indians will come to dislike Allied successes if they merely increase British arrogance, as evidenced by Mr. Churchill's speech.

"But there is no deep-rooted animosity. The Indians do not dislike the British; they dislike British domination. If [Pandit Jawaharlal] Nehru were in a national government he would not let [Mohandas K.] Gandhi's pacifism get control. He would help win the war."

Mr. Rajagopalachari concluded his talks with Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the Moslem League, with a second long conference last evening which clearly did not bring results. He would not discuss the matter today. He did say that he was trying to "bring the three most obstinate parties together—those at liberty, those in prison [Mr. Gandhi and other Congress party chiefs] and those imprisoned in the Throne of State [the Viceroy]."

THE INDIAN TRAGEDY

The British Weekly

1942

By NICOL MACNICOL, D.Litt.

Aickely, Kent.

IT has long been the fear of those who desire the good of India and Great Britain that the series of minor crises through which the countries have passed in recent years in their relationships with each other would culminate in a final breach between them. If such a situation should arise, how tragic, one felt, it would be, after so long and, on the whole, so splendid a partnership. If the parting had to come, surely it would come with respect on both sides, and even with affection. It seems as if such a happy ending can scarcely now be hoped for. However the blame for what is now happening may ultimately be distributed, it appears to-day that the final severance will come about amid anger and recrimination. We are nearing the concluding stage of the impending breach, and all that the spectator of this calamity can do is to survey it with such patience and impartiality as he can muster.

The Cripps Mission

Whatever errors we have committed in recent discussions, there was none in the dispatch of Sir Stafford Cripps to India or in the proposals for a settlement that he took with him. This time at least there were no hesitations or half-measures, but a frank and forthright offer. India was to have "full opportunity, immediately after the war, of attaining the same independence, the same complete freedom from outside control, as is enjoyed by all the Dominions, or for that matter by this country, under a constitution to be freely devised by the Indians among themselves." That is how Mr. Amery described the offer in his broadcast on August 9, and he added: "By that offer we still stand."

That offer was rejected by the National Congress. It is difficult to see how this rejection and the reasons adduced for it can be justified as statesmanlike from the point of view of India's credit with a world engaged in a struggle in behalf of freedom, or as patriotic from the point of view of India's deadly peril. The same failure to face greatly a challenge that transcends all personal or party or even national claims has manifested itself throughout the debates that have followed that rejection. Can it be questioned that to attempt, in the case of a great sub-continent such as India is, to carry through an immediate and complete transference of Government from the experienced hands that have been guiding it to those of wholly inexperienced persons, chosen no one can tell how and claiming to represent a people so divided into bitterly hostile parties, and to do this with a fierce and resolute enemy battering at her gates, would be nothing less than to commit national suicide? The demands of Congress are surely described with entire truth when it is said that they are certain "to bring about a complete and abrupt dislocation of the vast and complicated machinery of Government." And this was to be carried out "at a time when in Russia, China and Libya and other theatres of war the situation calls for the undivided energy, co-operation and concentration of all the Allied Powers."

It indeed would seem that Pandit Nehru was himself aware of the danger of these proposals, and the violence of his language in attacking Sir Stafford Cripps betrays his disquietude. One looks in vain among the leaders of the Congress for the magnanimity and the sense of world-responsibility that India requires at this hour in her history. We find these qualities, however, in another Indian, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, that wise and experienced elder statesman, as true a lover of his country as any of the Congress hot-heads. He sees clearly how India's fate is being imperilled by the inflaming of passions and the creating of divisions. His appeal for the abandonment of civil disobedience must be convincing to anyone in India that is still capable of a clear judgment. "It is my emphatic opinion," he says, "that no one has the right to gamble with the lives and safety of four hundred million people at a time when our internal dissensions and civil strife bring joy and encouragement to the heart of the Japanese."

Proposals for a Conference

Sir Tej Sapru would prevent such divisions by calling a conference of the representatives of various parties to discuss a settlement for the period of the war and to set up machinery for framing a constitution for the future. Meantime, the British Government should declare that in all matters of policy the Viceroy would be guided by the collective advice of his Council, which is overwhelmingly Indian already and could be made still more effectively so.

Close to Sir Tej Sapru in his views stands a younger leader, Mr. Rajagopalachari, till lately Mr. Gandhi's most devoted disciple. He, too, desires to find even at the eleventh hour a solution that will keep India and Britain together "and save India from the Axis." With fearless leadership from our side and these two men on India's, the worst tragedy may yet be averted and India's freedom preserved. But the omens are dark.

3 GROUPS IN INDIA BACK GANDHI STAND

~~SEP 17 1942~~

Moslem League Member and Laborite Among Seconders of Independence Plea

DATA ON NEHRU REFUSED

~~SEP 17~~ 1942

Government Refuses to Tell Where Arrested Congress Leaders Are Detained

By HERBERT L. MATTHEWS

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEW DEHLI, India, Sept. 16—The shadow of the Congress Party lay over the Legislative Assembly today as three members of other parties, including a spokesman for Mohammed Ali Jinnah's Moslem League, embraced the Congress doctrine of immediate independence for India.

SEP 17 1942

The Moslem League speaker coupled his plea that Mohandas K. Gandhi and other arrested leaders be released to negotiate with the Moslems with a threat that growing resentment might lead the Moslems to fight, and "that fight will be most terrible, indeed."

Every Indian speaker stressed that the people wished to defend India against the Japanese, but with one exception they agreed that the present policies were working in the opposite direction.

New Note in Indian Politics

It was a strange note in Indian politics to hear a Moslem League member defending the Congress party against Prime Minister Winston Churchill and the New Dehli government. But that was just what Maul-ana afar Ali Khan did. He, like other speakers, argued that the constructive thing to do would be to release prisoners and permit the Indian communities to negotiate among themselves.

"To ignore the Congress is a folly of the first magnitude," said Mr. Zafar. He characterized Prime Minister Churchill as "a very funny fellow" for thinking the world would believe what he said about the Congress party.

Another important spokesman M. N. Joshi, a labor leader, said: "I am quite certain that every Indian in this Assembly will agree that an Indian national government would raise an army of five or ten millions and intensify war production tenfold compared with what is happening now."

He made another point that three other speakers also emphasized today when he said: "The British Government has forgotten the lesson of Malaya and Burma."

"The following speaker, Sardar Sant Singh, declared that Malaya and Burma were the clearest examples of the British attempt to fight on two fronts, one external and the other internal. India would be the same, he added, unless the British met the Indian demands for freedom.

SEP 17 1942

The British will fight the Japanese to save part of their empire," Mr. Joshi, "but if defeated they can retreat to Iran, Iraq or Timbuctoo. But where will my countrymen retreat to?"

Refuses Data on Nehru

Sir Reginald Maxwell, Home Minister of the Viceroy's Council, refused this morning to answer questions as to where Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and other Congress leaders were imprisoned or how they were being treated. This was the first time such secrecy had been maintained. Its purpose presumably is to prevent any attempts at jail-storming.

The extent to which the Province of Bihar was paralyzed and isolated was especially emphasized by Sir Reginald yesterday in his review of the recent disorders. He made it clear that Bihar, so strategically situated and so important to the war effort, would be a key point in the whole Indian problem during the coming months. It was there, he left no doubt, that the struggle between the government and the Congress sympathizers would be most bitterly fought and would mean most.

The same, he added, was true of the eastern part of the United Provinces, which likewise had had extensive damage and where the situation at one time was extremely serious.

SEP 17 1942

The Home Member described "an orgy of destruction of communications and other government property, with whole districts isolated for days on end."

"A very large part of the railway systems in this area were put out of action," he said.

Damage 10,000,000 Rupees

He pointed out that such damage had required special implements and technical knowledge in many cases. It had started simultaneously in many parts of India, he added, and consequently he deduced that it could not have been spontaneous.

He gave as preliminary figures 340 persons killed and 850 wounded among the population, with thirty-one policemen and eleven soldiers also killed. Airplanes had been used to disperse a mob on one occasion, he said, but there had been "no bombing whatsoever."

"Government servants," he asserted, "have proved universally loyal, and the country as a whole has remained "steady." What strikes have occurred have had "political influences, backed, we suspect by ample funds."

The population at large did not join in the disturbance, he reported. The Moslems and Untouchables remained "entirely aloof," while large areas of the country were free of disturbance.

The speaker asserted that Congress leaders knew and approved of what was likely to occur and could not have been ignorant of the organization of disturbances. In Bihar and elsewhere, he charged, many Congress members "have been observed openly inciting mobs to violence and sabotage, while many others went underground."

"Now," he concluded, "the authority of the Government as a whole has been fully reestablished. Train services are practically normal, and goods, traffic also, but there will be severe passenger restrictions for some time.

"The posts and telegraph services are generally satisfactory except in Bihar. Scattered wire-cutting, of which there have been 3,500 cases, continues. Some main lines have been tampered with almost daily."

Danger Signal for India And United Nations

• Gandhi's latest move in threatening to launch a head-on struggle against Britain while she and her Allies are preparing to open a second European front against Hitler, is a serious blow to Indian independence and a danger signal for all the United Nations.

JUN 18 1942

Gandhi's action, with which unfortunately Nehru is reported to have compromised, represents a premeditated attempt to provoke a clash between India and Britain. This move parallels the Japanese-sponsored Indian "independence" conference in the Thai capital of Bangkok. To this meeting Premier Tojo sent a message in which he threatened to wipe out every United Nation soldier in India, including white and Negro American soldiers now stationed there. Simultaneously, the Mikado's Mahatma demands the expulsion of all "foreign" soldiers.

Gandhi emerges as the prospective Indian Wang Ching-wei, that miserable Chinese traitor who now sits in Nanking as Tokio's puppet.

Things have come to such a pass largely because Gandhi was given the opportunity to impose his traitorous program leading to the enslavement of India upon an important sector of the Congress party as a result of the failure of the recent British-Indian negotiations. Here Britain must bear the main burden of responsibility for failing to grant a Provisional National Government and to arm the Indian people.

JUN 18 1942

But now this responsibility must increasingly be shared by the Allies, particularly the United States, for our own national security is most directly affected. While we are engaged in mustering our main strength for the opening of the Second Front in Europe, we must do everything possible to facilitate the counter-offensive against Japan in the Far East. Such a counter-offensive is for the present impossible, and later will be immeasurably more difficult, unless it is based upon the mobilization and alliance of the peoples of the Far East. At the core of this alliance must be the unity of China and India.

It therefore becomes a matter of military necessity, a matter of our own national security, that the United States exert its great influence upon Britain immediately to take the initiative in reopening negotiations with the Indian leaders. Such action by our own government would also serve to give new assurances to the Negro people and to Latin America as to the just nature of our war aims.

President Roosevelt has assured the world that the Atlantic Charter applies to all lands. Under-Secretary of State Welles declared that the war must secure the liberation of all peoples and an end to the "age of imperialism." Vice-President Wallace spoke of the coming century of the common man and of the people's revolution, in which India and China have a tremendous stake.

This is the time to act in the direction of realizing these aims, all the more so because to fail to do so would be a blow at our national safety.

JUN 18 1942

Labor and the progressives should not lose a moment in urging our Government, working in unison with Great Britain, to do all possible to reopen negotiations with the Indian leaders with the aim of establishing a National Government and arming the people. The trade unions should also consider sending messages of anti-fascist unity in the war against the Axis to the All-India Trade Union Congress and to the All-India Congress.

BRITAIN FACES NEW ACTION BY GANDHI IN INDIA

Hindu Silent on Details of Freedom Move.

BY PRESTON GROVER.

WARDHA, India, June 15 [Wide World].—Mohandas K. Gandhi, again the little priest-politician, declared today he soon would launch a movement against British rule in India that "will be felt by the whole world."

JUN 15 1942

He made the statement in an interview in a little whitewashed room in this hot southern India town near which Gandhi lives much of the time on a sort of ranch surrounded by a colony of followers. Gandhi declined to outline the nature of the proposed movement.

As the interview progressed the impression was forced upon me that he himself was undetermined on the nature of the movement-to-be. It was evident he was troubled about the extent to which he would be supported by the important All-India congress, which has been one of the principal aids in his long fight for India's independence.

Wants Results Now.

But Gandhi reiterated he was not waiting until the war ended but wanted results now. He said that if freedom for India were granted by the British, he would be willing to have British and American forces remain in India to fight the Japanese.

Asked what would be the next move in event that a freedom demand were rejected—something he agreed was by far the greatest likelihood—he replied:

"It will be a move which will be felt by the whole world. It may not interfere with the movement of British troops but it is sure to engage British attention.

JUN 16 1942

"It would be wrong of them to reject my proposal [for immediate independence] and that India should remain slave in order that Britain may win or be able to defend China. I cannot accept that degrading position.

Renders No Real Help.

"India free and independent will play a prominent part in defending China. Today I do not think she is rendering any real help to China. We have followed a nonembarrassment policy so far. We will follow it even now but we cannot allow the British government to exploit it."

Thruout the interview Gandhi toyed with a wet towel on his head. He wears it constantly to help keep cool. He wore little else save a twist of white sheeting about the hips. He sat on a padded mat, his back resting against a roll like a padded hot water bottle.

Gandhi asserted he had been misinterpreted on statements that he wanted British and American forces to quit India at once. He insisted such an interpretation came from extracting sentences from their context.

Referring to reports that the United States was pressing Britain to make drastic concessions to India to bring her wholeheartedly into the war, I asked if he expected any results from any such action. He replied that he didn't expect results—but held some hope.

Propaganda Well Organized.

"But British diplomacy is so clever," Gandhi said, "that America, even tho it may not be committed [to Britain retaining control of India], in spite of the desire of President Roosevelt and the people to help India, may not succeed.

JUN 16 1942

"British propaganda is so well organized in America against the Indian cause that the few friends India has there have no chance of being effectively heard. The political system is so rigid that public opinion does not affect the administration."

Replying to questions what India could do to aid in the war against Japan in event she were granted freedom, Gandhi said:

"Great things. I can say that at once altho I may not be able to specify them today."

At present, he said, this country is being carried by the allies as "a huge corpse." With freedom, Gandhi asserted, India would respond with real coöperation.

JUN 16 1942

"I cannot say today that the whole of India will be in arms against the Japanese," Gandhi said, emphasizing the word "today" with an upraised hand.

"I have a fear that they may degrade themselves as some Burmans did. I want India to oppose Japan to a man. If India were free she would do it. In 24 hours her mind would be changed."

Gandhi charged that the United States must share some blame for India's position because she was fighting actively beside Britain, who, he said, was holding India in subjection.

"The allies have no moral cause for which they are fighting," Gandhi asserted, "so long as they are carrying this double sin on their shoulders—the sin of India's subjection and the subjection of Negroes and other African races."

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH McGILL.

JAPANESE CONCEPTS One of the false concepts which makes for much maudlin talk is that the ideal of democracy is international.

It isn't. When the 33-year-old Thomas Jefferson sat down and wrote the Declaration of Independence he was putting into words a concept which man had never before been able to see.

Men had fought for the ideal before. Men had died for it. But there it was in words.

They flamed around the world.

JUN 20 1942

But history has neglected to say that only here and there did the flame start other flames. Only here and there did the sound of the shot awaken in great reverberating echoes.

The Far East always has had a concept of the rights of the ruler.

One of the things that writers, strategists and philosophers forget is that after a few centuries a concept gets into the chromosomes. Once it gets there it is difficult to get it out.

When the flame of democracy was going around the world the billions of the great land mass of Asia may have lifted dull eyes to the skies. But, after all, a flame soon passes. When the sound of the brittle-dry scattered volley of the farmers' rifles at Concord sounded on the air, the sound was like the breaking of dry sticks by the time it reached the Far East.

The concept there always has been that of the rights of the ruler.

It is that concept which Japan now seeks to revive.

DANGER IN CHINA China had, and has, its appeasers. China has its great depressed agricultural classes. Pearl Buck and Lin Yu Tang have written of them as writers have written of our own sharecroppers, our own "Grapes of Wrath" people.

Many of the great landowners of China do not to this day approve of the Chinese fight against Japan. They believe in appeasing to hold their own power, just as there were those who helped Hitler along in Germany, thinking they would save their own property; just as there were those in the Churchill government who did, and believed, in the same manner.

The Chinese always had a concept of totalitarianism. Not democracy. Their concept was less severe because it was a government by bureaus and by common sense rather than by an army. This was why the Christian religion, which is a great radical and revolutionary force anywhere in the Far East, was so resisted by the rulers and the people in that great mass of land and islands of the Far East.

Japan, knowing that this concept exists, believes that if she can set up authority and crush the Chinese armies, China will accept the authority. The idealist will shriek in denial. The realist will admit the soundness of the plan.

The same would apply to India and this, too, the Japanese know.

That is why it has been so important to keep the flame burning in China. That is why the task of this country, fighting from the exterior lines, is so vast and so difficult. China might quit if all help is closed off. Japan knew this when she made her plans.

JAPANESE NATIONALISM It was in the 16th century that Japan first began to work at the task of supplanting China.

Japan and China fought a six-year war beginning in 1592. Japan overran Korea because it was—a dagger to her heart. That is an old phrase. (Bennett Clarke and the isolationists used it when they said fortifying Guam would be like putting a dagger to Japan's heart.)

Japan bogged down six years in Korea.

Oddly enough it was the Korean navy which won the war. It was a better navy than Japan's and in 1598 Japan was driven out of Korea. (She got it years later from Russia.)

In 1630 Japan considered a conquest of the Philippines. It is likely Japan could have done so. Spain was not likely to have been able to send enough help.

At about that same time Japan did take Formosa from the Dutch.

JUN 20 1942

This I put down to demonstrate the intense nationalism of the Japanese.

It is an evil nationalism. It is stronger now than ever before. It is but natural that millions in Asia should be impressed by Japan's gains. The Far Eastern mind likes to feel that strength is about it. China, even if not conquered, might adopt the totalitarian system.

That this influence is not theoretical may be seen by the evidence in Siam, Burma and in other sections of the Pacific.

That it failed in the Philippines, where the men of that country fought shoulder to shoulder with our own, is the one great tribute to us and to the ideal of democracy. The Philippines believed in it.

It is an ideal and the light of it does not burn in as many hearts and minds as you might think. That is why it is dangerous to regard the Asiatics as wanting it.

Indian Intrigue

By Ludwell Denny

WASHINGTON, June 18.—With battles raging on the seven seas and almost all the continents, distant conferences make no headlines. But two conferences on India may have bigger results in the long run than some battles. One is an Axis meeting at Bangkok. The other is a gathering of the Indian Congress Party's big three—Messrs. Gandhi, Nehru and Azad—at the Mahatma's sun-baked village of Wardha.

JUN 18 1942

The Japs, after destructive preliminary bombing of eastern India, have been holding off for a month. Apparently they are waiting for anti-British sentiment to duplicate the Burmese fifth-column activities before attempting conquest of the nearby industrial Calcutta area. At the Bangkok conference Jap, German and Italian agents are reported telling India that a beneficent Axis is interested only in winning independence for her. One propaganda dispatch says an Indian national army is being formed to co-operate with the Japs.

This would sound fantastic if it were not for the Burma experience—one British general estimated that 80 per cent of the Burmese turned against the British—and if it were not for Mr. Gandhi's statements this week.

There is nothing in Gandhi's record to indicate that he would ally himself with the Jap militarists directly, or that he would be any less hostile to Japs than to British. But his immediate object is to get rid of British rule regardless of the Japanese threat.

* * *

If Britain rejects his demand for immediate independence, Mr. Gandhi says he will make "a move which will be felt by the whole world." That he is powerful enough to cripple the weak war effort of British India nobody doubts. Indeed, if Mr. Gandhi had not recaptured control of the Congress Party from Mr. Nehru during the sabotaged British negotiations, Mr. Nehru and Sir Stafford Cripps might have obtained a tentative working agreement.

Despite Mr. Nehru's urgent comments the only hope of saving the dangerous Indian situation is that their mutual friend, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, may yet bring Sir Stafford and Mr. Nehru together on a compromise. Otherwise China will lose her supply route, and the United States will lose the only good Asiatic bases for bombing Japan—not to mention what will happen to India.

Gandhi Seeks Pact Of Free India, Allies

By the United Press.

JUN 18 1942

A treaty between the United Nations and an independent India for defense against Japanese aggression was suggested today by Mohandas K. Gandhi, Indian nationalist leader, the London radio reported.

"Gandhi said that he agreed to presence of foreign troops in India provided they were Allies of a free country under a treaty with India," the broadcast recorded by CBS said:

" 'I had in mind a treaty between the United Nations and India for the defense of China against Japanese aggression,' Gandhi said. 'There can be no limit to what a friendly and independent India can do.

JUN 18 1942

" 'I wish British opinion could realize that the independence of India changes the character of the Allied cause and insures speedier victory.' "

Nehru Says Japs Would Continue India Subjugation

New Delhi, India, June 17 (AP) —Jawaharlal Nehru, influential leader of the All-India Congress Party, said today "the situation in India is becoming intolerable," but warned that, despite Tokio's promises, the Japanese, if victorious, would only continue India's subjugation.

"We cannot carry on as impassive spectators," he declared. "Other deeds are necessary."

Nehru, Mohandas K. Gandhi and other influential men in the Congress Party have been conferring at Wardha on whether they can further their goal of Indian independence by helping or hindering Britain.

Nazis Worry About Japanese Victories

FEB 28 1942

Japanese Blitz Equal to Germans'; Hitler Is Said to Fear Yellow Men Are Growing Strong Enough in Asia to Take Whole Continent

56

CHICAGO, (ANP).—"White supremacy" in the Orient is taking such a terrific drubbing from the little brown men of Japan that the Nazis may forget all about any spring offensive against Russia and instead launch a drive against India to beat their partners to this rich prize.

FEB 28 1942

This is the view of newspaper men whose dispatches are cabled daily to the United States from abroad.

Rumors of Peace

Although it has been officially denied, rumors persist that Hitler is trying to make peace with Britain. This would be preferred in certain Nazi circles to a too-powerful Japan and a consequent threat to Europe.

It takes no stretch of the imagination to envisage the Nazis turning on their Japanese partner just as Hitler turned on Stalin. Throughout it has been a marriage of expediency, and the divorce can come at any moment.

180,000,000 Under Japan

Currently there are approximately 180,000,000 under Japanese control. Opposing them are around 495,000,000, including the 422,000,000 of China. These estimates do not include the 350,000,000 natives of India who are not classed as yellow.

As to how many more of the yellow millions will fall to Japan depends to a large extent upon Great Britain and the United States.

FEB 28 1942

It is no secret that British colonial policies and attitudes toward the non-white members of her empire contributed greatly to the Nipponese conquest of Malaya and Singapore and may lose Burma, and that Japan is capitalizing upon resentment toward white supremacy to pave the way for absolute victory.

Japan Master of Blitz

The facts show that Japan can make the blitz work as well as can the Germans, that they have an army equal to any other in the world, are well equipped and know how to handle the implements of war, and are skillfully directed by brilliant tacticians.

Japan is a nation of 98,000,000 persons. Conquest of Manchukuo added 36,000,000 more, thus making this eastern power on a population on par with the United States.

FEB 28 1942

Lately Nippon grabbed French Indo-China, bringing in another 23,000,000 yellow men. Siam's capitulation added 15,000,000 more. Malaya brought 3,800,000 an dthe Straits settlement, including Singapore, had 1,250,000.

Can Defend Singapore

Speaking of Singapore, there seems no reason why this great fortress could not be as well defended by the Japs as it should have been by the Allies. Since the British considered it impregnable—and well it might have been with proper air and civiilan support—the Japs should have a bastion of strategic importance, able to resist for years any allied attempt at recapture.

Borneo and the Dutch East Indies are next on the list. Borneo has 1,850,000 yellow men and the Indies a yellow population of 42,000,000. Their capture would provide enough resources to keep the Japanese war machine in high gear for many years. Java itself could support an army of 4,000,000, according to the experts.

Asiatics Indifferent

Correspondents at Singapore before its fall pointed to the indifference of the native Asiatic population. Most of them were merely spectators from start to finish. Civilian labor deserted key jobs, thus forcing troops to leave fighting posts to unload ships.

FEB 28 1942

On the other hand, many Chinese, ardent supporters of the "Free China" movement, volunteered but received only shotguns to use against dive bombers and tanks.

White Supremacy

The sweep down through Malaya was aided, to a large extent, by British imperial policy, which the natives reesnted. Unscrupulous white traders had cheated the tribesmen on many occasions and colonial bureaucrats continued to uphold the traditional white supremacy beliefs until the last.

Despite this, many natives wanted to fight the Jap invaders but received no encouragement from colonial administrators. At the last moment, these bureaucrats fled, leaving loyal natives, and in some instances Europeans of other nationalities, to the mercy of the invaders.

FEB 28 1942

What of Burma?

A few weeks ago Premier U Saw of Burma was arrested by the British and charged with seeking to make a deal with Japan. This was after U Saw made a special trip to London to ask for equality in the war effort as well as dominion status for Burma. He received a blunt "no" from Winston Churchill.

It is now a question whether the Burmese will remember this rebuff and allow the Japanese to annex these 14,600,000 additional Asiatics.

Death-Bed Repentence

56

Sometimes it takes horror, with all its impending uncertainties to bring countries and individuals to a common sense of plain justice. Beath-bed repentence is better than no repentance at all. This is shown in the case of the dying thief on the cross. So there is hope between the stirrup and the ground.

The long struggle of India with her British masters through all the ages has not brought to those benighted subjects the recognition and grave concern now hovering over them like thunder clouds.

It is stated that Sir Stafford Cripps has been sent on a special mission to treat with the Indian people. England no doubt by this time realizes the necessity of genuine goodwill and hearty accord with the struggle she is forced to put up in an effort to save her vast empire.

Let us all hope that the mission of Sir Stafford will be effective. But it would have been a finer thing if England in good times had inquired of the wishes of the Indians when it was necessary for the Mahatma to go on periodic fasts for certain requisitions for his people.

The move will not be in as finer faith now, while Great Britain may be in dead earnest, with honorable intentions of carrying out her promises.

The sad lesson comes home to all republics that the minority should be justly treated. There should be in no country or organization any group held in subjugation, knowingly against their wishes in a callous situation that spurns redress.

Injustice never pays. It is that insidious property that swells masters to believing that they can hold down a minority and disregard their wishes from a viewpoint of superior advantage. It is foolish to imagine that people mistreated and cried down by every subterfuge imaginable can be counted on to fully defend hard masters in the time of peril.

However, it is to hoped that the Indian problem, complicated as it certainly is, can be ironed out at the earliest possible time.

Further delay may prove unprofitable to both the British and the Indians, considering the speed with which Japan is driving west.

BRITISH PLAN OF INDIAN FREEDOM NEARS COLLAPSE

APR 2 - 1942

Sikhs, Hindu Group Turn Down Proposals For Post-War Liberty

APR 2 - 1942

56

NEW DELHI, India, April 1—(AP)—The Sikhs, warriors of the Punjab, and the extremist Mahasabha group of Hindus Wednesday night rejected the British plan for Indian post-war independence, and all India awaited tensely the decision of the majority all-India congress.

In the light of expectations that the working committee of the congress would turn down the plan because of British insistence of controlling India's war-time defense, there was an increasing awareness of the consequences of failure of Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to this sub-continent.

The deepest impression was made by strong comment of the British and United States press, pointing out that if Indian leaders, by bargaining, cause the plan to collapse, Indians will forfeit the good opinion of the United States.

Yet it was doubtful whether such warnings would be enough to change the congress committee's attitude.

APR 2 - 1942

Nationalists Bewildered

The average Indian Nationalist seems bewildered by what he regards as failure of Britain and the United States to understand his point of view on the need for an Indian defense councillor.

He argues that only an Indian can rally the country and he asks what objection there can be to placing the defense portfolio in the hands of an Indian like Capt. Sir Sikander Hyat Khan, premier of the Punjab, which provides the present bulk of Indian troops.

APR 2 - 1942

The prevalent attitude in both the congress and the Moslem League is that Hyat Khan is intelligent enough to take advice and guidance from Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, Britain's commander-in-chief for India. Even the moderates, led by Sir Tej Bahadur S pru, one of Britain's best friends in India, feel this way.

Wednesday's first definite minority refusals, auguring ill for the success of Cripps' effort to align India firmly behind the Allied war effort, were received glumly by Britons, and the press sounded solemn warnings that if the plan were scrapped, nothing could be done until the war ends.

The Sikhs, numbering about 4,500,000, turned down the program through their all-parties committee for fear they would be placed at the mercy of the Moslem majority of 13,500,000 in the Punjab.

The Hindu Mahasabha group rejected the British proposals and made common cause with the Sikhs because of opposition to the provision permitting formation of separate Moslem states if a single dominion is found impractical. The group's memorandum said some features of the plan were more or less satisfactory but since Cripps "unfortunately" had demanded the scheme be accepted or rejected in toto, the Hindu Mahasabha was obliged to reject all of it.

The Moslem League, which represents more than 77,000,000 Moslems, is expected to reply Friday. The all-India congress committee adjourned late Wednesday night after a long meeting devoted to drafting a reply.

Meanwhile the Nationalist Party in the central legislature issued a statement saying the only course open to Indian Nationalists was rejection of the British proposals.

Sir Stafford already has declared that negotiation on the defense item is impossible, so it appeared that only a compromise by the British war cabinet itself could save the mission from failure.

It is noted, however, that the British cabinet has avoided closing the door definitely to further overtures. The proposals made public Sunday bore the notation that they were not to be considered at present as an official declaration but as a program which would be offered formally if India generally were disposed to accept.

Hope As To India

With Britain's proposal on the Indian problem now before the world and some indications of immediate reactions already apparent, it seems that a tentative and moderate hopefulness may be justified as to the prospect for a general agreement as to wartime procedure.

Britain has not granted immediate self-government. That has been the demand of powerful Indian leaders. They have taken the position that India could be fully mobilized for support of Britain in the war only on the basis of accomplished freedom, not simply on another promise of eventual freedom. But what would the nationalist leaders of India stand to profit by outright rejection of the British plan?

That would play directly into the hands of those elements in the country which are working with the Japanese and the Germans. The Axis powers are strenuously putting forth promises of freedom for India in return for cooperation against the British. The most influential leaders of India well know that nothing but exploitation would actually be forthcoming from the Japanese militarists. So then, are these enlightened leaders to give strength to the Axis by proclaiming in effect that Britain's plan must be summarily rejected?

* * *

We doubt that Gandhi, Nehru and the others will so advise, for all they may say as to the shortcomings of the British proposal. Perhaps they feel that the period of negotiation is not yet over. And doubtless they are desirous of making Britain's commitment to independence at the earliest feasible time, consistent with the necessities of the war, as plain and as irrevocable as possible.

But these intelligent leaders must now be convinced that Great Britain really is desirous of establishing self-government in India as soon as such a move is feasible.

They probably can see that failure to go the whole way at once is due more to the honest concern as to the effect of such action on the war than to a desire still to hold out against home rule.

Suppose all responsibility in India were immediately relinquished by the British, especially in the military sphere? Are the leaders of the Indian Congress ready to assume that responsibility at once?

The defense of India now is a highly important part of the defense of the whole cause of freedom in the world. Would India's freedom be served by weakening the defense of all the free countries against the totalitarian militarists?

"We cannot here and now set about forging a constitution for India," Sir Stafford Cripps said yesterday. "That is too important to improvise in a hurried way."

It seems to us that there is the force of reality in that declaration and that Indian leaders will be able to see its logic.

* * *

Britain may be tragically late in acting to meet India's demands. But this latest offer does have the marks of sincerity upon it, and it probably goes about as far as Britain dares to go in her present emergency.

Of course, there is no immediate solution of this problem that would be altogether satisfactory. There are dangers and difficulties now in whatever course is taken.

If Britain were to say, without reservation, that she was going to withdraw entirely and India could go her own way, would that be any more reassuring plan for the menaces of the present hour?

* * *

There is, it seems to us, a good deal of merit and ingenuity in the British plan for dealing with the internal conflicts of India.

The Moslem territories would be given the right to decide by democratic vote whether or not they would adhere to the central federation. If they did not, they could form their own dominion.

In this way the burden of responsibility is passed back to the Moslem leaders who have been advocating a separate state. Their allegiance to the general plan should be won by the concession made to them. At the same time, the British may be hopeful that the considerable sentiment among the Moslems themselves against partition, together with the strong opposition of the Hindus to splitting up the country, would, when the time of actual decision came, operate in favor of one united dominion.

That hope surely must have been strongly held out to Hindu leaders. And there would seem to be some strength in the argument.

* * *

Britain, by so specific and unqualified a promise of dominion status, with the right even of secession, is on record before the world with a pledge which it is scarcely conceivable she could repudiate. That basic reality must be recognized by Indian leaders. They must see the immediacy of the Japanese menace. They must see that strength to meet that menace could only be diminished by an attempt now to work out all the intricate problems of transferring political and military sovereignty to India. They must be sure that Britain is fighting for the whole cause of human freedom, as against aggressor militarists who would destroy all freedom. Consequently Gandhi, Nehru and their colleagues would seem likely to be drawn quite definitely toward the British proposal, even though they emphatically point out its failure thus far to go all the way at once. That, we repeat, may be largely for the record. We do not see how they could expect much more from Britain at the present moment—or why they would want much more at once, in their own interest and for their own safety.

Backs Gandhi in Assertion That Distrust of People Must Not Cause Delay

DISOWNS AMITY FOR JAPAN

But He Says India Can Accept Military Help Only From Freely Chosen Allies

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 17—Agreement with Mohandas K. Gandhi's expressed view that the British should be asked to "withdraw from India" was voiced today by Pundit Jawaharlal Nehru in a press conference in Bombay. Pundit Nehru, former president of the All-India Congress party, qualified his affirmation by saying that he did not mean the British as individuals should pack up and go but he favored transference of political power completely to the people of India or a decision to do so without advancing any argument about what those people should do about it.

Pundit Nehru, who had just returned from talks with Mr. Gandhi in Wardha, said he realized that the British Government, "as constituted at present," was unlikely to do this in the near future, but that "does not make any difference to us whatever." "We shall carry on in our own way," he added.

He expressed doubt that Indian freedom would come in the near future as a result of "pressure from the United States." He reiterated his conviction that fascism and nazism were menaces to the peace and freedom of the world and asserted that he had repeatedly tried to prevent any development that might even indirectly help the nations that held those doctrines.

"Particularly my heart has gone out to the people of China, to whom I pledged my word—in a sense Indian's word—years ago," he declared. He said he had not been flase to that pledge, but he was convinced that for India to help China in her present grave need it was essential that India be free.

Pandit Nehru referred to Mr. Gandhi's recent statement agreeing to the presence of alien troops in India to fight an aggressor, provided they were there as allies of a free country under a treaty with India. He reiterated that it was fantastic to expect Indian freedom from Japan or any other power fighting on the side of Japan.

JUN 18 1942

"The defense of India," said Pandit Nehru, "is primarily an Indian concern. A free India would ally herself with those who would help her in such defense.

"Japan and the group of powers with her are reactionary and represent a social philosophy that is exceedingly wrong and dangerous."

GANDHI ASSERTS HE SOUGHT TREATY FOR DEFENSE OF CHINA

[By Wireless to the New York Times and The Chicago Tribune.]

WARDHA, India, June 18.—Amplifying his recent remark that he had no objection to the presence of British and American troops in India, Mohandas K. Gandhi told an interviewer today that he had "in mind a treaty between the united nations and India for defense of China against Japanese aggression."

JUN 19 1942

Asserting there could be no limit to what a friendly and independent India could do in this war, Gandhi said:

"Given mutual good will and trust, the treaty I had in mind should cover the protection of human dignity and rights by means other than resort to arms. I wish British opinion could realize that independence of India changes the character of the allied cause and insures speedier victory."

KOREANS CALLED ORIENT'S WHITES

Caucasian Traces Found In People By Study Of Physical Types

JUN 24 1942

56b

WASHINGTON—The Korean, Japan's most abused victim, is "the white man of the Orient."

More than any other major Far Eastern people, says Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, associate in anthropology of the Smithsonian Institution, the prevalent type of the Korean peninsula approaches some branches of the white race.

The origin of the people, as is the case with most Oriental races, is obscure, he explains. They may have been part of some prehistoric northward migration from Northern India, or, more likely, from the large region of the Turcic peoples in Central Asia.

The ancient Korean became submerged in the Mongoloid peoples with which he made contacts and it is remarkable that so many Caucasian traces remain. Three major physical types have been observed. The first resembles the Chinese. This type is found in the Yellow Sea region, nearest to China and is known to be of Chinese origin.

Second Type Is Short

The second type is rather short, with swarthy skin and sparse beard. It is close to that of some of the original Siberians, Dr. Hrdlicka says.

The third type, which is in the large majority and may be considered typically Korean, is of somewhat larger stature with a light skin showing, especially in the young, ruddy color in the cheeks. Among the upper classes it is by no means uncommon to meet an almost Alpine face with well cut features. Even light brown eyes are not unknown. All these point, Dr. Hrdlicka holds, to a strong Asiatic white strain in the Korean blood. These features are portrayed by scores of photographs of Christian Koreans which he took while making an anthropological study of the people some years ago.

An increasingly active interest in the history and former ways of life of this ancient land, for more than a quarter of a century the hapless victim of Japanese treachery and ruthlessness, is now apparent, say other Smithsonian anthropologists who have in their collections one of the finest collections of Korean artifacts in the Western World.

Korea was long "The Hermit Kingdom," rigidly excluding outsiders. Thus it remained ethnologically one of the least known parts of the earth until well after the middle of the 19th century. A major part of the Smithsonian collection was made by Ensign J. B. Bernadou, of the U. S. Navy, in 1884. It was considerably augmented in the closing years of the century by various attaches of the U. S. legation at Seoul and by travelers.

The material culture of the country was already considerably deteriorated when it came first to the attention of Europeans. In the 16th and 17th centuries the land was overrun by Japanese hordes and progress was brought to a standstill. Then came the policy of extreme isolationism which shut off progressive ideas from the outside. Added to these influences was the adoption of a form of Confucianism which stultified progress.

Gandhi Plans Treaty With U. S. For China Defense

56b

JUN 19 1942

WARDHA, India, June 18—(AP)—Mohandas K. Gandhi, the Indian Nationalist leader, said Thursday that if India were freed "he had in mind a treaty between the United Nations and India for the defense of China against Japanese aggression."

He made this statement in elaborating on an earlier declaration that he would not object to the presence of British and United States troops in India if the latter were given its independence.

JUN 19 1942

The idea of such a treaty was frequently mentioned during the discussions of Sir Stafford Cripps with Indian leaders several months ago.

Indian Headache

56b

Recent developments in India, though not widely noted in the U.S., are making that country an even bigger United Nations headache. There seems no doubt now that public opinion toward Britain and, inferentially, the Allies has gravely deteriorated since the Cripps mission. This is borne out by the almost unanimous Congress party support of Gandhi's move to oust British and American troops. Some observers believe the Indians, in their eagerness to see the British kicked out, are almost willing to welcome the Japs.

BRITAIN IS UNYIELDING ON NEW INDIAN DEMANDS

But London Realizes That Gandhi Is Able to Make Serious Trouble

By DAVID ANDERSON

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

56b

LONDON, July 18—A remarkable document, drawn up by the working committee of the All India Congress party and made public from Wardha last week in which the British were requested to relinquish their power forthwith, may bring India once again to the boiling point. Mohandas K. Gandhi stands behind this latest development, brandishing the threat of civil disobedience. He may be bluffing. The British, nevertheless, are well aware of the high stakes involved and will flatly refuse to abdicate or even talk about it. And they won't be bluffing. Internal stresses between races and religions in India are such that skillful manipulation can bring about disorder on a national scale through endless local fights.

Against this background there is now silhouetted the statement of the Congress party's working committee. It is a long resolution, some 1,700 words, inspired by Gandhi and streamlined by party members, including Jawaharlal Nehru, with an eye on foreign observers. It will be presented to the All India Congress committee for action when that body meets on Aug. 7. The belief here is that the resolution will be adopted because the party fears Gandhi's influence in the country.

British Reaction

British reaction is inclined to regard it with suspicion. There is no question of any withdrawal of British authorities and Whitehall is certain that Gandhi knows that perfectly well. It seems to British authorities as if he were indifferent to how the war turns out and was anxious to provoke trouble out of which he would emerge with India in the palm of his hands.

Reports from India make clear two points. First, that many of Gandhi's own supporters are eager to tone down the implications of violence contained in the resolution, and, second, that the Moslems and others outside the Congress party ridicule its naive assumption that the leaders of India can work out their own salvation once the British have gone—saying it is a trick to catch them.

Gandhi has called his resolution "open rebellion," but milder characters serving under him speak of it as giving Britain another chance. If it is anything, British observers say, it is the open rebellion of the Congress party against the rest of India, rather than against Britain.

The Congress has 240,000,000 Hindus who might conceivably one day be enrolled in some sort of political organization, while all the rest of the parties together could muster only 100,000,000 between them, of which three-quarters would be Moslems, presumably with allegiance to the Moslem League. However, the Congress has not done too well politically in recent years and the present bid for power looks like a gamble.

Strange Ideas

Woven into the fabric of the Wardha resolution are a strange assortment of ideas. It opens with the pointblank assertion that British rule in India must end immediately. It then goes on to say that the Congress has been most patient (later it adds this patience has run out and civil disobedience will be invoked unless——) especially during the Cripps mission, when Britain "frustrated" India.

There follow several paragraphs in which Malaya and Burma are deplored and it is said that India must resist aggression but cannot under present circumstances when ill-will predominates and there must be joint enterprise between India and the United Nations—"this is only possible if India feels the glow of freedom."

Critics of the Congress were not slow to point out that India certainly could not resist aggression without British and American troops and that the resolution does not ask for their withdrawal, though it implies there should be Indian control of the country, which would make the operation of these forces difficult.

On Domestic Affairs

Going on to domestic affairs the resolution holds that India should be left alone to unravel the communal tangle and set its house in order. Once the British have gone—not actually, it is added, the "British," meaning the authority and not men and women—the "responsible" leaders would be at liberty to work out the joint war effort against the Axis powers. Softening its tone just before rising to a final crescendo, the resolution disclaims any wish to embarrass Britain or the Allied war effort, nor does it seek to be hasty in finding a solution. And then the committee comes to its conclusion as follows:

"Should, however, this appeal fail the Congress * * * will reluctantly be compelled to utilize all the non-violent strength it has gathered since 1920. * * * Such a widespread struggle would inevitably be under the leadership of Gandhi."

56b

One of two things is most likely to happen. As has already been said, the Congress governing committee is expected to adopt the resolution, after which the non-violence campaign will be launched, probably toward the end of the year once it is seen that the British are determined to stand firm. The trouble may die down as it did in 1940, when non-violence was invoked for the third time in twenty years. Or it may spread like wildfire, in which case there will be arrests and vigorous action by the local authorities and by troops if the need arises.

Violent “Non-Violence”

It was in the Fall of 1920 when Gandhi introduced his technique of non-violence to the world. The Congress gave its support and early in 1921 riots broke out and by August reached their peak when the Moslems of Bombay Province turned on the Hindu population in an unscheduled rebellion. Gandhi was locked up in March, 1922. The same story was repeated in 1931, with variations.

What can happen today? All question of the United Nations mounting an offensive against Burma would be out. Help for China would vanish and the defense of India would be gravely endangered. British and American troops alike would be hampered in their movements if not threatened outright. Instead of non-cooperation being aimed, as it was in 1920 and 1931, at non-payment of revenue and the resignation of Congress members from public office and the boycotting of British shops and industries, it would today consist of blocking the war effort at every turn and inviting the Axis to pile fuel on the fires.

Whitehall is banking on Gandhi's efforts fizzling out before matters reach too grave a stage. The Congress will want time to see how the land lies before applying nonviolence, and the British will give it time to spend itself. But no Pollyannas can be found here, and there is no question that Britain is girding for a tough fight—not alone to protect India from herself but to shake off the bonds that might well cost her her Indian empire.

Extremists Feared

Gandhi appears even more troublesome now than in 1920 and 1931. In the first place, he is an old man. Many believe that he is ready to die, but on condition that he dies as a martyr, a sort of Indian version of Sun Yat-sen, founder of modern China. That is the last thing that Britain wants, since there is no telling who his successor might be or where the bloodshed would end if the extremists gained power. Gandhi is toying with fire today in what is considered his last bid for supreme power.

Gandhi no doubt argues with some justification that he cannot lose personally. When the civil disobedience campaign fails, as it must either through indifference or British force, Gandhi is expected to withdraw to seclusion and think up another scheme, with his reputation among India's masses a little bit higher owing to this latest proof of leadership.

Reliable sources on Indian affairs here reject the idea that Gandhi's proposal incorporated at Wardha might succeed in the long run. If the British did withdraw from India and the Mahatma's Congress party attempted to form a government, they say the country would fly apart. Whole provinces would secede, the army would disband and civil authority would be paralyzed, for such is the nature of India.

India Congress Demands Freedom

Gandhi Sees Possible Violence as Alternative

By JOHN R. MORRIS,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

WARDHA, India, July 15.—A nonviolent mass movement on a wide scale was envisaged by Nationalist leaders today if Great Britain refuses to accept a resolution of the working committee of the All-India Congress calling for immediate end of British rule in India.

The resolution, sponsored by Mohandas K. Gandhi, agreed to retention of Allied forces in India in view of the threat of Japanese invasion.

Gandhi, commenting on the action, emphasized the congress' desire to avoid violence but indicated that it might prove impossible to avert riots in carrying out the resolution.

‘A Widespread Struggle.’

In the resolution the Working Committee of the Congress denied any intention of jeopardizing the defense of the Allied powers and agreed to the stationing of allied forces in India to ward off aggression and protect China.

But, informants said, it then emphatically expressed the opinion, in the name of the Congress, that British rule in India must end at once. It concluded, it was said:

“Should, however, this appeal fail the Congress will be reluctantly compelled to utilize all the nonviolent strength it might have gathered since 1920. . . . Such a widespread struggle would be inevitable under the leadership of Mohandas K. Gandhi.” The resolution is to be ratified by the All-India Congress Committee meeting Aug. 7 at Bombay.

Gandhi's Statement.

Mr. Gandhi said at a press conference that no room now was left for negotiations with Britain regarding independence.

“Either the British recognize the independence of India or not,” he said. “If so, many other things can happen, including negotiations regarding what follows.”

But, he added, a free India would begin to function from the day Britain relinquished its rule.

GANDHI AND INDIA

Mohandas K. Gandhi is one of the great souls of this generation. If all mankind were to adopt the spiritual essence of his teachings there would not be any more wars. Yet the effect of what Gandhi is now saying and doing may be to defeat everything for which he stands.

All that the Western World calls civilization, which includes some fundamentals also recognized as good by Gandhi himself, is committed this Summer to its supreme test. The greatest and potentially most democratic of Asiatic nations, China, stands with us in this battle. Gandhi chooses this moment, when the beast is at our throats, to threaten Britain with “open rebellion.” It will be non-violent rebellion. It will not aim at driving the British and their American allies out of India. Nevertheless, it is intended to “free” India entirely from the British “yoke,” and it will be undertaken now, if Gandhi has his way with the All-India Congress, because the British are hard-pressed by the Nazis and the Japanese.

The All-India Congress does not represent all India. It is opposed, with no pretense of non-violence, by a Moslem group which assumes to speak for about one-fifth of the Indian population. If Britain were to “free” India the Moslems, fearful of Hindu control, would rise with arms in their hands. The act would be atrocious, and one's sympathies might lie with Gandhi and the Congress. The practical result, nevertheless, would be bloodshed, followed by anarchy, and perhaps terminated by Japanese invasion. All this was made clear last April when Sir Stafford Cripps came to India with his vain promise of dominion status.

The British are not blameless. They have been arrogant in the past and at times may still be. In the light of present-day assumptions, supported by public opinion in Britain itself, the British have no imperial rights in India. They have only the duty to see to it that in ending an old injustice they create no new ones. If they were to do precisely what Gandhi now demands they would create more wrongs than they would end. They might bring upon India from the direction of Japan a hideous and unending tyranny more vicious than any India has known since the Occidental traders and troopers first landed there.

Gandhi, the ascetic, may, unless he turns back in time, do more dreadful harm to his people than Jenghiz Khan or any other of the long array of conquerors.

GANDHI AND HIS PEOPLE

Because of the great prestige which he still commands with his countrymen it is good news that Gandhi has come around to the view that “foreign troops [that is, British and American] are necessary to the defense of India.” Only a little while ago he was against such intervention. He now welcomes it, provided it imposes no financial burden on his own people and provided Anglo-American troops are withdrawn as soon as the crisis ends. These are fair conditions.

Apparently, however, Gandhi is still opposed to participation by the Indian people themselves in a militant defense of India. He talks of sending Indian Ambassadors to Berlin, Tokyo and Rome, “not to beg peace but to show the Axis Powers the futility of war.” This is in accord with his long-cherished faith in the virtues of “non-violence” and “passive non-resistance.” But of what use are such fine theories in the face of the kind of aggression that comes from Hitler and the Japanese plunderers? Gandhi himself greatly admires China. He speaks frequently of the close ties that ought to exist between China and his own country. Cannot he see what would have happened to China, its land, its culture and its soul, if, instead of fighting the Japanese at every step the Chinese had offered no resistance?

The intellectual habits of a lifetime are difficult to break, and Gandhi is deeply committed intellectually to the doctrine of non-violence. But these are times when doctrines and dogmas of every kind are being subjected to the white heat of an immense crisis. Three great tasks are waiting to be done in India, and no other man is so well equipped as Gandhi to play a leading part in them. The first is to reach a real agreement between the Hindus and Moslems on the fundamentals of Indian statehood, with particular reference to the question of how large or how small shall be the right of secession on the part of dissident minorities. Here Gandhi's leadership is vital. The second is to obtain prompt ratification by the British Government of any agreement so reached. Here Gandhi will be entitled to speak for a united India if his own efforts have helped at last to unite it. The third task is to awaken the masses of the people of Asia to the imminent peril of Japanese conquest and summon them to a fighting defense of their own lands. Here Gandhi, let us hope, will take his stand, before it is too late, at the side of Chiang Kai-shek.

Urge President Roosevelt To Seek Freedom For India

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Urging President Roosevelt to act in the explosive India situation, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Monday suggested that the President propose the establishment of a board for the military defense of India with General Douglas MacArthur as the American members, to act with one Englishman, one Indian and one Chinese.

PROPOSE FREEDOM NOW

The association also urged that the President propose that India be granted her freedom now, with details to be worked out in conference.

"We implore you to act even at the risk of offending our ally, Great Britain. This is now no longer a question solely of Indian freedom," the NAACP stated, "it is a question of saving American lives and the future existence of our nation."

TEXT OF TELEGRAM

The full text of the telegrams urging Presidential intercession into the Indian situation reads: "President Franklin D. Roosevelt, "Washington, D. C.

"We urge your intercession as mediator in India. It is apparent that Japan won a great victory in the Pacific Saturday when Gandhi, Nehru and Azad were thrown into prison because they too wanted and demanded for people of India the same freedom the British Government is fighting to preserve for white Englishmen.

"Niceties of international protocol should not, and must not be permitted to stand in the path of American action.

"Anglo-Indian relations are no longer exclusively a matter of British concern. One billion brown and yellow peoples of the Pacific will without question consider ruthless treatment of Indian leaders and people typical of white peoples will do to colored peoples if United Nations win."

"You can be sure Japanese broadcasts out of Tokyo to Pacific peoples and German broadcasts to Latin America are today industriously and gloatingly pointing this out."

SHOWDOWN IN INDIA

With Mohandas K. Gandhi's call for civil disobedience and the British order not to close shops and stores, the dian situation has come to a showdown. Gandhi and 17

It is a struggle of spirit against force, of imperialism against independence, of black against white.

The All-India Congress, through its spokesmen, Mohandas K. Gandhi and Jawarharlal Nehru, has demanded independence NOW.

The British Government, through Sir Stafford Cripps, has promised independence after the war but NOT now.

Mr. Gandhi professes his love for England and the cause of the United Nations but he has also said that he might talk business with Japanese whose armies are poised on the Indian border.

The British Government professes its love for the Indians and approves their desire for independence, but says it must stay in India (1) to prevent internal disorders and (2) for military reasons.

The Indian viewpoint has been distorted and attacked by all the far-flung propaganda agencies of the United Nations in an effort to swing publice opinion in England and the United States against the drive for independence and those who head it.

In this connection it is significant that all three of the big radio chains refused to carry a speech by Nehru giving the Indian side of the Cripps' negotiations, for "diplomatic" reasons, and that editorials in the leading daily newspapers are almost unanimously anti-Indian all of a sudden.

On the other hand, it is improbable that large numbers of the Indians have been overwhelmed with grief because of the Japanese victories over the British or because the Nippones may invade their country.

The British seem to fear an enormous Indian Fifth Column far greater than that which hastened the fall of Malaya, Burma, Hong Kong and Java, and not without reason.

Will the civil disobedience campaign succeed or will thousands of Indians be slaughtered and socres of thousands jailed, as has happened before?

If the Gandhian message has really won over the majority of the Indian people, their independence is assured, because a quarter million people of one race cannot prevail against 350,000,000 people of another race who are ready to go before the firing squad or go to jail for freedom.

At any rate, this struggle between spirit and force has now been joined and, despite the rigid censorship in India, we shall soon know the result.

Gandhi In Prison

In view of the extreme gravity of the situation in which the United Nations find themselves in Asia and elsewhere, the government of India could hardly have acted other than it did when it ordered the arrest and imprisonment of Mohandas K. Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and other leaders of the All-India Congress Party.

These individuals have made it abundantly clear, in the months since the British government made its sincere and praiseworthy offer to let India decide her own fate after the war, that they would accept no compromise, brook no postponement of their demands for complete and immediate independence. To be sure, they have been coupling this demand recently with the promise that if India were freed she would enthusiastically join forces with the United Nations in the struggle against the Axis. But this pledge had to be taken with a grain of salt. Repeated statements by Congress Party leaders in the past have indicated that they are far less interested in and concerned with the outcome of the world struggle than in the execution of their own particular program. How dangerously self-centered and unrealistic they are was made clear when the working committee of the Congress Party voted on Saturday to entrust Gandhi with full power to order and carry out a campaign of civil disobedience.

By no stretch of the imagination could such a campaign be regarded as in any sense helpful to the United Nations. On the contrary it could only aid and benefit the enemies of civilization. Adolf Hitler had reason to rub [illegible] hands in glee, the Japanese militarists to smack their lips in anticipation, over the attitude and proposed action by the Congress Party.

Had the demands of the Congress Party been carried out the result would have been, as the resolution approved by the Governor General in Council points out, "the betrayal of the Allies, betrayal in particular of Russia and China, betrayal of those ideals to which so much support has been given from the true heart of India's fighting men . . . and betrayal of all those loyal and cooperating elements in India which do not support the Congress Party."

Such a development the British government was duty bound to combat with all the power at its command. Its task of governing India will obviously not be made easier now that Gandhi and the other leaders of the Congress Party have been given an opportunity to revel in the masochistic pleasures of an eagerly sought martyrdom. To have delayed taking the action that was taken, however, would have been to condemn India to a state of anarchy.

The American people have been in the past, and are today, very sympathetic to India's aspiration to freedom. Our own attitude toward the imperialism of the past was manifested beyond peradventure of a doubt by the grant of independence to the Philippines. But at a time when we and the other United Nations are fighting for our very existence no tears will be wasted on Gandhi and those India leaders who, like him, would in the name of freedom destroy [illegible].

It is a real tragedy that the India government found it necessary to resort to the measures it has now taken. But it had no choice in the matter and its action will meet with the overwhelming approval of the American people. The prime task before Great Britain, the prime task facing the United Nations, is to fight the Axis. No interference with that effort can be tolerated. And those who, however noble their motives, however elevated their professions of idealism, interfere with that effort, must summarily be dealt with.

Free India First!

SIR: . . . This war has not been engaged in by the millions of people who are fighting it either to clear the English slums or to democratize the English caste system, or even to make a Seven Seas Navy for the American Century—elevating and exciting as these projects may seem to Englishmen and Americans.

This war is being fought, by the people who are fighting it, in order to get rid of foreign aggression perpetrated on their native soil.

This is the precedent for all other aggressions that have since followed. And until it is wiped out, it will remain the moral and physical excuse for all other aggressions which continue to follow in its rutted trail. . . .

What Britain is doing to India is not only political immorality, it is political lunacy. Not all the perfumes of Araby, nor the most complicated apologias of the subtlest Ministries of Information can cover up that blot.

This war must be fought with planes, guns, and ships, but first of all it must be fought with clean hands.

What's to be done?

Dirty records must be cleansed, not later, but now. England must obey India's will for independence today—yes, even in the midst of war. She had her opportunity to do so twelve years ago in the midst of peace. She did not take it then. She must take it now.

India's will for independence is expressed by her major political party, the Indian National Congress. All else told by England, such as that majority rule does not apply in India, or that democracy is impossible in India without English autocracy, or the insanely involuted nonsense about the Moslems, the castes, the princes, etc., etc., is self-delusory hallucitory lying of a most dangerous order.

For not only does the Congress represent the democratic will of the Indian people, but by a miracle of historical accident, the Congress happens to be led by two of the greatest men who have ever lived anywhere in any time. And only the powerful self-restraint of these two men stands between England and the great suppressed wrath of the Indian people, now dangerously rising. . . .

The first strategical consideration in any warfare is that of moral strategy. The moral strategy of this war demands the independence of India as its essential cornerstone. . . .

The first nation to be freed from aggression must be India. Aggression must be eradicated—even if we have to go so far as to look in our own mirror to find the aggressor.

Not until India is free can this war begin to be won. No matter how many gorgeous purple speeches Mr. Churchill makes, nor even how many numerical votes of confidence he continues to get. No matter how we step up our rationalized production, nor how many more billions of zeros we add to our budget, nor how many lives we may add to the earth's long casualty lists.

Whatever the devious dictates of the India Office, the peoples of England and of America have not so far forgotten their own revolutionary pasts as to be indifferent to India's revolutionary present.

Not Too Late

By Raymond Clapper

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—This head-bashing news from India upsets the plan I had to write some purple words this week about the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms.

Elmer Davis sent all of us some handy material to make the rewrite job easy. He suggested this was a good time to stress the Four Freedoms and what the Atlantic Charter means to the man in the street. That was before the streets of Bombay and Allahabad and Delhi came so riotously into the news. Mr. Davis suggested this would be "a good time to dispel any idea that may still exist that the Atlantic Charter does not apply to the Eastern nations as well." He added, in the off-hand manner that was natural enough before Gandhi started to go through with this business, that "of course the Atlantic Charter is worldwide in scope."

But I don't laugh over that. Mr. Davis was too late with too little, as the British have been in India these last few years, and as the Western nations have been generally in their dealings with the old East. The tragic price is now being paid. Axis propagandists are exploiting this bloodshed in India for their own purposes, as is to be expected. Many sincerely loyal citizens in the United Nations must be honestly disturbed. For the most part they probably will remain silent or will temper their expressions lest they do damage to our cause.

* * *

In India last March and April I could sense the gathering storm. I felt a depressing weakness in the position of the United Nations in the East, and wrote a good deal about it. It was evident in conversation with Nehru, the more balanced and more strongly anti-Axis of the Congress Party leaders, that the offer of postwar dominion status had come from London probably too late.

I felt deeply that the United Nations had not made their case clear east of Suez. In Europe we were obviously fighting to liberate a continent from the Nazi oppressor. But in Asia the native populations were inclined to regard the Western nations as the oppressor. Freedom was for the white folks in Europe, not for the dark-skinned races east of Suez.

Practically nothing was done to dispel that, nothing to convince those populations that whatever the wrongs of the past the only hope of freedom lay in United Nations victory. Vice President Wallace, Undersecretary Welles and some others spoke about it. They knew that the moral case of the Allies in Asia was weak and they wanted something done about it. But they got the horse laugh from the so-called realists, who were so intent upon being hard-boiled realists that they missed the true reality—which is Gandhi wrecking India, wrecking the main base of the United Nations in the East, inviting a Japanese invasion, the cutting off of China and the spread of Japanese power west across the Indian Ocean to join hands with Germany and slice the Allied world across its middle.

* * *

"Why talk about war aims until we have won the war?" Doesn't this bloody, paralyzing business in India today prove the need of war aims that will win the confidence and loyalty of peoples whose help is essential?

Perhaps it is too late now to check the bloodshed in India, the breakdown that has begun there may run its course in spite of anything that can be done. Still it is not too late. It is not too late to try to repair the damage for the Middle East.

It is not too late even to get ourselves straight with the world. So long as the impression remains—and with the grounds for suspicion that support it—that when the war is won the Western nations will climb up on the backs of the East again and feed off the old meal ticket—that long we will be let down in the face of our enemies as we have been throughout the colonial East, except in the Philippines.

The fact that Gandhi is stabbing us in the back does not relieve us of correcting the situation which has invited such treachery. Our intentions with regard to the postwar world are very real weapons in this war. Up to now they are weapons that have been used against us instead of by us.

ARRESTS IN INDIA ANGER REDS AND LABOR IN BRITAIN

Government Calls Gandhi Movement Blackmail.

LONDON, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Communist party of Britain and the leftist international labor party strongly criticized the British Indian government's action today in arresting Mohandas K. Gandhi and other leaders of a civil disobedience movement.

L. S. Amery, secretary for India, announced the government in London completely approved and supported the arrests.

"Altho there may be some minor trouble, there is no danger of the movement assuming the proportions it might have if the government had been weak," said Amery.

Gandhi's movement "still may be troublesome from the point of view of administration," said Amery, "but I believe the authorities will be able to cope with it without undue difficulty."

"A Stab in the Back."

He expressed faith that the majority of "realistic" people in India were behind the government's move to scotch "an attempt by blackmail and civil disturbance to make ordinary government of India impossible and to paralyze India's war effort."

He called the attempt "a stab in the back to all who are fighting in India or from India in the cause of the united nations, whether they be Indian, Americans or Chinese."

"No government could accept such a situation," Amery continued. "The government of India could not wait until the masses got excited, until rioting and bloodshed began. It was necessary to cut off the current, to disconnect Gandhi and other leaders from their followers."

"Hope to Repair Prestige."

Apart from Gandhi, "who has his own idiosyncrasies," the congress leaders "realized no government could pull out and leave a continent to anarchy. They knew it was nonsense to talk of India's war effort being increased by such means."

He asserted most congress leaders were motivated by a desire to create an emotional situation in the hope of repairing prestige damaged by rejection of Sir Stafford Cripps' suggestions for solution of the Indian problems.

In any case, he concluded, the present action "will not deflect the government from the broad purpose of providing India, as soon as the war is over, with full opportunity under the constitution to become a free dominion."

The Communist party's statement said, "whatever views may be taken on tactical mistakes the leaders of the Indian national congress have made, there can be no justification for the stupid and clumsy provocative measures since adopted by the British government.

"To resort to methods of publicizing stolen documents, arrest of leaders and closing down the nationalist press reveals a bankruptcy of leadership that has nothing in common with the best interests of the British and Indian peoples."

The statement went on to deplore the congress party's action as one which "could only play into the hands of the axis powers," but urged Britain to release those arrested and "open up fresh negotiations with a view to establishment of an interim popular national government in India."

The national council of the international labor party, meeting in Bangor, Wales, said the British action in India "renounced before the whole world any claim to represent the principles of freedom and democracy."

Eyes on India

THE eyes of the world turn toward Bombay this week as the All-India Congress leaders meet to adopt measures which will have a vital bearing on that sub-continent's position on the war. According to the New York Times, July 27, the working committee of the Congress has adopted a resolution calling on the British to end their rule in India and threatening a campaign of civil disobedience if their demand is denied. The resolution will be submitted for ratification at the Bombay sessions. The crucial nature of the deliberations, therefore, is obvious.

Summer is nearing its close and the monsoon season, said to be the reason Japan has not yet attacked in full force, will end in September. Late dispatches indicate that Japan is massing troops at the frontier. Haste, therefore, is all the more necessary by all sides of the dangerous Indian controversy. Unfortunately, the British authorities do not seem to evaluate the peril accurately. Sir Stafford Cripps' recent speech restated his arguments of three months ago: he continued to promise independence after the war is won. He does not permit the Indians the responsibility for mobilizing their own people. The speech of Secretary of State for India Leopold S. Amery was, if anything, worse. He had nothing to offer but jail. Poor solace for 350,000,000 who want their independence and who also, according to all indications, want to defend their homeland against the principal menace today—the Axis. The realization by the Indian masses of the Japanese danger is reflected in the altered tone of Gandhi, preacher of the perilous doctrine of non-resistance. Latterly his speeches have been marked by words of warning to the Mikado that he would meet with resistance if his troops crossed from Burma into India. Undoubtedly Gandhi is tempering his sails to the Indian winds: they blow hard for resistance—active resistance—to any and all aggressors.

But it is also a fact, and incontrovertibly so, that their resistance will be magnified a thousandfold if the wish dearest to their hearts—independence—is granted. It must also be admitted that on this score the American press has not helped the Indians—or the United Nations war effort. The New York Times continues to echo the arguments of the intransigent British Foreign Office. That way lies disaster, for India is indisputably essential to the world struggle against the Axis. The Indian masses look to us for aid, for support. This country, historically, and from every other point of view today, must give them that support. It will be repaid a hundredfold as we get to the business of settling accounts with Japan. A word from President Roosevelt today bringing the British and Indians together to finally resolve their differences would be worth armies in the field against Japan and Germany. It would ensure the staunch alliance of 350,000,000 fighters.

Deadline in India

By Wm. Philip Simms

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—It now seems clear that unless Great Britain or the United Nations make some eleventh-hour move to placate Gandhi and his fanatical followers India will be handed to the Japanese on a silver platter.

Only two more days after today remain before Gandhi's time bomb is set to explode. On Friday the All-India Congress party is scheduled to act on its Working Committee's resolution calling for immediate end to British rule. The resolution, or ultimatum, will almost certainly pass. And unless the British yield or agree to some last minute compromise the "open revolt" threatened by Gandhi will begin.

The fact that Gandhi contemplates a "nonviolent" rebellion fools no one either in London or in Washington. It doesn't even fool Gandhi. For he has admitted that he may not be able to control his followers. Blood may flow.

What Gandhi proposes to do, in effect, is to stop, or slow down, transportation, sanitation, food supply, water supply, work in offices, farms and factories—including the war industries—and so on. He plans a sort of general strike with folded arms while the Japanese, now on the Indian frontier, prepare their invasion.

* * *

In London the Secretary of State for India, L. S. Amery, has warned "all who stand behind the policy" advocated by the Working Committee, adding that "the government of India will not flinch from their duty to take every possible step to meet the situation."

A collision, therefore, seems inevitable. The President of the All-India Congress party, Maulana Abul Kalem Azad, has suggested that the United Nations "might do something." He said that "a few words from President Roosevelt" might avert the crisis.

President Roosevelt has already "done something" and said something with direct bearing on the Indian situation. A week from next Friday—the day set for Gandhi's "open revolt" unless he gets immediate independence—marks the first anniversary of one such act. Article 3 of the Atlantic Charter, signed by Prime Minister Churchill and President Roosevelt on Aug. 14 last year, specifically pledges self-determination to all peoples, including the Indians.

Only last week Secretary of State Hull, speaking for President Roosevelt as well as himself, pledged the United States government all over again. He said:

"It has been our purpose in the past—and will be our purpose in the future—to use the full measure of our influence to support attainment of freedom by all peoples who, by their acts, show themselves worthy of it and ready for it."

* * *

By many this was regarded as having been spoken largely with India in mind, though no country was named specifically. That it does include India there can be no doubt whatever. Thus the specific promise made by Britain to free India immediately after the war is plainly underwritten by the United States.

What more Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad and their followers could want at this time is difficult to fathom. It is true that they specify "immediate independence." But the machinery of government of even the smallest country could not be improvised overnight, and India has a population of 390,000,000, divided into scores of almost irreconcilable castes, races, religions, social and political factions. The transition from British to Indian rule will not be easy any time, but now, when face to face with a Japanese invasion, India's best friends regard it as suicidal.

Only one further move to avert disaster to India and the 27 United Nations to which she has pledged her loyalty now seems possible. And that is for Britain to suggest, and for the United Nations to agree, that the United Nations as a whole underwrite Indian independence.

Were this done at once the All-India Congress party could call off or postpone its "open revolt" when it meets. Afterwards Britain and the Indians could work out an independence schedule together. The alternative may doom India if not the whole Allied cause.

Uneasiness Grows Throughout India

By STUART EMENY
Reuters Correspondent

BOMBAY, Aug. 4.—Signs of tension among the peoples of India are becoming apparent. Both here and in new Delhi you now see little groups talking in bazaars, invariably with man in a white cap—emblem of the Gandhi movement—in the center.

As Congress workers went about mobilizing support for what Gandhi calls "open rebellion," a few people, apparently excited by a mass meeting, threw stones at a military lorry here yesterday. Instructions purporting to come from Congress leaders are being passed from lip to lip.

One instruction is that the movement will start with a hartal or one-day general strike. Another order being passed on is that all Englishmen are to be treated as outlaws in India. Congress enthusiasts are being instructed that even when sent to prison, they must continue disobedience, taking resultant punishment with a view to forcing the maintenance, if possible, of one jailer for every prisoner.

It is considered a foregone conclusion that the Congress resolution calling on the British to leave India will be passed. In view of increasing bitterness, it may even be strengthened.

Communists, who form a minority of about 10 in 300, will be the only persons to challenge the resolution—on the lines it will weaken China and Russia in their fight for freedom. But even the Communists will make the point that they do not intend to play a pro-British game at the expense of Congress.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

India

INDIA IS a subject which is as remote from the political experience of all of us in America as Einstein's mathematics are from ordinary arithmetic. For no matter how many times we are told that "India" is no more a nation than "Europe" is a nation, it is not long before most of us fall back into talking as if the Hindus of the Congress Party are India, and that Gandhi is the George Washington of the Indian nation demanding independence from King George III.

LIPPMANN

Thus there are 80 or 90 million Moslems in India, as many as there are Germans in Europe. The Moslems and the Hindus are at least as much opposed to each other as were Protestants and Catholics during the religious struggles of the Seventeenth Century. There are also the "Depressed Classes," some 60 million—more than there are Italians in Europe—who are excluded from the caste-bound society of the Hindus. There are also ancient kingdoms in India, and there are a number of relatively small energetic nations such as the Sikhs.

THE PROBLEM of India is how the separate peoples of India can be both independent and united. This is a problem which the separate peoples of Europe have never been able to solve though they are politically more experienced than the Indians. No one has ever found a way to give the peoples of Europe self-determination and independence and at the same time to unite them in one European commonwealth. Any American who thinks he knows how to solve the Indian problem ought to find the solution of the European problem child's play. For what has never been done in Europe, both the Hindus and the British have been trying to do in India. They have been trying to keep all of India under one government and yet to assure the Hindus, the Moslems, the Depressed Classes, and the Indian Kingdoms the privileges of independence.

How difficult, and perhaps impossible, it is to achieve this dual result may be judged from what happened in the provinces of India which between 1937 and 1939 had complete self-government under the rule of the Congress Party. Every year the Moslems who were ruled by the Hindus solemnly observe the end of this experiment by celebrating "Deliverance Day." Their leader, Mr. Jinnah, who is to the Moslems what Mahatma Gandhi is to the Hindus, has ever since demanded separate Moslem states—called Pakistan—which would be as independent of the Hindu states—called Hindustan—as France from Germany.

SO WELL do the Congress Hindus understand how well-nigh impossible it is for India to be both unified and independent, that when the British used to promise them independence as soon as Indians could unite, they charged the British with insincerity. They said that since the British were offering independence under the one condition—namely unity—which could never be fulfilled, the British never meant to get out of India.

It was not until the Cripps mission that the British Government faced this dilemma and said that India could be independent even if that meant the end of the unity of India. Under the Cripps proposal, the Moslem regions do not have to become part of an India ruled by the Hindu majority.

IT IS CLEAR, so it seems to me, that the real cause of the present Hindu revolt is not the disbelief that the British will leave India but the realization that they are certainly going to leave India. Ever since 1935, when the British began their withdrawal from India, the struggle between Hindus and Moslems has become sharper. It was bound to become sharper the nearer the Indians got to independence. For once it was certain that Britain was going, and going fairly soon, a terrific struggle was bound to ensue as to whether the Congress Party Hindus were to rule all of India. The stakes are tremendous. The stakes are an empire. And Gandhi's demand that his party be granted immediately the control of the war-time government of all of India is the one way in which a Hindu empire might be established and consolidated.

But to yield to the Congress Hindus' demands would be to place in their hands for the domination of the whole of India all the dictatorial war powers plus the military support of the United Nations. This would call for the abandonment, and in effect, the betrayal of the Moslems in order to obtain the collaboration of the Hindu party. This would have been a mighty poor bargain, considering the fact that the Congress Party is led by men who have no stomach for resisting a Japanese invasion and are prepared to negotiate a separate peace.

HOW, we may ask, would the Japanese deal with the Indian problem if they conquer India? We know fairly well from what they have done in China. They would partition India and set up puppet governments under their own strict control. They would rule by dividing India: then there would no longer be any such thing as the unity of India nor any such thing as the independence of its separate parts. They would use Congress Hindus as their puppets in one province, Moslem puppets in another, perhaps Indian princes elsewhere.

No doubt Gandhi and his political subordinates realize this. But insofar as the Congress Hindus think that Japan would use them as puppets to rule most of India, a quick surrender to a victorious Japan would seem to be the quickest and cheapest way for them to obtain power. There were Frenchmen, some of them highly venerated by the French nation, who made a very similar calculation in 1940. Gandhi could probably obtain from the Japanese something very much like a Vichy government—just about as free and covering just about as much of India.

MY OWN VIEW is that Americans cannot resolve the Indian crisis by exhortations addressed to the British or to the Indians. The Indian problem—how to combine unity with independence—is insoluble in the next few critical weeks. What Europe has not achieved in seven centuries will not be achieved in India by the end of this summer.

The problem which may be soluble this summer is the defense of India. The answer to that may be given in part by measures taken inside of India. But even more decisively the fate of India may be determined by what is happening in the Solomon Islands and the Aleutians, and what may come of all that.

Viewing India Calmly

There has been much bitterness against India in this country since the terrible rioting there began. Such bitterness is easy enough to understand, of course. Trouble there injures the war effort of the United Nations. But, regardless of our ability to understand why such bitterness has risen, it is highly essential that the citizens of this country look upon India and Britain in this dispute just as calmly as is humanly possible. Only in this way are our people likely to develop an attitude which indirectly may be conducive to action on the part of this nation, and perhaps Russia and China, in effecting some kind of solution to the problem.

Many Indian natives are causing great disturbances of a very violent nature. It is easy to scoff at Gandhi's "non-violent" campaign, while pointing out the obvious violence. But what does such scoffing gain us? The facts are plain, in this respect. What is needed is clarity concerning the entire situation.

* * *

This newspaper is greatly sympathetic to Britain in the endeavor of the British Indian government to maintain order. That government realizes full well the necessity of preventing the development of a situation which would, literally, be an invitation to the Japanese. Our government should stand behind the British. But this does not necessarily mean that this government is therefore obliged to stand against the Indians. Such sympathy as we have should be directed toward both the British and Indians. The situation in India is one which neither, certainly, would choose to have.

Certainly Gandhi would better have served the cause of the United Nations had he chosen not to bring about the present campaign of civil disobedience. There are even strong arguments that he would have served his own cause better had he refrained from precipitating civil war.

What is needed now, some believe, is a strong argument, forcefully presented—but without actual pressure or force—which will cause Gandhi and Nehru and other leaders to express a willingness to meet with representatives, perhaps, of Russia, China and the United States.

It seems likely now that if any solution is to be reached, these three nations may have to do the acting. There is, obviously, much of difficulty in bringing about, at this tragic time, another meeting of Indian and British leaders.

* * *

Emphasis in this country just now should not be on causes why India cannot be unified. The better emphasis, perhaps—since it is very difficult now to know exactly what is called for and what is not—should be placed on reasons why India can be unified.

There are two great reasons which, if presented with great care, might serve to bring about some settlement. Those are the fact that the Indians seek freedom, just as the United Nations seek freedom through active opposition to the forces of the Axis, and the fact that an Indian invasion by the Japanese would undoubtedly be harmful both to India and to the nations fighting Japan and Germany.

However blameworthy Gandhi and other Indian leaders may be at this hour, it should be increasingly evident that continued accent on that blame is going to bring us no solution.

The Allies Are Asking Indian Leader to Think About World Freedom Before Considering His Own; Willkie Versus Shepard; the WAVES; F.D.R.'s Decision

The newspapers attacked Gandhi this week because he threatens to call a general strike of all Indian workers, unless India is given its independence immediately.

Fully aware of the importance of a strong Indian ally to help the Chinese and our own forces to defeat the Japs, we still cannot bring ourselves to condemn the course which Gandhi pursues.

The United States press criticising the East Indian leader, makes three points, that:

1. He doesn't represent all India or even an Indian majority.
2. (Non-violence) a general strike imperils the war efforts of the Allied cause.
3. Gandhi ought to be satisfied with the British promise of independence after the war.

Does He Represent the Majority?

Let us take No. 1, first—the charge that Gandhi doesn't speak for the Indian majority. That may or may not be true. In a country where parliamentary government does no[illegible]st and a plebiscite is not possible, the determination of leadership by our methods is difficult. It is admitted that Gandhi is the most powerful Indian leader, and that he has millions of followers. Bolivar, Toussaint, Garibaldi and many another revolutionary leader did not have a majority to begin with. He accumulated it as he went along.

Whose Freedom Comes First

The newspaper PM puts argument No. 2 against Gandhi succinctly. It admits the freedom of the nation is nothing to be trifled with, and adds, but the freedom of the world is nothing to be trifled with either.

The inference is that India should be more concerned with world freedom than with her own. Isn't that asking too much?

This war for world freedom went on two years before we entered it. President Roosevelt campaigned on the platform pledge not to send our troops abroad. That was in 1939. Are our memories that short?

We entered the war when we were attacked by Japan, not when England begged us hardest or, as at Dunkirk, needed us most.

Argentina, considering its own national problems, has so far declined to enter the war at all.

Should Freedom Be Postponed?

As to argument No. 3, that Gandhi should be satisfied with British pledges of independence after the war, Gandhi says he has no confidence in Churchill's promises, and he points out that Britain didn't keep its World War I agreements with India.

This is what can be called the "time is not ripe" argument, and we hear it frequently in our own country. Indian leaders disagree. They say this is a war for freedom. India wants her independance, is united, is qualified after 170 years of British rule, and is pledged to use that freedom not for a decrease but for an increase in unity and effort to fight the Axis.

Churchill May Be Wrong

Winston Churchill and Cripps (Sir Stafford Cripps, British emissary to India) think differently. They believe, and our own experts agree, that India will put up a better defense against Japan if British control in India continues.

That is simply an opinion. It may well be wrong. Gandhi knows his people better than we do, and he believes that free Indians will fig[illegible]ore desperately for their homeland under their own leaders. He has on his side the example of the Chinese, who have held off the Japanese hordes for five years.

India Has the Choice

Most important of all is this fact: The choice of how India shall fight is no longer Britain's or ours. Some 350,000,000 East Indians have chosen this time to say they will speak for themselves.

Instead of joining England in a plea to Gandhi to forgo independence, our country should join India in an earnest appeal to England to grant India national freedom at once.

That would shake the Axis world from center to circumference. It would inspire the millions of conquered peoples under the Axis yoke to rebel at the first opportunity. It would strike a death blow to all propaganda about British imperialism. It would announce to the world that in deed and in truth we fight for world freedom.

Willkie Versus Shepard

Tear out the AFRO's front page interview with Wendell Willkie and preserve it for future reference. Two things Mr. Willkie said are priceless: Don't stop your "honest struggle for democracy" at home during the war, and to secure equality of citizenship "work and fight."

Put that courageous Willkie statement against a letter of Dr. James E. Shepard to President Roosevelt. He told the President that he and his Southern conservatives have agreed, from now on, to cease agitating for freedom at home.

Our sole effort, Dr. Shepard said, is to win the war. Anybody who counsels otherwise, he said, is a "misguided" or "so-called" leader.

In Dr. Shepard's book, Mr. Willkie and millions of Americans are "misguided," and will always be, we hope.

The WAVES—F. D. R. Comes Through

All eyes were on Washington last week to see what the Navy Department was going to do about including colored women in the Women's Auxiliary Naval Reserve. (Authorized strength 10,000.)

President Roosevelt came through as we hoped he would. WAVE plans call for a [illegible] per cent representation of colored women. There will be no separate units, but the fly in the ointment is—no colored officers. The navy policy of closing commissions to colored people still stands.

All the nations of the earth are anxiously watching the remarkable assertion of the will to independence that animates the Indian National Congress, which opens its formal deliberations tomorrow, for the demands of this congress show that history has turned a new, clean page. Gandhi and Nehru, its leaders, have asked complete independence from British rule as the price of joining the United Nations in building a wall against the Japanese. Unless this is granted they will order their followers to pursue nonco-operation, a policy that, in the present crisis, would mean that Britain would have to fight Japan in front and use force against its colonial subjects in the rear.

Far aloof have Americans been from this battle, yet today it is a part of the fight of democracy against aggression. Our democracy is still a potent force, and our colonial policy has on its books the successful guardianship of the Philippine people. Drawn into the battle against totalitarian and imperialistic nations, we now have to defend democracy by the side of Britain, which is responsible for the India crisis.

Here, I think, the attitude of Pearl S. Buck, in her comment on India in American Unity and Asia, is the only sensible guide. She buries the past and faces the future. The British missed the opportunity we seized in the Philippines; their turn is past; life marches on. And life, in India, demands self-rule, independence, the four freedoms that we say we are fighting for. As the New Statesman and Nation of London said, India will be a great Asiatic power, "if we permit her to come to life."

* * *

India Asks: Whose Freedom?

Mrs. Buck does not deal with specific problems, but with general attitudes. She praises the flexible mind which adapts itself to new conditions. It is easy for Americans to support an independent India; it is harder for the British to give up the political and economic domination of one-fifth of the human race, the scource of much of the wealth of the United Kingdom.

But that brings into relief the issue of this war. If we could win quickly, by force of arms, there would be little change in the imperialist position of modern nations, despite the good intentions voiced by their idealists. But it begins to look as if we will have to accept seriously the liberation of mankind from the imperialist domination that Germany and Japan represent. If so, we will have to give all the weaker nations a leg up, and that includes India.

Minoo Masani, writing Our India (Oxford University Press, $1.75), describes the riches of India in soil, minerals, water power and man power. Yet East Indians consumed only 16½ yards of cloth per head each year—so that many freeze in winter. If they could get a chance to develop their machinery they could provide much cloth, as well as labor, for their people. Today India exports 3,000,000 bales of cotton a year, over half of it to Japan, which makes it into cloth and sells it back to India. It has the largest iron and steel smelters in the British Empire, employing 50,000, and instead of using the product at home sells it to Britain and then buys back goods made from this steel and iron. Masani asks that all India own such industries co-operatively, for the good of the millions whose poverty is unnecessary if exploitation ceases.

The India National Congress is not of one mind. It has many parties supporting it, but Gandhi and Nehru speak for it today. As Nehru said: "Our sympathies are with Britain. If Britain is fighting for her freedom today, India has been fighting for her freedom for over a century. In fighting for others' freedom, we should not forget ours." You will find a factual study of the Congress and its policies in India Today, by W. E. Duffett, A. R. Hicks and G. R. Parkin. (John Day, $1.75.) Superlatively worth reading, as the study of a personality no less than of an issue, is Nehru's autobiography, Toward Freedom.

Let's Talk About Authors.

How many readers of James Cozzens' novel, The Just and the Unjust, recognized the source of his inspiration? It occurs in Plato's Republic, where the discussion of the just and the unjust is part of the examination of justice. In the course of that colloquy, practically all the points of view exemplified in the Cozzens' novel have their place. And that analysis of the relation of the individual and the social order to the law was set down 400 years before our era.

F. P. A. expresses himself with his accustomed bounce in describing why he knows so much, in the Atlantic for August. Here he tells how he has had a passion for unrelated facts and found many nuggets off the main line of reading. Of interest is his statement that he began including translations of Horace in his column because Eugene Field had done so years before. F. P. A. has never read thoughtlessly. Once his mind graps a fact it retains it. Like John Kieran, he attributes the slovenly thinking of most of us to carelessness and waste of precious time.

I have often found casual talks with authors unprofitable and disappointing, though I well know the reason. A man may be brilliant in a book written over the course of a year and quite unable to pump up the same kind of concentrated wit at a cocktail bar. Only Sir William Rothenstein drew momentous remarks out of great men at a casual sitting, and I always suspected him of boning up, either before or after the conversation. In New York some of the interviews with authors by Robert Van Gelder are uncommonly good, probably because he does not accept the publicity man's exalted view of the author. There is a perfectly fine report of a talk with James Joyce by T. K. Brown 3rd, in Story for July-August; a tale of mutual embarrassment, told with a chuckle. It ought to come under the head of humor and be preserved in subtreasuries.

CHUNGKING, China, Aug. 11—Though frankly apprehensive over the Indian situation, China is still a friend and ally of Britain while at the same time she has the warmest feelings for the Indians, declared Dr. T. F. Tsiang, Minister without Portfolio, as government spokesman today.

He said that despite the late hour China hoped a satisfactory settlement would be speedily reached. When asked whether China would mediate he said the conflict was a British domestic problem but thta the moral issues concerned the future world order.

"In a question of this magnitude," he went on, "if China is able to help solve it, China will be only too glad to do what she can."

When further pressed on the point he insisted China would not be content to remain in the background, "expressing pious hopes."

He revealed the Chinese expect repercussions affecting China's war effort.

"We are afraid," he continued, "that the present troubles, intentionally or unintentionally, will result in an interruption of lease-lend supplies for China."

Discussing the arrest of Mohandas K. Gandhi, Dr. Tsiang said:

A spokesman said that on July 27 and 28 Japanese transports debarked Japanese divisions at Haiphong and Saigon, French Indo-China. They entrained for Thailand and Burma, destined to attack India's eastern coast, the spokesman said.

Asked whether the Chinese Government felt that a prerequisite to a solution of the Indian problem was the release of Mr. Gandhi, he replied that the government had no idea as to the procedure to be adopted for solving the problem.

"In any case, a premature suggestion along this line might not be helpful," he declared.

Chinese Back Gandhi

CHUNGKING, China, Aug. 11 (AP)—Chinese newspapers today expressed their support for the Indian Nationalists in editorials regretting the arrests of their leaders and appealing to the British to seek a peaceful settlement.

The newspaper attitude reflected the opinion of Dr. Sun Fo, president of the Legislative Yuan, who declared last night that "Chinese sympathy is entirely with the Indians" in their struggle for independence.

Some editorials argued that India's demand for freedom was in line with the Atlantic Charter concerning the rights of all peoples to choose their own forms of government.

"The British-Indian problem forms a link in the common war," said the newspaper Ta Kung Pao. "Once this link fails, but it will affect the united front as a whole."

India is a vital bridge between China and her sources of supply abroad.

"China is not only sympathetic toward India, but because of military reasons is concerned over what happens in India," the newspaper added.

"Events in India might prompt Japan to change her plan of attacking Siberia and, instead, attack India. We wish fervently to appeal to the British Government to control its emotions and show political wisdom by looking for a genuine solution."

The official Central Daily News, also appealing for British "forbearance," declared that the arrest of Mohandas K. Gandhi and his aides "does not solve the India problem which, if permitted to pursue its own course of development, will not only affect the war in the Pacific but also the war as a whole."

The desire for independence "is the desire of the whole Indian nation, therefore the arrest of a handful of Congress leaders and the use of force worsens rather than improves the situation," said The China Times.

CRISIS FOR THE UNITED NATIONS

If Gandhi persists in India, his offense will be treason to them all and will cost them many lives

"The Courier-Journal" Louisville, Ky.

By ERNEST LINDLEY.

Washington.

THE crisis in India is of vital concern not only to India and Great Britain, but to China, the United States, and all the other United Nations. The thin line of supply to the Chinese armies runs by way of India. If India is lost, the whole Allied position in Egypt and the Middle East, including the supply line on which the retreating Russian armies in the Caucasus are now almost entirely dependent, will be threatened from the rear. The anarchy which Gandhi and his followers are threatening to create might cause the war to be prolonged by years and cost the lives of hundreds of thousands of American and British and Australian young men. It is of the highest importance, therefore, that Gandhi's campaign of civil disobedience should be averted, if possible, and, if that is not possible, that it should be suppressed or overcome by whatever means are available.

566

The British errors and omissions of the past belong to the past. The United Nations now confront a situation involving their common security and the lives of their fighting men.

Gandhi and his followers are presenting an ultimatum: Grant their full demands immediately or put up with civil disobedience. Suppose the British were to give in to Gandhi's full demands. Would that strengthen the defense of India?

GANDHI'S terms are entirely unacceptable to the Moslem League; and half of the men in the Indian Army are Moslems. His terms are unacceptable to other minorities, which in the aggregate may form a majority. In the past, the British have pursued the policy of "divide and rule," but the schisms in India do exist and cannot be obliterated by turning India over to Gandhi and his followers. On the contrary, if the British surrendered to Gandhi the result probably would be civil war and anarchy worse than will be caused by the refusal of the British to give in to Gandhi.

There is another point which deserves careful exploration. In some of his declarations, Gandhi has seemed superficially to say: Turn India over to us and we will spring to its defense. Even if that were his meaning, it would be wholly impracticable to organize and equip his followers to resist by arms an attack which may come at any time. But there is ample evidence that Gandhi has no desire to see India defended by armed forces. This is clearly indicated in his original draft of the "Quit India" resolution just published by the British authorities. The resolution was modified before its adoption, but the authenticity of the original was not denied.

Much has been made of one sentence in this draft: "If India were freed, her first step probably would be to negotiate with Japan." Pandit Nehru explained that Gandhi meant he would send emissaries to Japan to warn them to keep away from India and also to plead with them to withdraw from China. This explanation may sound absurd to the Western mind, but it probably is entirely correct. Gandhi is not pro-Japanese; he is not a Quisling. But he is a religious fanatic, with an intense belief in the effectiveness of non-violent non-co-operation. Under his leadership, non-co-operation has been measurably successful against the British. Gandhi's draft, just allured to, and other of his writings reveal his belief that passive resistance can be successful also against the Japanese.

SOME who know Gandhi believe that he places the opportunity to try to prove his conviction—that non-co-operation is superior to defense by armed force, that it can nullify all conquests by the sword—above the [illegible] independence of India. They suspect that he would even welcome the invasion of the Japanese, in order to provide the world with a great demonstration of the effectiveness of his method—a demonstration which, if successful, would revolutionize human society.

At a distance, Gandhi's form of pacifism may seem saintly to some. But it is no longer a distant matter to be regarded philosophically. The lives of our own fighting men, and those of our allies, and our common security are involved. Unless Gandhi and his followers withdraw their ultimatum, the defense of India will be injured. The evidence indicates overwhelmingly that it cannot be strengthened, that it would be completely undermined by a British surrender to Gandhi.

If Gandhi persists his offense will be treason to the United Nations and the democratic cause with which Indian independence is indissolubly linked. The use of force to break a campaign of non-co-operation cannot be cheerfully contemplated. It may be visited upon many misguided but otherwise innocent people. And it probably will not be entirely successful. But there may be no alternative.

SOCIALIST PARTY IN U.S. CONDEMNS GANDHI'S ARREST

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Socialist party issued a statement today condemning the arrest of Mohandas K. Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlad Nehru in India, and urged that no American men or arms be used in India.

567

"Great Britain's action in jailing Gandhi and Nehru and forbidding any meeting of the Indian national congress has struck a dastardly blow against the four freedoms that Churchill and Roosevelt claimed the united nations fighting for," the statement said.

"Japan could ask for no greater aid than this stupidly vicious stab in the back of an awakening Indian democracy. For the sake of humanity and a real victory for democracy we urge President Roosevelt to mediate with Britain for India's immediate independence." The statement demanded that "not one American boy, not one American gun, not one piece of lend-lease equipment be used to shoot down or suppress the democratic masses of India."

ARBITRATION FOR INDIA

AUG 31 1942

In a letter to Time Frederick L. Schuman, professor of government at Williams College, in no uncertain terms criticizes the British for outlawing the Indian National Congress Party and for imprisoning Gandhi, Nehru, and other leaders merely because they urged freedom for India at this time.

Dr. Schuman warns grimly that there could be "no graver disaster to the cause of freedom than what has happened in India and no folly more wicked than the folly which seeks to save India from her 'enemies' through a policy of terrorization endorsed by her 'friends.'" He goes on to say that an India torn by rebellion and civil discord can never be saved by force from the near Jap or the more distant German. He links with the outcome of the Indian question China's survival, the possible loss of the Middle East, and the enforced retirement of Russia beyond the Urals. The sequel of India's loss can only be invasion for Britain; the sequel for America, an endless and all but hopeless war against opponents who will rule the world.

The eyes of "silent and waiting multitudes" of oppressed or exploited peoples throughout the world are turned on India, according to Dr. Schuman. These peoples will conclude wrongly perhaps, but nevertheless irrevocably, that Western white races offer them only "fair words and foul deeds, and that they have no stake in a war between rival oppressors—no choice between Axis arrogance and democratic hyocrisy."

Apparently Dr. Schuman thinks the British have muffed their chances and are finished so far as making Indian an integral part of their global war effort is concerned. With complete disregard of Britain's sovereignty over a major portion of her vast empire, the professor thinks it is high time for America to intervene. He says: "This is America's opportunity. Let Americans everywhere ask their President to join with the leaders of China and Russia in proposing arbitration of the Indian conflict. Let the proposal expressly contemplate the preparation by a United Nations tribunal of a plan for the establishment, within the next three months, of a provisional government of an independent India, linked in war and peace alike to the British Commonwealth and to the United Nations as a free and equal partner."

AUG 31 1942

In his proposal for immediate Indian freedom, Dr. Schuman makes no mention whatever of the lack of harmony within India. He passes over the divided aims of India's teeming millions. He offers no solution for the problem of the ninety million Moslem minority group who threaten civil war if the British give in to Gandhi's demands. No suggestions as to how the British can set up within a period of three months an independent all-Indian government that can and will function satisfactorily for the polyglot factions that comprise modern India are given. Sir Stafford Cripps, who fancied himself a friend to the Indians, recognized the impossibility of reconciling Indian ideals with British needs after two weeks in the country, but Dr. Schuman safe in his Massachusetts fastness, thinks a working government could be set up and start functioning within three months!

AUG 31 1942

There can be no argument about India's future status if the democracies win this war; the whole point at issue hinges on the fact that at present it is utterly impracticable and impossible for Britain to endanger additionally her own safety and that of her Allies by stopping her war effort in order to give irresponsible visionaries an opportunity to demonstrate their ability to do alone what they have never been able to accomplish even with all the help the British Empire could give them—that is govern themselves to their own advantage and not to the detriment of those whose fate is linked to theirs. No, the time for sending India forth on her own has not yet come. There are wolves about even if incurable optimists regard them as capable of reform.

Freedom for India is impractical at present unless we agree with Dr. Schuman's implied thesis that Britain has forfeited the right to suppress riots and maintain order in her colonial territories simply because she has declined to let irresponsible idealists dictate her decisions at a time when she is fighting for her life against ruthless foes who covet her domains.

GANDHI AND INDIA

New lessons from the war are being learned each day. Years ago few people, if any, ever thought that the time would come when a little brown-skinned man of ninety pounds, more or less, would play such an important part in world affairs.

The position which Mahatma Gandhi holds reminds us of a Biblical injunction which says: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit,' says the Lord". Certainly Gandhi does not represent might and power so far as an army and navy are concerned, but it is quite possible that the consideration which Great Britain gives to Gandhi's demands for "self-determination now" will decide whether the present war will be won by the Axis or the Allied Nations. Surely the old saying "a worm will turn" may be seen in the lesson that Gandhi and his followers are teaching the world today.

Then, too, interesting enough in this connection is the fact that there are so many people in the world, especially of the darker races, who are in sympathy with Gandhi's position. Indicative of the attitude of the colored people of America, was a resolution passed at a big Negro mass meeting in St. Louis expressing sympathy with the cause which Gandhi represents. It may be stated here also that much pressure from liberal groups and liberal thinkers throughout the United States is being brought to bear upon the President of the United States urging him to use his influence to force Britain to grant Gandhi's demand.

AUG 21 1942

As we view the situation it is our judgment that the only obstacle which keeps the United States from interfering in favor of India is the fact that this nation is practicing the same kind of subjugation of the colored people at her door (but in a milder form) that England is practicing in India. But despite this embarrassing position in which the President of the United States finds himself, there is strong probability that within a very, very short time the United States will probably issue a statement supporting Gandhi's position — who would have thought it? Who would have thought a few years ago when from time to time we read of Gandhi's fasting and of Gandhi's non-violence battles against England that the time would ever come that the same weapon used by this ninety pound half-starved individual would cast the deciding vote in a world conflict — a conflict which will determine the kind of lives which all the people of the world will live after the war.

Rally Here Tonight For Indian Liberty

"Daily Worker" New York, N.Y.

566

SEP 2 1942

A free India is vital for victory over the Aixs.

And tonight, thousands of people at Manhattan Center will turn that truth into a rousing demand for India's independence.

Outstanding leaders of labor and the Negro people will denounce the suppression of colonial peoples at the meeting, and demand that the Indian people be permitted to fight fascism as freemen.

Councilman Adam Clayton Powell will speak on India, the Negro and World Democracy.

A. C. POWELL

We are fighting to preserve freedom, to extend it, not to foster fascism, a statement from the Council on African Affairs points out.

Kumar Goshal, noted authority on Indian and Chinese affairs, will discuss at the meeting far reaching advances in the spheres of democratic political and economic rights achieved in China in the course of her heroic struggles as concrete proof that similar progress can and must be made by the Indian people under the guidance of a provisional Indian National Government.

Max Yergan, executive director of the Council on African Affairs, under whose auspices the rally is being held, emphasized that "speed is essential in arriving at a solution of the Indian crisis in order that the people may effectively mobilize against the fascist barbarians at their gate."

Speakers at the meeting will include Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, Liu Liang-Mo, authority on China, Channing Tobias, Negro leader and secretary of the National Council, YMCA, and Thomas L. Harris, national secretary of the American Council on Soviet Relations. The meeting will begin promptly at 8:30 P.M.

HOWARD THURMAN ON GANDHI, NEHRU AND INDIAN QUESTION

566

By PETER DANA

(Calvins' News Service.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 27—Though he is probably one of the best known of speakers and thinkers in American college and university circles, Howard Thurman, dean of the chapel at Howard university and teacher of philosophy, is not sufficiently known to the general public. He is easily one of the most brilliant and profound men in America, young or old, as any one will attest who has heard or known him.

HOWARD THURMAN.

AUG 30 1942

Those who, like the writer, knew Howard Thurman as a student, and laughed and talked and played with him, know that he is a rare combination of sterling qualities—a man of great intellect, of deep spirituality, of wit and charm and boyish laughter, of a broad and knowing humanity. He has probably moved more cynical men and intellectual women to tears and further reflection than any speaker of his generation in the United States and Canada. A mystic with ever so practical a turn of mind; a seeker in the tradition of Roger Williams; a preacher of the social gospel with a thorough understanding of the economics and politics of the modern world —Howard Thurman suggests a Christian likeness of many of the best qualities of Gandhi and Nehru of whom he is a close friend.

AUG 30 1942

It was a pleasure to knock into Dr. Thurman in the lobby of the Hotel Theresa last Sunday morning as he was returning to Washington and talk with him for some thirty minutes. A modest, stocky, black man, with resonant voice and smiling countenance, he is perhaps one of the few black men in this country around whom a great, conscious national movement of Negroes could be built, not unlike the great Indian movement with which Gandhi and Nehru are associated .

A Friend of India

As a friend of many Indian leaders and as a student of Indian life and culture, Howard Thurman is equipped to speak competently of recent developments in India. As a democrat who knows that political freedom is the condition precedent to human dignity and knows that the Indians are both freedom-loving and keenly aware of their personal dignity, Dr. Thurman is solidly for Indian freedom now, and believes the Indian leaders have reduced to moral absurdity the British and all those supporters of the British position who pretend to fight a war for freedom on the so-called practical necessity of denying India her political independence the more effectively to wage a war for freedom.

"There aren't enough jails in all India," Dr. Thurman said, "to imprison the spirit of present-day India that articulates itself in Gandhi and Nehru. Indeed, the arrest of these leaders, after the failure of the Cripps mission and the subsequent British bungling in India, is a clear indication that the Churchill government understand neither the psychology of the total fight for freedom nor the spirit that moves India today."

GANDHI FORESEES VIOLENCE IN INDIA

Warns Britain It May Not Be Possible to Curb Masses in Independence Fight

BARS WAR STATUS TALKS

Leader Says Any Negotiations Must Wait on Decision on Autonomy for Nation

JUL 16 1942

WARDHA, India, July 14 (Delayed) (U.P.)—Mohandas K. Gandhi warned tonight that India's masses, despite a strict injunction to shun violence, might riot in the nation-wide anti-British movement taht he threatened unless London accepted a "final" demand to free India at once.

Mr. Gandhi received foreign correspondents at Sevagram, his headquarters outside Wardha, after the working committee of the All-India Congress party had adopted a resolution calling for a last independence appeal to Great Britain and embodying the leader's plan for a mass anti-British movement if the appeal was rejected.

Final Vote Due Aug. 7

Although the appeal and the movement have the support of a mapority of the working committee, the final decision is up to a larger Congress committee, including representatives from all party branches throughout India, which will meet in Bombay Aug. 7.

Mr. Gandhi said rejection of the independence appeal would compel the party to launch a mass movement on the widest possible scale to reverse Britain's policy. The movement would be nonviolent, however, and its participants would not be court imprisonment. He wanted no rioting, he said, but it might provie impossible to curb the masses and keep them out of trouble.

Mr. Gandhi indicated that negotiations on India's war role would have to come after, not before, British acceptance of the demand for full freedom. On the freedom issue, he emphasized that no room was left for discussion with the British.

"Either the British recognize the independence of India or not," he said. "If they do, many other things can happen, including negotiations regarding what is to follow."

India would begin to function as a free nation, however, from the day that Britain declared her free, he added, without waiting for any negotiations or details.

Moslem Opposition Seen

A London broadcast recorded yesterday by the Columbia Broadcasting System said that Mohammed Ali Jinnah, head of the Mosle mLeague, which claims to represent India's minority of 78,000,000 Moslems, has denounced the Congress's independence resolution.

"He made it clear that the resolution was utterly unacceptable to the Moslems and said that when Congress talked about independence they meant Congress [Hindu] domination," said the broadcast.

"Perhaps the most amusing and grotesque thing about the Congress working committee's resolution in India," said Patrick Lacey, British commentator, "is its effort to adapt the British Government's proposals from last March to the Congress party's own ideology. The resolution, I mean, is modeled on Sir Stafford Cripps's plan but takes away pretty well altogether its essentially democratic basis."

The British Broadcasting Corporation said that its New Delhi correspondent had reported that "there isn't the least doubt that the full Congress committee will approve the resolution," but that it was thought likely that there would be some disaffection in the Congress camp when the call actually came for civil disobedience.

Rising Pressure

Gnarled little 72-year-old Mohandas Gandhi has recently lost seven pounds. Last week he was down to around 90. Doctors who visited his whitewashed hut in the mud village of Sevagram said that his blood pressure was rising, that hard work and the blazing Indian heat were exhausting him. They advised a fortnight's rest.

Gandhi at once began working harder than before. He received the Indian National Congress Party Working Committee to discuss ways of continuing to protest British rule. Among those present: huge, bearded Abdul Gaffar Khan, a Moslem who spends his life preaching Hindu Gandhi's nonviolence principles to the fierce Pathans of the North-west Frontier Province; the Congress Party's spade-bearded Moslem President, Maulana Abdulkalam Azad, who gesticulates like a French prefect; the poetess and veteran Congresswoman, Madame Sarojini Naidu, Gandhi's principal female disciple, who calls him Mickey Mouse; India's second-best-known citizen, handsome, socialistic Jawaharlal Nehru.

Pictures Inc.

GANDHI'S SAROJINI NAIDU
Mickey Mouse was losing weight.

Although Gandhi wants Allied troops to remain in India (TIME, July 13), he believes that immediate political independence is of the utmost importance for India's defense. On this subject, Jawaharlal Nehru made a shrewd psychological point last week. Said he: "Submission to England develops a spirit of submission to the Jap."

As a means of protest, the Congress Committee recommended that Indians refuse to yield property under wartime requisition until the British Government pays in full. And, once again, Gandhi proposed to rub salt into the wound of British-Indian relations. The committee urged that Indians violate the Government salt monopoly by making their own salt. In 1930 Britain jailed Gandhi for leading 79 disciples on a 200-mile "Salt March."

At week's end rumor had it that the Congress Committee, before it was through, would announce some vast campaign of protest. Mohandas Gandhi's followers often claim that his awareness of India is as sensitive as his palate, which can tell the temperature of his daily soup to within a fraction of a degree. If so, India was in a mood for protest. For that was Gandhi's mood.

Gandhi Warns Japs India Will Resist

"PM Daily"
New York, N.Y.

JUL 28 1942

Mohandas K. Gandhi warned the Japanese through an open letter in his magazine Harijan yesterday that if they attempted to invade India "we won't fail to resist you with all our might." (Presumably, Gandhi meant—with "all the might—of passive resistance.)

Denouncing Japan's attack on China, the Indian Nationalist leader referred to the "merciless devastation of that ancient land."

This aggression, coupled with the alliance with Germany and Italy, he told the Japanese, "was an unwarranted excess of your ambition to take equal rank with the great powers."

He said that the aim of the independence movement, which the All-India Congress Party's Working Committee had agreed to start, "is to prepare India, by making her free, to resist all militarist and imperialist ambition, whether it be British imperialism, German Nazism or your pattern."

The Party's demand to Britain for independence "is coupled with an offer of free India's willingness to let the Allies retain their troops in India," he continued.

"Make no mistake about the fact that you will be sadly disillusioned if you believe you will receive a willing welcome from India."

India Warned On Obedience

"PM Daily"
New York, N.Y.

JUL 28 1942

BY RADIO

Sir Stafford Cripps intimated unmistakably yesterday that the British will take whatever steps are necessary to prevent Gandhi's campaign of civil disobedience in India from interfering with the prosecution of war against Japan.

In a radio address (CBS) to the U. S. A., Sir Stafford declared that Gandhi, rather than compromise on the issue of India's freedom, "would jeopardize the freedom and the whole cause of the United Nations."

"There is not the slightest doubt that other large and powerful political parties are opposed to Gandhi's demands," he said. "I regret profoundly that he has taken this attitude and I know that the Indian people as a whole do not support it.

"He may gain a measure of support for mass disobedience, but for the sake of India, as well as for the cause of the United Nations, it will be our duty to insist upon keeping India as a safe and orderly base for our joint operations against the Japanese.

"Once victory is gained, India has been offered complete freedom to provide, in whatever way she chooses, for her own self government. But that victory must first be gained. We cannot allow the actions of a visionary, however distinguished in his fight for freedom in the past, to thwart the United ' drive for victory in the east."

China And India

The Indian situation continues to be in a state of great disturbance. The British government in India is endeavoring to prevent as much rioting and bloodshed as it possibly can. But, despite this, nearly 20 persons have been killed and more than 200 have been injured.

William L. Shirer, "Berlin Diary" author and CBS commentator, pointed out in a broadcast Monday night that the chaos may continue, that it may be impossible for the British effectively to bring the situation under control. Mr. Shirer has spent some time in India and was there during the last great campaign of civil disobedience in the early thirties. He emphasized the statement of L. S. Amery, British secretary of state for India, who said in London Sunday that he was confident the British Indian government could control the situation. Mr. Shirer indicated that this might be more a hope, as things stand now, than a probability.

It should be said that Mr. Shirer has viewed the Indian situation somewhat differently from many observers. Others have thought the course of the British government the only step feasible. Mr. Shirer, though he has not been specific, has seemed to indicate that the British, or the Russian, Chinese and American governments, might well effect some kind of an arrangement.

Yesterday it was announced by the Chinese newspapers, reflecting the attitude of the Chinese government, that the people of China, with respect to the disturbance in India, were "not only sympathetic toward India," but were greatly interested "because of military reasons."

"Events in India," one paper said, "might prompt Japan to change her plan of attacking Siberia and, instead, attack India. We wish fervently to appeal to the British government to control its emotions and show political wisdom by looking for a genuine solution."

Arguments might, at this point, be made about Indian control of "emotions," but here they might not seem constructive. Light, not anger or intensification of present opinions, is needed.

In is important to note that the Chinese newspaper, further, said that "the British-Indian problem forms a link in the common war." And, "once this link falls out, it will affect the united front as a whole."

This is very important. The United Nations seek the support of freedom-loving people throughout the world. Unity of purpose may now be in danger of being lost, to some degree, or dangerously imperilled, if no solution is reached.

Many persons seem to think that the imprisonment of Gandhi, Nehru and other leaders has "solved" the situation, removed "the fuse from the explosion," even as Mr. Amery suggested in London. The explosion, nevertheless, seems to be continuing.

This problem is very complex. If any solution is to be reached, it seems likely that sacrifice—even to considered judgment—may be necessary. Will the Indians sacrifice? Some—including Louis Fischer—seem to think they still might if the correct approach is made. Could the Russian, Chinese and American governments succeed now where the British failed?

The New York Herald Tribune recently spoke an opinion held by many. Concerning India, the paper said that "the only foreign sympathy" for Indian leaders and their efforts "will come from the enemies of freedom." The Chinese announcement will cause this attitude to be recognized as erroneous in certain aspects at least.

It should be recognized now that, regardless of the soundness of the British action, there may be a danger of alienating many peoples who might—indeed, who should—be supporting actively the cause of the United Nations. The Indian peoples must not be permitted the opportunity of viewing the Japanese invaders as did the natives of Burma.

It is noteworthy at this point, perhaps, to mention that a British radio broadcast announced Monday the arrival in New Delhi of Gen. Joseph Stilwell, who flew from Chungking. Also arriving in New Delhi was Lauchlin Currie, special envoy of Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Currie was reported planning a few days' visit in India before returning to the United States.

Perhaps this small announcement is indicative of some greater active interest by this government in the Indian situation.

The Japanese, meanwhile, must be enjoying the increasing disturbance. It may prove helpful to them. Regardless of Indian or British attitudes, this fact should be kept in mind.

RACIAL FEELING STIRS INDIA TO DISOBEDIENCE

Root Cause Of Unrest Reported By Returning Americans

JAP MENACE IGNORED

Gandhi And Nehru Will Realize Mistake Later, Columnist Predicts—Choosing Lindbergh Is Defended

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Racial feeling—an always bitter, stupid, suicidal guide for political action—seems now to have emerged as a root cause of the unintelligible positions of the Indian politicians. Both Nehru and Gandhi have rather openly suggested this in their recent statements.

American observers, returning from India recently, have complained they could not understand the insensibility of Nehru and Gandhi for the cause of world freedom when they wanted their own.

Independence for India is possible, only if the Anglo-American world cause wins. Otherwise, such a defenseless nation would naturally pass under the domination of its nearest Axis neighbor, in this case Japan.

Mohandas Gandhi

Obviously then, some inspiration, other than a desire for freedom, must have made the Indian leaders reject the full promise of independence from the British in favor of a policy which would bring them under Japanese control, if fulfilled.

The statements of Nehru and Gandhi finally complaining against racial discrimination show what that inspiration was.

For a parallel you must recall British experience in adjoining Burma. There many Murmese foolishly chose to fight with the yellow hordes from Japan and delivered themselves enthusiastically into the Nipponese noose. Such a course, frenzied in its hatred, naturally does not make sense from any standpoint.

This is not a racial war. China and the Filipinos are on our side, or rather we are on theirs. The Indian politicians, and the Burmese, will realize their mistake when we win this war, although it may be late then.

Meanwhile, it makes the Indian situation dangerous.

British Detain All Leaders Of Congress party

Americans And Japanese Locked In Sea Battle

BOMBAY—(SNS) Bloodshed and rioting burst upon India Sunday as mobs sprang into action in support of Mohandas K. Gandhi's new campaign to drive British rule from India by passive resistance.

Grandhi and all his principal collaborators were under arrest by the British government, which moved swiftly to preserve order in this vast sub-continent. The British used gunfire and tear gas to quell repeated outbreaks by Gandhi's followers.

The mob quickly looted two Bombay grain shops, set buses on fire and stoned policemen and police stations, apparently heedless of Gandhi't counsel of passivity as the sole weapon to be used.

Passengers were hauled from automobiles and even bicycle riders were dragged to the ground with orders from the mobs that they must walk "because this is democracy." Some bands lay down on street car tracks or piled debris on the rails.

MANY CASUALTIES REPORTED

Police met the challenge with shots and bamboo staves and resorted to guns and tear gas on five occasions in Bombay alone. The number of casualties was not announced, but in Bombay city alone five persons were reported killed, 20 wounded by bullets, and 35, including [illegible] policemen, injured in stone-throwing incidents.

The police resolutely fired directly into the mobs, facing the grim realities of the campaign which Gandhi himself has said would surpass anything he ever has done before while the Japanese enemy is at the eastern gates of India.

Police predicted that the rioting would die down in about two days "unless communal riots" started between Hindus and Moslems, in which case "bloodshed would go on all summer."

The number of arrests neared the 200 mark late Sunday and included the working committee of Gandhi's All-India Congress Party and most other prominent leaders of the nationalist movement.

CURFEW IS IMPOSED

A curfew was imposed for Sunday night and a strict ban was placed on carrying of weapons.

Across the country in Calcutta, second city of the British Empire, observers said the Congress party's influence in Bengal was of such limited scope that it probably would not interfere seriously with the vital war industries concentrated in the province. But in Bombay police cautioned that no white person could expect to escape attack in the riot areas.

American correspondents were attacked in the Maharbouri section, being mistaken for the British. They were assured later that the Americans were their friends.

BOMBAY MOBS STONE POLICE AS GANDHI IS HELD

Buses Fired, Shops Are Looted.

BOMBAY, India, Aug. 9 (AP)—Mohandis K. Gandhi's new do or die campaign to cast off the British rule in India exploded into bloodshed and riotous violence today.

Frenzied mobs looted shops, battled police, stopped street cars and burned buses and police posts in heedless violation of Gandhi's own counsel to stick strictly to passive civil disobedience.

The British government of India, alert to the challenge to public order, promptly arrested Gandhi and all his principal collaborators in the Nationalist All-India Congress party, and met the outbreaks with tear gas and gunfire.

The All-India Congress party and its committees were officially designated as unlawful organizations dangerous to the public peace.

30,000 at Mass Meeting.

Greatest of all the unruly assemblies in Bombay was a massmeeting of at least 30,000 in Shiva-Ji park in the heart of the city tonight. Police broke up the gathering by using tear gas for the sixth time since morning, but not before speakers read and distributed to the crowd this message from Gandhi:

"Every man is free to go to the fullest length under ahimsa [nonviolence] for complete deadlock by strikes and all other possible means.

"Karenge ya marenge!" [Do or die.]

Gandhi had been scheduled to address the meeting, but instead dashed off the message in the half hour police granted him at dawn before they arrested him and took him to confinement in the AGA Khan's palatial bungalow at Poona, 65 miles away. His wife, at first spared arrest, was detained when she insisted on addressing the meeting.

3 Killed in Bombay.

There was speculation that the bloody response to Gandhi's exhortations might cause him to start a "fast unto death," a device which has been his favorite personal weapon in the past and which he obliquely threatened last week to employ if his followers ignored the nonviolence phase of his program.

The government tonight gave this summary of the day's tumultous events in Bombay alone:

Two rioters killed and 19 injured.

One police officer killed, 11 police officers and 34 police of other ranks injured.

One hundred and forty-nine persons arrested.

Tear gas and gunfire used to break up mobs on five occasions.

Cyclists Dragged Off Machines.

Other reports said five persons were killed and 20 suffered bullet wounds in Bombay, while in the big cotton milling town of Ahmedabad one rioter was reported shot dead and another wounded.

Bombay mobs dragged bicyclists and motorists to the ground, demanding that they walk, "because this is democracy."

Thirty-odd persons were reported arrested at New Delhi, and such few leaders of the Congress party who still were at liberty said arrests were proceeding on a wide scale thruout India, but no figures were available.

There were reports that industrial strikes already were being organized in Bombay, and a report from Ahmedabad said cotton mill workers had called a general strike there for tomorrow. The executive committee of the Indian Federation of Labor branded Gandhi's civil disobedience movement as a "sinister move" deliberately intended to sabotage the war effort.

Natives Are Surprised.

In dealing with the stone hurling rioters, police at first employed only light bamboo staves, then tear gas, and finally resorted to guns.

The decisive action on the part of the British was a surprise, for there had been much speculation in India that the government would let the situation drift in the hope that Gandhi's movement would not take hold.

Police predicted that the rioting would die down in two days unless communal riots started between Hindus and Moslems, in which case bloodshed will go on all summer. Moslems who live in predominantly Hindu districts already had disappeared, and the same applied to Hindus living in Moslem section.

Nearly 200 Arrested.

The numbers of arrests, starting with Gandhi at 5 a. m., neared the 200 mark and included the working committee of Gandhi's All-India Congress party and most other prominent leaders of the nationalist movement.

The Mohammedan Socialist mayor of Bombay, Yufus Meher Ali, who is an active congress worker, was arrested.

Moslems Hold Aloof.

The Mohammedans, representing 80,000,000 of India's population of 400,000,000, generally held aloof from the Gandhi campaign, however, on advice of Mohammed Ali Jinnah, leader of the Moslem league, which is to meet Aug. 16 to discuss its position.

In New Delhi, the capital, about 30 Congress party leaders were held. There and elsewhere Hindu shopkeepers were closing their stores.

Gandhi's arrest here was polite but prompt. Only yesterday he received a mandate from his Congress party group to lead the independence movement. Before dawn six uniformed officers appeared at the home of Das Birla, wealthy Indian industrialist who has been Gandhi's host.

They gave him a half hour to prepare to go, then led him to the railroad station.

Arrested with Gandhi was Madeline Slade, daughter of a British admiral, who has followed Gandhi faithfully for 17 years. His secretary also was taken.

Jawaharlal Nehru, No. 2 man to Gandhi, and Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, president of the Congress party, were imprisoned in Yeravda jail, six miles from Poona.

Vegetables Are Hurled.

Bands of Gandhi followers quickly assembled in the streets, in defiance of a government order against assembly of more than five persons.

More than 1,000 persons assembled around the Congress party's Bombay provincial headquarters, throwing stones and vegetables at the uniformed patrolmen.

Nagendas Master, president of the Bombay province committee of the Congress party, was among those seized.

A report from Allahabad said Purushottamadas Tandon, speaker of the United Provinces assembly, also was detained.

Mr. Fischer On Gandhi

Louis Fischer, author of "Men and Politics" and a correspondent who has seen this war for what it is since the days of the Spanish Civil War and even before, returned last week from India where he spent seven days with Mohandas K. Gandhi.

Sunday Mr. Fischer was interviewed briefly during a radio broadcast. His opinions on India and Gandhi may seem somewhat different from those of many observers today, both in approach, decision and suggestions.

Louis Fischer said that in his opinion there was no question but what Gandhi was "anti-Japanese." He said that Gandhi had great sympathy for the efforts at liberation of the Chinese. How could Gandhi then be anything but anti-Japanese, Mr. Fischer asked.

He said, further, that a solution might yet be reached if India could be granted the form of freedom. He indicated that India is interested at the present in getting that form and suggested that some compromise might yet be made.

The situation of American and British troops in an independent India was then discussed. Fischer reported that Gandhi expressed a willingness to permit military forces necessary for the defense of India to remain.

But the correspondent then asked about supply, pointing out that military operations cannot be conducted in a "vacuum." Gandhi replied that he was willing for the Americans and British to control facilities which were necessary, such as docks, railroads and so forth.

Mr. Fischer seemed to be aware of the present grave status of the Indian situation. Even as he spoke, reports continued to come in telling of rioting and bloodshed. And reports, too, were coming in taken from Berlin and Tokyo broadcasts where the situation was being ridiculed as "evidence" of British and American "observance" of the anniversary of the Atlantic Charter.

There is, in Mr. Fischer's opinion, one man who can do much toward effecting an arrangement, even now. He is President Roosevelt. Louis Fischer called on him to step forward courageously to bring a halt to the turmoil and strife. If the president would act, he said, it would unquestionably be "a great blow to the Axis."

To step forward now would, indeed, be courageous. Many think it would be foolhardy even to attempt to offer any kind of independence now to an India which has revealed its interest in its own immediate freedom as more important than anything else in the world.

We must at this critical hour be completely realistic. But it would undoubtedly be a great mistake unhesitatingly to accept the fact that nothing now can be done but to permit the storm to run its course. Mills have stopped in India. The effectiveness of India as a producer of war materials—and it does produce much—has already been greatly reduced.

It is a great problem which besets the leaders of Britain, and part of the responsibility, naturally, lies with our own government.

Mr. Fischer seemed to believe that it was not yet too late to reach a settlement. Is it too late? Perhaps Mr. Fischer after having spent a week with Gandhi is more hopeful of a solution than those who have viewed the situation in its proper place, as a part of the entire world struggle.

Meanwhile, this government should continue to stand firmly behind Britain. If there is a possibility still of reaching a solution, surely it will be given a good try.

Cripps' Plan for India Is Fair to Minorities

JUL 30 1942

Any criticism of the Indian Congress evokes from many readers a charge of apostasy, of desertion of the cause of freedom. We have heard so long and so eloquently about the British sins in India that it seems impossible for some of us to believe that anyone else in India can do wrong, or can even make a bad mistake. Yet what do the people mean who say that if we are really fighting for freedom we must prove our good faith by demanding that the British give freedom to India at once?

In the first place, what is the "India" to which freedom must be given today? It is a country, unfortunately, which contains more people who are opposed to the Congress's demands than there are citizens of the U. S. A. The 90,000,000 Moslems are opposed; a majority of the 45,000,000 outcasts are opposed; the 6,000,000 Sikhs are opposed; an unknown number of the citizens of the autonomous Indian States are opposed. (The number is unknown because, although the rulers of these States are opposed, the citizens do not for the most part have a chance to express their opinions freely.)

The huge majority of these dissidents is, of course, in favor of freedom for India. But not on the terms proposed by the Indian Congress. The minority groups here listed are convinced that if Congress got all it asked for tomorrow the minorities would at once be subjected to a ruthless Hindu oppression. It doesn't matter whether this is a correct opinion; it is the opinion of the Indian minorities who are on the spot. They do not want to see India handed over to the Congress Party. They would break out in revolt if India were handed over to the Congress Party. Civil war in India at this moment would be worth many panzer divisions to the Japanese.

Herbert Agar

This is not an argument for doing nothing. But it is not fair to describe the Cripps offer as "nothing."

Before Cripps went to India the British Government had promised freedom to India, after the war, as soon as all the major groups in India got together and presented a constitution on which they were agreed. This offer could be criticized on the ground that the British would always be able to prevent the Indians from getting together on a united demand. To whatever extent this was true, and it was probably largely true, the offer could be attacked as meaningless. But the Cripps offer cannot be so attacked.

Stafford Cripps offered either complete independence, or dominion status within the Empire, whichever the Indians chose, as soon after the war as a constitution could be drawn up which was acceptable to the majority party in India. The offer included the proviso that if there was a large dissatisfied minority, that minority could set itself up separately, with any form of independence it chose for itself.

If the British are to move out of India they have to hand over to somebody. They cannot, especially in the middle of a world-wide civil war, hand over to anarchy and thus provoke a local civil war. They have made, before the eyes of all the world, an offer from which they will never be able to retreat. It is an offer which provides for all the obvious difficulties and complications in the situation. Those who say that the demands of the Congress should be accepted at once should at least explain how they expect to handle the problem of a violently dissatisfied minority of more than 130,000,000.

If the demands of the Congress really make for true freedom and therefore for the strengthening of the war effort of the United Nations, why is it that the Japanese radio is so delighted with those demands? Ever since the middle of July Japanese radio propaganda in Asia has been praising the Indian Congress, insisting that its demands are simple common sense, promising that if these demands are met India will enter on a period of true freedom and prosperity. These are strange new friends for freedom. Sincere Americans who want only to promote the cause of freedom should think twice before they tell the same story that is told by the Japanese.

And sincere Americans should refrain from falling into the trap set by German propaganda, which tells us that since the ritish (like a good many other people) have committed sins in the past everything they do today must be assumed to be a trick to bring evil into the world under the guise of good.

The acid test for any plan for India is that it takes into account the fearful problem of the minorities. The Cripps plan does. The Congress demands do not.

Our Policy For Asia

AUG 15 1942

On August 10, the Chinese assured India that all her sympathies were exclusively with the Indian Nationalists. Chunking then made the plea "to the British government to control its emotions and show political wisdom by looking for a genuine solution." They declared the desire for independence is one shared by all Indians and not by a handful of Congress members and leaders who have been thrown in jail. The colonial regime in relation to modern times has proved itself obsolete.

America should lose no time, but instead should immediately support the plea of China, her ally, and send like protestations to Britain. Very grave consequences are ahead of us unless we develop and pursue a clean-cut foreign policy that applies not only as it does now to Britain, but to China and India on equal terms. We must remember the Anamites fired as many shots at the retreating French as they did at the Japanese.

American soldiers in India may be forced, in order to impose British imperialism, to fire on throngs of unarmed Indians. And then may have to go to those they wounded and ask for cooperation in the fight for democracy. The damage to the United Nations cause by Americans firing upon the Indians will be irreparable; whether that firing occurs as an actual physical act or occurs spiritually through our implied tactit agreement with the British government's present policy.

Up until now, America has been able to go into this war proudly as free men fighting to mak eall men free. We are faced with the formidable task of persuading Britain to forego her previous Indian policy and to plead with her not to disrupt the unity of all the Allies. If we support the outdated cause of Britain in India against the cause of human freedom we stand to lose our own moral impetus. We also stand to alienate the friendship and trust of China. South America, too, whose faith in the democracies has never been very strong must be more than ever dubious concerning the sincerity of American intentions. The Axis will delight in our present inconsistencies. Is South America wondering now if democracy is just another name for imperialism?

This is primarily an ideological war. Berlin itself has no doubts of that. A man must not only have a gun to fight with. He must have something to fight for. India and China must be allowed to hope for a better world or what is there for them to fight for? Domination by the white race or the yellow seems the alternative for them. If, through our shirking of the Asiatic problem we force them to choose, we must remember that China and India are Asians. We must accept our world responsibilities. As a united group, we are all responsible for each other. We Americans must keep the morale of the United Nations high. We Americans must immediately revise our foreign policy to be consistent with the aims we profess. To keep the friendship and good will of Asia may be more important to the new world order than the momentary good will of certain elements in the British government.

Mahadev Desai, Sect. Of Gandhi, Dead; Was Writer For The Age

AUG 22 1942

BOMBAY, India—Mahadev Desai, private secretary to Mohandas K. Gandhi, died Saturday of a heart attack at Poona, where he and the Indian leader have been kept under detention since last Sunday. Desai, who was 48 years old, died twenty minutes after he suffered a dizzy spell while talking with the Inspector General of Prisons. In accordance with his expressed wish, his body was cremated the same day in the presence of Gandhi.

WROTE FOR THE AGE

Desai, whose association with Gandhi began in 1921, soon after his graduation from Bombay University, was for several years after that Indian correspondent for The New York Age. He was Gandhi's closest personal adviser, accompanying him during his frequent imprisonments and taking verbatim notes of all the Nationalist leader's conference with British and Indian leaders.

The weekly newspaper, Harijan, which Gandhi founded in 1926 as the semi-official organ of Nationalist opinion, had Desai as its editor and it was during this time also that he wrote a weekly column for The New York Age. His writings were often censored by British authorities because he wrote on social reforms and Indian independence. To get around the censorship, he wrote friends in another country and had them forward his writings direct to The New York Age.

Because of the opinions which he expressed in Harijan, Gandhi's newspaper, and in The New York Age, Desai was often jailed but even the threat of jail and actual imprisonment did not deter him from his purpose.

A native of Gujurat, Desai was a member of the Brahmin caste, the highest of the Indian social scale but he forsook the position to which his birth entitled him and followed Gandhi's course in fighting for the removal of restrictions on the Pariahs, or Untouchables, who, under the caste system were excluded from all social intercourse from other Hindus.

INDIA'S 2 NON-VOILENT
CAMPAIGNS BRED ROITS

Civil Disobedience In 1921 and 1928-30 Brought Death to Hundreds

56

Gandhi's non-violent civil disobedience campaigns in 1921 and 1928-30 didn't turn out to be non-violent. There were scores of riots, a few between Moslems and Hindus, mostly among the followers of Gandhi whose civil disobedience was met by the police with repressive force. Hundreds of people were killed.

The India Year Book, which is naturally as Imperial as an Indian prince, explains it this way:

"According to the strict theory of Gandhi, non-violence was the sheet anchor of the movement, but when clashes repeatedly occurred between the police and the military, on the one hand, and large masses of determined men and women, it was inevitable that violence should break out. In most cases the police used their lathis, but when they were overwhelmed they fired."

Gandhi deplored violence. At Ahmedabad in April, 1919, he said:

"I have said times without number that Satyagraha admits of no violence, no pillage, no incendiarism and still in the name of Satyagraha, we have burned down buildings, forcibly captured weapons, extorted money, stopped trains, cut off telegraph wires, killed innocent people and plundered shops and private houses. It is open to anyone to say that had it not been for the Satyagraha campaign there would not have been this violence."

Reasons for Campaign

The primary causes of the civil disobedience campaign of 1919-1922, were strong measures on the part of the British Government such as the arbitrary Sedition Act and the notorious Amritsar massacre. These events coming on top of the Indian contribution to the British effort in the last war caused a sharp rise in anti-British feeling. India had contributed 1,457,000 men to the British war effort, of whom 552,000 were combatants.

The sedition laws passed in 1918 resulted in the murder of officials, both British and Indian.

On April 13, 1919, a large crowd, many of whom probably were unaware of the laws against assemblage, drew together at Amritsar. Gen. Dyer, in command of a small British force there, ordered his troops to open fire. The fusillade killed 379 and wounded 1200, by British official count. Indians said much larger numbers were killed and wounded. Gen. Dyer was retired but the House of Lords "deplored" his retirement and private subscribers presented him £26,000 (about $125,000).

During the subsequent civil disobedience, impartial sources reported that the "extent of Moslem-Hindu co-operation was impressive." Major riots occurred at Bombay in November, 1921, and at Chauri-Chauri, in February, 1922.

The Salt Strike

Trouble broke out again in 1930. It began officially when Gandhi ended his famous march to the sea and his followers began to boil down sea water and make salt without paying duty on April 1. It ended by agreement between the then Viceroy, Lord Irwin, and Gandhi, March 31, 1931.

Gandhi's Congress forces were well organized with himself [illegible] supreme commander, other commanders throughout the provinces, heading war councils.

During the month disturbances broke out at Bombay, Calcutta, Karachi, Poona, Chittagong, Madras, Peshawara, Amritsar, Delhi, and other centers. There were 35 serious disturbances within the month and they continued at about the same rate until Gandhi was arrested. His place was taken by Abbas Tyabji and Mrs. Sarojini Naidu. Thereafter raids were made on the salt works at Dharasana and Wadala. Hundreds were injured in these affairs.

The trouble at Chittagong occurred when a group of young Indians, disguised as soldiers and officers raided a British post. They worked Commando fashion, killing the sentry and entering the barracks to shoot others and seize arms and some ammunition. They were driven off later and it is believed all were captured or killed as they fled.

Police Ban

This open and momentarily successful attack upon authority caused grave concern to the British Government, as an example of what might spread. They also viewed with alarm the activities of young nationalist men and boys who harassed the police in minor forays.

Police imposed a ban on gatherings but their orders were disobeyed. At Sholapor, the British Government said, police were attacked and constables mobbed and murdered in broad daylight. Government buildings and law courts were set afire.

When crowds at Peshawara defied police, martial law was introduced and crowds attacked troops with stones. The Congress, the British admitted, made some dissatisfaction among Sepoy troops.

Congress activity among the Afridi tribes, according to the British account, made them anticipate the rise of a "Gandhi Raj" and in such expectation they raided Peshawara, but were quickly controlled.

INDIA, BRITAIN AND AMERICA

The dispute over India has passed the point where logic or consistency can have much weight. It does not matter whether a completely unbiased court would say that the Congress party under Gandhi [illegible] Nehru, the Moslems under Dr. Jinnah, or the British Government as represented by Stafford Cripps comes nearest to being right. There is some rightness in each of them. Each has some things to apologize for, both to the whole people of India and to the nations who are now under the Axis yoke or who are fighting at terrible cost in blood and treasure to bring the Axis down.

The closest we can come to an impartial jury to try this case is to call upon the Government and people of the United States. In no formal sense can we render a verdict. Yet the very fact that we are being appealed to by all factions overrides the limitations of our distance and of our lack of information. Because we are detached, and because our detachment will not save us from paying an awful price if India falls, Americans are under an obligation to speak.

And what can American officials or American commentators say that will be of the least help? Simply this, that the pride of leaders, whether white or brown; the consistency of governments or parties, the love of power, have no standing before the tribunal of American opinion; that any decision, any compromise, which helps win this war, and in winning it helps win freedom for all of us, India included, is good; that any decision, any compromise, which weakens the strength of the anti-Axis Powers is bad and evil.

We do not believe that Gandhi, Nehru, Jinnah or any other responsible Indian leader desires the victory of Japan and Germany. We do not believe that Cripps, Churchill or any other responsible British leader desires to withhold freedom from India for a single unnecessary day, nor that any of them would question the solemn statement of The Times of London, more than five months ago, that "British dominion in the Far East can never be restored."

We believe that the very magnitude of the Gandhi-Nehru movement proves that the British have failed to awaken the people of India to a knowledge of what this war means for them. We believe that Gandhi and Nehru have failed to weigh the reasons which forbid the British to take the chance of abandoning India to a civil war between the Hindus and the Moslems. We believe that the Moslems, however fearful of becoming an oppressed minority in a "free" India, have failed to take into account the imminent danger that they will become an oppressed minority in a slave world.

We believe that the British must refuse to withdraw their administrative agencies and their laws if this withdrawal is likely to produce anarchy. We believe, nevertheless, that they should explore to the last breath and syllable every prospect of adjustments that will increase Indian self-respect and lead the Indian people, of all races and religions, in the road of self-government.

The time is short. The full committee of the Congress party votes today on its "non-violent non-cooperation" resolution. This is no hour for dogmatists. It is a historic opportunity for men of good-will, in India and in London, to throw nonessentials to the winds. Let us not deceive ourselves. The length of this war, perhaps its outcome, and with it our own future, is involved in this Indian-British crisis.

Arrest Temporarily Silences Gandhi

"The Courier-Journal"
Louisville, Ky.

Rioting and sporadic manifestations of ill-feeling follow the British arrests of leaders of the Congress Party, including Mohandas K. Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. But it is difficult to see what other course of action remained open to the British, just as it is difficult for students of the long career of the wily Mahatma Gandhi not to feel that arrest and a martyr's role are among the eventualities he has counted upon.

The British now are paying heavily for past mistakes and stupidities in the conduct of Indian affairs—mistakes and stupidities for which no one man is more to blame than Winston Churchill. But for these there has been of recent years a generous disposition to atone by liquidating imperialism through orderly processes of political evolution. But the reaching of independence based upon Western ideals of democratic procedure has held little or no interest for leaders of the Congress Party who have determinedly ignored the fears and claims of huge and inimical minorities in their demand for an immediate withdrawal of British supervision in favor of government through the party's leadership.

It is a tragedy for the United Nations that payment for past mistakes must be presented at this crucial juncture of the war. It is still more a tragedy that Indian leaders who could have set an example to the world in the subordination of individual claims to the common fight for freedom should choose instead to demand immediate payment of a stake which has been pledged them as a post-war settlement with the whole free world as witness. Their arrests must be regretted by everybody who has watched with interest and sympathy the growth of Indian nationalism. But it is difficult to blame the British at this point for ending a forebearance which must have been watched with cynical amusement by the same Axis powers whose motives and methods are regarded with such tolerance by Gandhi and his Congress adherents.

Dangerous Ignorance

With regret The News and Courier reads this expression in The Winnsboro News and Herald, and so would read it in any other newspaper of South Carolina:

"Just the same, despite The News and Courier's apparent irritation because certain colored persons in the larger areas remain on WPA, we hold that the negro, in the North and in the South, has rarely received his just deserts. And if he is now receiving some 'conscience money' (The News and Courier calls it 'vote money') from the white man's government—a government that has mistreated him for a century or more—we shall not become unduly alarmed. Abolish WPA, we say. But abolish it without making excuses for the act."

56K

While in the slavery day and in the day of freedom negroes often have been maltreated, cruel injustice has been done to them in individual cases, there have been hard taskmasters (so everywhere in the United States white men have often suffered similar injustice), the simple fact is that the Southern negroes as a section of the African race have had far better treatment than they have had in other parts of the world.

---

A large proportion of the negro slaves were sold to slave traders by negro slave masters in Africa.

In the South they multiplied, they received the comforts of life, they had "social security" (they were property), and they became "civilized". In Haiti they have long been free, and have not been civilized there, have not prospered, have not substantially increased in numbers. Nor have the negro tribes anywhere in the "Dark Continent" advanced as they have in the South.

The simple fact is that in slavery and freedom the negroes in Fairfield county, (named for its "fair fields") have enjoyed opportunities and have made progress that they would never have known if they had not had kind, just and generous masters and employers, however there were exceptions among the white men.

Where in America is a monument erected by white men to a white sheriff who gave his life in protecting a negro accused of infamous crime except in Winnsboro, Fairfield county, South Carolina?

When negroes were slaves, free white labor was sometimes imported to the South, paid fifty cents a day, to drain swamps and dig canals, because white men valued their slaves too highly to have them exposed in that kind of labor.

The condition of laboring people was hard whether free or slave in the United States and everywhere in the world until sixty or seventy years ago. A century ago white girls from farms of New England were working twelve or thirteen hours a day six days in the week in New England mills and were locked in their rooms at night lest they should run away. Theodore Dreiser in his "Reminiscences" tells of labor and living conditions in Pittsburgh in the 1880s that would have shocked and distressed Southern white employers had they been present on their farms in that period.

India Congress Move Upheld

Coalition Government Seen as Solution of Present Difficulty

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We feel that Bertrand Russell's letter in The Times of Aug. 5 has completely misrepresented the present move of the India National Congress. Dr. Russell does not seem to realize the forces that have driven the Congress to take this step.

AUG 7 1942

Since the failure of the Cripps mission, apathy and bitterness have swept over India. Certain elements in India have even expressed delight over the recent Japanese victories. The Japanese are busy manoeuvring a puppet government for India in connivance with some exiled Indian revolutionaries. Something had to be done immediately to check the fatal tide in India and to counteract the Japanese move. That Gandhi has done by revitalizing and redramatizing his fight for freedom. He is reassuring his followers that freedom can yet be won by his methods, and not by outside help. We feel that India is infinitely safer in the hands of the Congress than it would be in any one else's.

565

Dr. Russell advises India to welcome experienced British military control. No one in India wants to dispense with this assistance. It seems to have escaped Dr. Russell's notice that the Congress was even in favor of giving more powers to the British commander in chief (see Azad's last letter to Cripps), provided only an Indian Minister of War was also entrusted with effective military powers. The Congress wanted those powers for an Indian Minister, because only then would it have been possible to rouse the apathetic masses and to make this war a people's war in India. We are informed that India will welcome joint military control under the United Nations. Does Dr. Russell think that Britain would accept this arrangement?

The Congress movement is not calculated, as Dr. Russell asserts, to hinder the victory of the United Nations, nor to assist Japan. It is calculated to stir the masses, without whose hearty support no amount of foreign troops, nor experienced British help, can save India. Have we learned nothing from the débâcle in Malaya and Burma? Gandhi is exhorting the people to resist the Japanese with all that they have. And if India falls to Japan it will be due not to the Congress but to the British Government that has deliberately kept Indians unarmed, and that still does not trust them with the defense of their own country.

Dr. Russell will serve India, as he has done in the past, better by inducing his own people immediately to set up in India a Coalition Indian Government with real powers. That means curtailing the dictatorial powers of the Viceroy—a curtailment that Cripps refused.

AUG 7 1942

It is strange that Dr. Russell, the great Liberal friend of India, should end his letter with the solemn warning that "Whoever supports this [Gandhi's] movement is no friend of either India or China." Dr. Russell should read Lin Yutang's message to the Town Hall Meeting supporting the Congress movement. That speaks for millions of Chinese.

An Example: Ethiopia

Roland Hall Sharp, in The Christian Science Monitor, outlines the status of Ethiopia since that small nation has been relieved of Axis domination. The British still have garrisons of troops in the little country, but there is no strong domination.

SEP 1 2 1942

As Mr. Sharp says, all that is being done by the British in Ethiopia for the assistance of the war program, is being done "with a minimum of affront to Ethiopian self-respect, and with a maximum of Ethiopian consent."

At present Haile Selassie does not play a role as head of a member nation of the United Nations. The writer suggests that the ruler has some grounds for wishing, first, to see what the policy of this group of nations is to be with respect to small and weaker countries. His experience with the League of Nations leaves Selassie with some doubts, probably, as to the effectiveness of joint international guarantees of sovereignty.

But the British have withdrawn much of their personnel from Ethiopia. Perhaps far more, Mr. Sharp says, than they were obliged to, though, of course, there is a great demand for British forces in more active parts of the world.

Ethiopia, as Mr. Sharp comments, is the focus-point of the eyes of many of the world's smaller countries. For the British policy there may be, to them, an indication of the policy of the larger nations of the world in the post-war world.

SEP 1 2 1942

Doubtless much talk of the place of small nations in a better ordered post-war world causes leaders of small nations to conduct their affairs with larger and more powerful national governments, or groups of such governments, with some hesitancy. These leaders know that there is a theoretical question before those who even now are thinking of the international system to come after the war is over. That question is whether a more closely organized world system of cooperation can afford to make a place for the completely independent small nation.

SEP 1 2 1942

Thus Ethiopia, small though it is, is test point. Colonial powers are iewed askance by small nations, reardless of pledges. Action is more ssuring to them. It should be reasuring that whatever suggestions for nternational cooperation are given ominance in the post-war world, it eems most likely that the colonial polcy of all free nations is bound to unergo a change. Strict care in maters concerning small nations is a equisite to a truly free and indepenlent world of nations, large and small, fter the war.

Still Hope for India

AUG 2 4 1942

Over the last weekend, the air was full of rumors that a compromise of some sort would be attempted in India. We hope they are true. For a description of the harm that can be done to the cause of the United Nations by injustice to India, we refer our readers to the article by Dr. Lin Yutang on page 217 of this issue. This distinguished Chinese philosopher and author speaks for his whole nation and for millions in other parts of the world, in saying why the problem of India is more than a mere matter of the British Empire or even of Britain and the United States together.

AUG 2 4 1942

On the whole, it has looked, up to now, as though the British believe that they can destroy Gandhi's influence permanently, by crushing the present campaign of civil disobedience. They also seem to believe that the support and coöperation of the Indian masses are of little if any importance in defending India against invasion by Japan. They perhaps expect to maintain the status quo by force of arms until the war is over and then start afresh with some version of the Cripps plan.

If this is intended, it is a desperate, a foolhardy course and it is worth noting that the men responsible for it have a painful record of failure in similar circumstances in the past. They failed in Malay. They did the same in Burma. If the Tories go on as they have begun in India, they may add the loss of the war to all the other failures of their past. Yet even now it is not too late for a sensible and humane policy to be adopted. It cannot be said too often that India is a problem for the United Nations; that the quarrel can be meditated as any other quarrel can be; that there are half a dozen formulas for a provisional government, or for a United Nations guarantee of fair treatment. The Moslem problem is not incapable of solution, or the problem of the untouchables or the problem of the native princes, many of whom are not and never have been fit to occupy a throne.

OUR STAKE IN INDIA

AUG 2 8 1942

American concern for India is primarily military. We have sent armed forces there to fight the Japs, to give aid and encouragement to China and possibly to help retake Burma and reopen the road to Mandalay, Singapore and the East Indies. Wherever there is a Jap there is an enemy of the United States, an enemy who has been calculating for 20 or 30 years with a vindictive long term policy. This has become one of the bitterest of all wars, one of racial hatreds, deeper than the color of the skin, and it is the American purpose to put the Japs back where we found them.

Of recent years we may have seemed to ask for some of this trouble, but allowing for that it nevertheless was invited over the long term of years by double dealing Japanese treaty makers, two-faced men with hidden knives. The American force, principally air, was sent into a country supposed to be a dependable base against an enemy which thus far has been more destructive than any other to the British empire. It is of concern to the United States that these American forces and whatever reënforcements they need should not be caught in empire revolution, civil war, dangerous disorders or an internal weakness which lets in the Japs. This is our primary concern and because the whole military situation in Asia may be affected by the handling of the Indian problem our voice in the affair is not that of an intruder.

AUG 2 8 1942

Americans cannot deny that their idea of a free people includes India. It has been Great Britain's problem and a tough one. But didn't Mr. Churchill for the British government and people accept and sign the charter of freedoms? He may not have examined Mr. Roosevelt's altruisms attentively or have been awake when they were read. At the most he may have had only a practical politician's idea that one of the party's orators had a good rostrum composition which would sound well.

AUG 2 8 1942

Any number of people must think that some of the freedoms, such as freedom from want and fear everywhere in the world, are idealities beyond the power of any charter signers to achieve. The wisdom of such platforms is questioned. If they fool aspiring people they are bad. If they fool only their authors they are bad. India is one of the bad consequences right now. Other countries than India are asking whether they are being fooled or not being fooled.

The British may see no way of making the political and property readjustments in wartime and they may feel that they cannot expose their flank to the unpredictable consequences of turning India loose unconditionally. Indian factions might tear the land apart. The discords arise from religious, racial, social, and economic differences, from conflicting superstitions and rituals, from poverty, illiteracy, and intolerance. This is not to say that Indian independence is impossible. It is possible but difficult. Our own republic had its difficulties and still has them. We are taunted with the fact that we have not yet brought our cherished rights within reach of all our citizens.

Gandhi says that independence must be won and not come as a gift. Otherwise it will lack the spiritual lamp. He is right. What the Indian leaders of all sects must do, now or some time, is form a government which will endure, which will have the consent of the people, which will protect minorities. That will be winning independence. That is India's own problem. If India can solve it, liberty will not come as a gift. It will be won the hard way. Great Britain need not delay until the end of the war. India can be asked to form its government now. That will satisfy the dictates of the charter of freedoms. And it will give India something to do which may require longer than the duration. Such a government will not be conjured out of a jar or found on a magic carpet.

Churchill Shows How Not to Handle India

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

The greater the man who leads in crisis, the greater the risk is run when the question of the hour must magnify his weakness and render impotent his genius for leadership. This risk, this implicit tragedy, now faces all of us because the overshadowing, the tremendous problem of India must be faced by WINSTON CHURCHILL.

SEP 12 1942

The very qualities which have made CHURCHILL the undisputed leader of embattled Englishmen unfit him for solving the Indian riddle. At his best, and that best is magnificent, CHURCHILL typifies the old Englishman, not the new, emerging product of a rocking world, but the vanishing race of empire builders. A final, defiant embodiment of Nineteenth Century England, he is brave, intelligent, just, superbly patriotic; he also is an instinctive autocrat, a convinced believer in the theory of empire and the blessings of colonization under enlightened rule.

There is no way that such a man can be brought to see the real meaning of the ferment that is working in India. The Congress Party may be leaderless and wrongheaded; its course may be drifting irrevocably towards disaster for India and the United Nations. But for what it is, it is the legitimate child of Eastern mysticism and the Western democratic ideal. There is no reason to believe that sympathy and understanding could not reconcile these disparate forces. There is no reason why even at this dangerous hour a working agreement could not be reached which would insure India's whole-hearted participation in the war without any drastic change in the political status quo, or any trade with the Congress Party which would endanger the liberties of minorities.

But to Mr. CHURCHILL, there is no force in India which cannot be combatted by turning back the clock. The troubled and troublesome reaching towards freedom becomes, to his uncompromising mind, merely the effort of a handful of traitors to embarrass the waiting allies. The dangerously silent masses, who are at this moment neither with GANDHI nor against him, but who are certainly not with Britain, are, in Mr. CHURCHILL's colonial creed, behaving with the submissiveness due from docile people to kindly rulers. Entirely unaware of the terrible implications of his words to a world which well knows the tragic difference between the democratic theory of racial equality and its unfulfilled practice, he speaks cheerily of large reinforcements and of the growing number of "white soldiers" now in India. As in the old pattern of yesterday, the riots of defiant brown men must be put down firmly by white soldiers so that life can go on as usual.

There can be no truce with India on Mr. CHURCHILL's terms. There can be nothing but the countering of steel with sullenness and the slow worsening of a bad situation. Apparently Mr. CHURCHILL felt that the proposals made by Sir STAFFORD CRIPPS and rejected by the Congress Party represented the ultimate in British concession. That gesture made, there is no more to be done, at least by the righteous and arrogant in Whitehall.

It is probable that the English themselves, on the theory of empire a generation ahead of Mr. CHURCHILL, will induce the modification of his last rash and ungracious statement. Otherwise, the explosion now gathering force beneath the surface will force a reconsideration at the cost of no man knows how much blood and bitterness in time to come.

The Case For India

By LESTER BROWN

The whole world has consciously put India on trial. It has been argued with quite some weight that India's ultimate attitude may spell victory or defeat for either the Allies or the Axis.

At the outset we can validly attest that India has not had a "good press" among the dailies of England and America. The exception to this has been the Marshall Field press, the Negro press and outstanding periodicals like [illegible] Nation, [illegible] Republic, and fearless thinkers such as Pearl Buck and Samuel Grafton. Millions of others feel that India should have immediate independence but they are inarticulate.

Just prior to the last war, India was promised Dominion status by the Viceroy as well as his superiors in London. But at the close of the war Dominion status was not forthcoming. It was argued that India was too divided to merit self rule. There were the Hindus, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Sikhs, Jaims, Parsees, Animists and Christians, and a caste system within each religious framework. It was further argued that India was too illiterate to merit Dominion status. Thus we see that this request for immediate independence is not a fresh problem intruding itself into the world arena just when the British are fighting a life and death struggle. Britian misrepresents and varnishes the Indian position with calumny when she intimates that India, so to speak, is trying to stab her in the back at a crucial moment.

England should long ago have realistically tried to settle the Indian question. But what did she do? Jailed the leaders of India for protesting against political, economic and social injustices. What would be Churchill's attitude toward India if the positions of the countries were [illegible]sed and India had jailed and half starved him because he pled for the rights of his countrymen? No sensible, justice-loving man need ponder long for an answer to this query.

What is India's precise philosophy and position at the moment? India is saying to the world—disgorged from diplomatic language—that she wants her independence, now! It is long over-due! "What then will become of you (India) if you try your philosophy of 'passive resistance' on the Japs once England has granted your terms?" many are asking. India answers: "We will take our chances. We know that this step will not settle the many difficulties that we will encounter in the long process of making a united, independent nation, but if this is a hard step, delay will only make it harder. In 1776, the thirteen American colonies did not want taxation without representation and so declared, took up arms and freed themselves. Her peoples were diverse, her religious sects many; she risked being a free people to work out her many problems in her own way. They have not yet been satisfactorily worked out. But the first step was to gain the privilege of wor[illegible] them [illegible]without outside control or interference. That is what we want—the responsibility of working out our own destiny in our own way."

AUG 16 1942

The aforegoing is a summation of the Indian position. The question arises—if India is anti-Axis, as she has often alleged, with the exception of the fascist-minded Bose, why does she not act in good faith with the Allies, chime in with the allied efforts for the duration, and thereby aid in the conquest of the Axis?

The plain truth is that many Indians in the All-India Congress would favor waiting until the close of the war for their independence, meanwhile using every means of aiding the Allies. The principal Indian leaders are not so credulous. They have been burned in the crucible of bitter experience and they have emerged a residue of hardened realists not a little skeptical. As we earlier noted when the Indians were promised Dominion status after the close of the last war, Indians eagerly threw their man-power (300,000) in the fray and fought with magnificent valor. But, alas, after the war, listening hope did not hear the flap of freedom's wings.

Whatever bitterness that may immediately follow henceforth from last August 7, we must try to see the Indian position too. For if we do not, the mistake may be fatal. If Russia falls, Turkey, Iran and Iraq will too. Then India,—the last stymie between the Axis partners, can join hands. Africa then would be untenable for the British. The Americas would be isolated.

This dire picture could be otherwise. Give India her immediate independence and do not resort to camouflage or policing the Indian masses. A free India will fight—will collaborate with the Allies. A free India collaborating is the better of the bargain of trying to hold India and losing the war.

British Leftists Strongly Assail Arrest Of Gandhi, But London Stands Firm

Mahatma's Life One Of Nonviolence and Constant Struggle

By the Associated Press

India, spawning ground of religions and of mystical movements, has come to a crisis that may be the gravest in her modern history.

The prime mover in that crisis is Mohandas K. Gandhi, frail ascetic little man who has spent most of his adult life in a nonviolent struggle to improve the lot of Indians, as he sees it.

Here are some high lights of the strange career of Gandhi, who soon will be 73 years old:

1869 — Mohandas Karachand Gandhi born, October 2, at Porbander, near industrial city of Armadabad.

1882—Married at age of 13 to another 13-year-old who became mother of four children before Gandhi and she agreed on "brother-sister" relationship.

1887—Went to England, studied law at University of London.

1893—Went to Natal, South Africa, as attorney in law suit, found Boers treating Hindu settlers like native Negroes and started movement for Hindu suffrage.

Imprisoned in South Africa

1893-1814—Resided in South Africa after year at home, spending nearly two decades in championing Hindu cause, being imprisoned several times and giving up lucrative law practice to further the movement; espoused British cause in Boer War, heading Red Cross unit. Later organized hospital in Johannesburg to fight plague, and once led stretcher company with troops suppressing native revolt in Natal.

1914—Led his first passive resistance campaign in South Africa and made a settlement with General Smuts.

1915—Returned to India, shared leadership of nationalist movement with C. R. Das; advocated pacificism during World War and organized ambulance corps for British Army; won two war medals.

Instituted Civil Disobedience

1918—Gandhi instituted "satyagraha," literally "insistence on truth," or nonviolent disobedience of laws considered unjust.

1919—Britain set up 10-year trial period of government by dual British-Indian control.

1920—Gandhi started passive resistance campaign, including boycotts of government service, legislature, courts and foreign goods, surrender of all public offices and withdrawal of children from government schools. British imposed stringent political regulations following riots.

1922—Sentenced to six years in prison on charges on conspiring to spread disaffection with a view to overthrowing the government.

1924—Released from prison following appendectomy.

Takes Salt from Ocean

1930—Gandhi began with an attack on the salt tax, a levy which touched every household, by drawing a small amount of illegal salt from sea water. He was arrested in May after the campaign began spreading with rioting as a consequence.

1930-1934—This was the period of two round-table conferences in London at which India's dominion status was pledged by the British, the period of Gandhi's renewed civil disobedience program, his fasting "unto death," and his continued fight to abolish the Hindu caste system. Some of the time he spent in jail.

1937—Frail headth drove him into seclusion in a mud hut 200 miles north of Bombay. He tried to renounce the title of "Mahatma" (great soul) and on his sixty-eighth birthday started a three-year campaign for prohibition.

Faster for Four Days

1939—Went on his sixth hunger strike in March, in protest against administration in Rajkot state. Fast lasted four days. In this period Gandhi demanded independence as the price of Indian participation in the war.

1940—Lead All-India Congress as it meets on question of Indian independence; Britain promises "free and equal partnership" in return for war effort, but Gandhi unimpressed.

1941—New civil disobedience program in progress.

1942—Gandhi, having quit again as leader of Congress Party, says civil disobedience is off for the duration, meets China's Chiang Kai-shek; Britain offers full dominion status after the war, with right to secede; proposal rejected, with Gandhi influence against it a big factor; Gandhi named to head new civil disobedience campaign, he and others leaders placed under arrest; rioting starts.

Government Tells Necessity for Use Of Strong Measure

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 9.—The Communist Party of Britain and the Leftist International Labor Party strongly criticized the British Indian government's action today in arresting Mohandas K. Gandhi and other leaders of a civil disobedience movement, but L. S. Amery, secretary for India, announced the government in London completely approved and supported the steps taken.

"Although there may be some minor trouble, there is no danger of the movement assuming the proportions it might have if the government had been weak," said Amery, at a press conference which was held before [illegible] of rioting reache[illegible] from Bombay.

Gandhi's movement "still may be troublesome from the point of view of administration," said Amery, "but I believe the authorities will be able to cope with it without undue difficulty."

Assails "Stab in Back"

He expressed faith that the majority of "realistic" people in India were behind the government's move to scotch "an attempt by blackmail and civil disturbance to make ordinary government of India impossible and to paralyze India's war effort."

He called the attempt "a stab in the back to all who are fighting in India or from India in the cause of the United Nations, whether they be Indians, Americans or Chinese."

No government could accept such a situation," Amery continued. "The government of India could not wait until the masses got excited, until rioting and bloodshed began. It was necessary to cut off the current, to disconnect Gandhi and other leaders from their followers."

Apart from Gandhi, "who has his own idiosyncrasies," the Congress leaders "realized no government could pull out and leave a continent to anarchy. They knew it was nonsense to talk of India's war effort being increased by such means."

Won't Halt British Course

He asserted most congress leaders were motivated by a desire to create an emotional situation [illegible] the hope of repairing prestige [illegible] damaged by rejection of Sir Stafford Cripps' suggestions" for solution of the Indian problems.

In any case, he concluded, the present action "will not deflect the government from the broad purpose of providing India, as soon as the war is over, with full opportunity under the constitution to become a free dominion, as free as any nation could be."

The Communist Party's statement said, "whatever views may be taken on tactical mistakes the leaders of the Indian national congress have made, there can be no justification for the stupid and clumsy provocative measures since adopted by the British government.

"To resort in the present critical situation to methods of publicizing stolen documents, arrest of leaders and closing down the nationalist press reveals a bankruptcy of leadership that has nothing in common with the best interest of the British and Indian peoples."

Deplores Congress Party Action

The statement w[illegible] to deplore the Congress Party's action as one which would only play into the hands of the Axis powers," but urged Britain to release those arrested and "open up fresh negotiations with a view to establishment of an interim popular national government in India."

The National Council of the International Labor Party, meeting in Bangor, Wales, said the British government action in India "renounced before the whole world any claim to represent the principles of freedom and democracy."

The India league, which said it represented the Congress Party in Britain, said arrest of Congress leaders disclosed Britain "has no policy but the mailed fist."

The Mind of Nehru

GLIMPSES OF WORLD HISTORY. By Jawaharlal Nehru. The John Day Company. $4.

A HISTORY of the world by the second most important leader of India naturally arouses great interest. It is, if nothing more, a testimony to the intellectual versatility of its author, who amid the activities of political life has read so widely and gathered facts so intelligently that he has managed to produce a quite creditable survey of world history, not inferior to Wells's "Outline of History," to which incidentally the author acknowledges his indebtedness. Interest in the work is increased by the knowledge that the book was written in prison in the period 1931-34, and that it was meant primarily for his youngest daughter. The chapters are in the form of dated letters to her, but the personal element is never obtrusive. Many chapters were obviously written for a larger audience, for they would hardly be comprehensible to a small girl.

It cannot be claimed that the book as history contains anything striking or original, although its emphasis on Oriental events and its treatment of the great heroes of the East wholesomely offset the usual historical survey which makes world history ancillary to the history of Europe. The author has some difficulty in finding a pattern to give meaning to the panorama of events that he records. He presents modern history primarily as a struggle between imperialism and nationalism, and his position as a nationalist leader prompts him to regard this struggle as a conflict between good and evil, but he is too conscious of the divisive force of nationalism in the world to hold to such a thesis resolutely.

Most of us will probably be more interested in the glimpses into Nehru's own mind that the book affords than in its presentation of world history. Among the great leaders of history Akbar, Napoleon, and Lenin claim his particular interest. Akbar he regards as "in a sense—the father of Indian nationalism," a "wise despot, who made commendable efforts to synthesize Hindu and Moslem culture. Of Lenin he declares that "as time passes he grows greater; he has become one of the chosen company of the world's immortals." His enthusiasm for Lenin extends to the whole Soviet experiment.

It is not unnatural that he should find difficulty in doing justice to Britain and British civilization. He thinks that Britain does not have real democracy but rather exploits the democratic idea for undemocratic purposes. The depth of his anti-British feeling warps many a judgment. His own political convictions may be described as passionately democratic and socialistic. Of the terror unleashed by revolutionary movements, he observes that it is only more vivid than the "day-to-day terror of starvation which overshadows millions."

Quite obviously his political convictions are not identical with those of Gandhi. He is of course generous in his appreciation of the Mahatma. He observes that "behind his language of peace and friendship there was power and the quivering shadow of action and a determination not to submit to wrong." But it is significant that he transmutes Gandhi's religious doctrine of non-violence into pragmatic strategy, justified because no other alternative is open to India. "Armed rebellion seemed out of question for the Indian people. We were disarmed, and most of us did not even know the use of arms. Besides, in a contest of violence the organized power of the British government, or any state, was far greater than anything that could be raised against it." Gandhi's program was "an effective way to get the masses to function, and it seemed to fit in with the peculiar genius of the Indian people."

Nehru's autobiography furnished us of course with other glimpses into the mind of one of the great political leaders of our day, and perhaps this book gives us no new insight. It is nevertheless a rewarding experience to accompany this man through the paths and bypaths of history. He is plainly a leader of striking spiritual integrity. Is he also, one wonders, a man of resolute action?

REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Nation
New York, N. Y.

BOTH THE INDIAN NATIONALISTS AND THE British government appear to be feeling their way toward a reduction in the gap that separates them, and as a result there has been some easing of political tension in India. A reorganization of the Viceroy's council has made possible increased Indian participation in the government on the lines proposed during the abortive Cripps mission. Sir Firoz Noon Khan, a moderate Moslem, has been appointed Minister of Defense, and Dr. B. R. Ambedkar has been named Minister of Labor, thus giving the 60,000,000 "untouchables" of whom the latter is the leader a representative on the council for the first time. With the enlargement of the council non-official Indian members enjoy a clear majority. At the same time two Indians have been appointed to sit with the War Cabinet in London; this puts India in the same position on that body as the Dominions. While Britain has been making these concessions, Gandhi, in his usual frank way, has announced a change of views. He now believes that "foreign troops are necessary for a defense of India" and is therefore prepared to welcome the Anglo-American forces provided they leave as soon as the crisis is over. However, the Mahatma's statements are always subject to interpretation, and the gloss he himself offers on this occasion leaves much unclear. For instance, he thinks that the military forces protecting India should not exercise any authority over the people of India—a proposition which, to put it mildly, seems to offer insuperable administrative difficulties. Nor will practical Western minds be attracted by the suggestion that India express its philosophy of non-violence by sending ambassadors to Rome, Berlin, and Tokyo, "not to beg peace but to show them [the Axis powers] the futility of war."

The Indian Crisis

~~AUG 1 5~~ 1942

It was with mixed feelings accusing the leaders and pitying the deluded crowds, that we learned of the Indian Government's action following the adoption by the All-India Congress Committee of the Congress Working Committee's resolution proposing a civil disobedience campaign if British power is not withdrawn from India.

Politicians all the world over can be permissibly mischievous in their utterances against their adversaries, and Mr. Gandhi's somewhat reckless words: "Quit and let India misrule herself" could be taken for what they are worth from a political point of view. But an attempt to translate such words into action at a time when the worst enemies of the aspired freedom are knocking at the gate is the height of folly and irresponsibility.

AUG 1 5 1942

Rather the Indian leaders had launched a campaign against the forces of disunity in that country which we believe are the main stumbling block to the realisation of full political independence. Congress leaders may plausibly defend their case by quoting one of the world's greatest statesmen, Abraham Lincoln, who once said "No man is good enough to rule another man against his will." Those words can also be appropriately used against Congress which seeks to impose itself against the will of millions of Moslems and other groups outside the pail of Congress in India.

AUG 1 5 1942

While it is easy to blame the British Government for having waited till the advent of a critical stage in the history of India before embarking on a bold political move in that country, it should be remembered that two wrongs do not make a right. In spite of all our sympathy with the Indian national cause we cannot countenance a movement that is sure to undermine the future of so many other countries inviting as it does the entry into India of a very unscrupulous enemy.

AUG 1 5 1942

It is to be hoped even at this juncture that the Indian people will compromise their feelings and remember that too much is at stake to allow the entertainment of such purely nationalistic indulgences, and that the Government of India will discharge its duties to India and the Allied nations with the minimum of suffering in that country.

BRITISH HYPROCRISY

AUG 22 1942

The arrest of Gandhi and of other influential members of the all-India Nationalist Congress, is the greatest blunder committed to date by the British government. From the Ethiopian crisis and the tragedies that followed in the wake of the Munich Pact to the failure of Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to India, British diplomacy has had almost an uninterrupted series of convulsive blunders.

It would not be extraneous logic to view these blunders not in the light of inept foreign policies, which could be forgiven and explained away with grace, but in the obvious context of a British diplomacy that refuses to renounce the imperialistic thesis of John Bull in the face of a changing world outlook.

The reaction that the failure of the Cripps' mission met in British official circles, showed unmistakably that the Churchill ministry did not intend for the mission to succeed. Moreover, the developments that have ensued since then and Sir Stafford's own public utterances lead us to doubt his sincerity and avowed friendship for the people of India. In the ordinary course of political events, the failure of so important a mission would have ended Sir Stafford's political dreams and relegated him to permanent obscurity which is death to British politicians. But Sir Stafford's popularity instead of decreasing, has increased in proportion to the extraordinary consequences of the muddled Indian issue.

The conclusion is therefore inescapable that the mission was a mere show intended for the uncritical and the unsuspecting. The plain truth is, Britain never meant to grant independence to India. The promise that the Indian people's demand for freedom would be granted after the war was correctly termed by Gandhi as a "post dated blank check." Against an historical background of broken British promises, the "after the war" stratagem failed to deceive Indian leadership and the rank and file of the Nationalist Congress at the time when England and her allies are fighting for world democracy and freedom.

Why did not Britain send another mission to India? Why did not the viceroy of India use his influence to have the Mahatma postpone his final decision? The answer is clear. Great Britain does not intend to relinquish her imperialistic hold on the darker peoples that make up the British empire. To do so now, she doubtless reasoned, would be tantamount to inviting colored people everywhere to press for their democratic rights. Yet these are the very rights for which the white world is fighting, and which colored people everywhere are called upon to defend under the flamboyant banner of democracy.

If India's cry for freedom is smothered, the position of the Negro people the world over will become increasingly precarious; more than that, the cause of democracy for which our own beloved America and her allies are bleeding, will be irreparably jeopardized. Such fearful eventualities should prompt Negro and white American citizens—especially Negro citizens—to aid India in her hour of trial and storm. They should urge our good President Roosevelt, who has made the principle of the Four Freedoms the cornerstone of his brilliant, humanitarian administration, to intervene in the Indian crisis. Failure to reach a satisfactory settlement of the issue would have dire consequences causing the already unhappy position of the colored people to degenerate into the tragic plight of birds without nests.

THE ATLANTIC CHARTER AND INDIA

AUG 22 1942

Friday, August 14, marked the first anniversary of the Atlantic Charter. This is a document that men have set their hopes upon. The third clause reads that "They (the Churchill-Roosevelt governments) respect the right of all people to choose the form of government under which they will live."

AUG 22 1942

Today, one year has passed. The people of India are being murdered in cold blood because they are demanding a national government of their own choosing. Riots are sweeping India. The people want freedom under the terms of the Charter even though Churchill has said it did not apply to the empire.

The sympathy of Negro America pours all-out for India. The demands of India are just. There are no "buts," nor can there be any. Negro America supports India's demands. Negro America knows that the independence of India will aid the cause of the United Nations in the fight against Hitler and Hitlerism. It will aid the cause of colonial freedom; the cause of Africa and of black men in these United States. The cause of freedom and democracy is indivisible. We stand with India in order to do honor to our own demands for full and complete equality.

Either the Atlantic Charter will be made to mean what it says or a colossal fraud of disastrous proportion is being perpetrated upon mankind. Yet only the people can make the Atlantic Charter live. Freedom and democracy are not given. They must be won. Black America must understand this well. The war against Hitler is our war but Hitlerism everywhere must be stamped out as we fight or we lose. India is fighting our battle. Imperialist elements within Britain and behind the scenes are forcing a course upon the Churchill government that can only bring about the defeat of the United Nations. America must speak out against this.

Make no mistake about it, India is the victim of British imperialist greed, terror, and rapacity. Negro America is the victim of American imperialism, greed, terror, and rapacity. Puerto Rico's desperate plight stems from the same source.

Certainly not all white men are imperialist. Nor is the Roosevelt government imperialistic. But for the most part our most powerful monopolists are. They are the owners of mines, railroads, steamship lines, and great plantations of our country. They want to own, dominate and control the whole world, politically and economically. White labor is also the victim of the rapacity of these elements. Many of these bloated "lords of creation" had all kinds of trade ties and agreements with Hitler's Germany. The investigation of the Senate committee headed by Harry H. Truman exposed the methods by which these men have held up war production until they secured the profits they demanded from our government. These men are not seeking a victory for democracy.

These are the men whose discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups made the Fair Employment Practices committee necessary. The ways of imperialists at home do not differ when they or their money goes abroad. Negro America must understand this basic but elementary truth if our fight for complete equality is going to be successful. Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles has said this is the end of the era of imperialism. We must make it just that and nothing less. This must be what we call it—a people's war.

Yes, we fully support the Indian demands for freedom. We call upon our government to act. India needs national independence.

Indian Crisis Quiet, But Worse; America Seeks Intervention

[redacted] 1 2 1942

Special

NEW DELHI, India.—Indians here are growing skeptical about the Four Freedoms and the importance of the Atlantic Charter promulgated by the Allied Nations with the promise that the age of imperialism is over. This suspicion is developing out of the failure to do anything about the conditions here, according to a special article to the NYTimes last Sunday by Herbert L. [illegible]atthews. The writer had talked with many important Indian leaders who asked:

"Why confine these splendid things to other parts of the world?"

Matthews also pointed out a growing desire that Washington intervene diplomatically or arbitrate to settle the deadlock between the British government and Indian elements belonging to the All-Indian Congress or sympathetic to Congress aims.

[redacted] 1 2 1942

This plea was made by all segments of life in India except by Moslem League members, and Congress leaders who are all in jail.

On the other hand, British opinion is just the opposite. Their attitude is that they the (British) will see the matter thru to the finish. They are confident they are doing right in using repression in the present circumstances.

There is widespread fear that the situation will get worse unless some neutral power gives both sides a chance for a satisfactory solution.

"Altho rioting has lessened," Matthews points out, "there is no outward sign that the general situation has improved. Today's National Call of Delhi reports incidents in 47 localities involving 10 deaths, 12 wounded, 79 arrests and many fines. That may not seem much in a country of 400,000,000, but that is just one day and every person involved in these incidents has relatives who in turn get embittered.

[redacted] 1 2 1942

"They ask whether the Bri are willing to sit on the lid inte minably with the brew getting hotter and hotter der them or whether, having shown their strength and determination, it would not be to their advantage to accept the friendly offer of a third party."

One Indian is quoted as saying: "We see thousands and thousands of Americans all over India, showing us you consider this country vital to the war effort, but, if so, why do you stand aside and permit a situation which is harming the war effort?"

All Indians interviewed by the NYTimes correspondent clearly stated that they do not trust the British.

[redacted] 1 2 1942

(Editor's note: During the last struggle to "save the world for democracy" the British promised India her freedom after World War I., but. . . . Hence, India bases her doubts on historical facts of broken promises.)

QUESTION OF INDIA

By WILLIAM PICKENS

~~AUG 2 3 1942~~

WILL GANDHI make THE mistake? He may, for when that old fellow sets his head to a course, he usually sticks to it, come hell or high water. In my judgment it will be his great mistake if he leads India out of the society of the united nations and into the claws of Japan and the company of the fascists. There is no doubt about what the past ought to have been, but a real statesman faces the present as it is, and the near future as he can best see it.

565

Thank heaven, this is the United States, where I can express my honest opinion to you and you do not have to agree with it. But you cannot forbid me to express it,—and I thank heaven the United States for that.—Sometimes I hear Negroes saying that the colored citizens of the United States should emulate the people of India,—that is, they should act toward their country as the Indian people threaten to act toward Great Britain. People often draw parallels that way, where the conditions are vastly, even diametrically different. Consider these differences:

AUG 2 3 1942

1. The people of India are located in India, and the British people are in the British Islands,—many thousands of miles away.

2. The American Negro is in the United States, and so are the American whites,—face to face with and all around and in and among each other.

3. The people of India are not citizens of the British Isles but foreign subjects of the British empire.

4. The American Negro is a citizen of the United States, by all the law that is,—and native born,—older American as a total racial group than are the whites as a total group.

AUG 2 3 1942

GANDHI NOT A TRAITOR

Gandhi, therefore, is not committing treason against his own country in India: he is standing for his country, India, even if with doubtful wisdom, and is both morally, legally and actually differently situated from the American Negro.

Any American Negro acting as Gandhi has been acting, should either have long ago been put into jail for 20 years or shot,—or else the law of civilized nations is a sham. The American Negro, one tenth part of the citizenship of his own country, even though he has just grievances, cannot seek to redress them in the way of the people of India, who are not only many thousands of miles away from the English nation but are also 8 or 10 times as numerous.

The American Negro's problem is a domestic problem. The problem of the man of India is a foreign problem in its main outlines. A Negro in the United States who refused to pay his taxes or to register for the army, is simply a common criminal. One of Gandhi's men who commits the same failures, is simply a protestant or a disobedient servant. In the yees of the local laws of the Indian states, he may be considered differently.

SEES NO PARALLEL

AUG 2 3 1942

There is no complete parallel of similarity between the Negro's problem in the United States and the Indian's problems in the British empire. They both have something which they want, and (I think) ought to have, but they will have to go after it by different methods and different routes

But going back to India: Since we wrote the foregoing paragraphs we read in the press that Gandhi and his associates are asking, or at least have now begun to ask not that British and other united nations should withdraw their forces from India during the present war, but should sign up guarantees to leave India when this war is finished.

That is a reasonable proposition which England should agree to but which India would hardly accept without the signature of other responsible powers also, like the United States, Russia and China Indian Independence after the war, but no evacuation by allied forces during this war, that makes

"DEMOCRACY BEGINS AT HOME"

AUG 2 9 1942

AFTER READING a pamphlet, "Freedom for India Now!" sent out by the Post War World Council in an effort to acquaint the people of this country with the Indian problem from the point of view of the Indian, we are still confused. Various liberal leaders have submitted statements to prove that the problem of India is no longer Great Britain's problem but that of all the United Nations engaged in the war against the dictators; that by permitting the British government to suppress the Indian revolution by ruthless force we give our tacit approval to such methods.

566

What the pamphlet says is true in a general way but it should apply also to Africa, to the West Indies, and to minority groups within our own country as well. To hear voluable Americans express horror over the treatment of the peoples of India when these conditions can be matched in our country where the only voices raised in protest are the voices of the victims, leaves us cold.

It's a fine thing to have a world outlook and a broad vision but its finer to be able to see injustice at home and to speak out against injustice wherever it is found. It's the same policy as that adopted by the white races in sending missionaries to Africa, China and other remote parts of the world to bring the christian religion to the "heathens" or "savages" when subsequent developments have proven that the same white races are just as much in need of the peaceful teachings of the Lowly Nazerene as those they were trying to convert.

If all those who are concerned about bringing freedom to someone else would show just as much concern about bringing freedom and democracy to Negroes in the United States, this war will not have been in vain. While they're indignant over crime in Indias, let them also show indignation and do something to eliminate the lynchings, discriminations and jim crowism so prevalent in these United States.

Says Britain Must Act Before World Will Be Convinced of 'Good Faith' of Allies

FIVE COLLEAGUES REPLY

'Broad Statements' by Men in Posts Deprecated—A Chance for Disunity Claim Visioned

AUG 2 1 1942

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20—Senator Robert R. Reynolds of North Carolina, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, asserted in the Senate today that Great Britain must grant immediate freedom to India before the world would be convinced of the "seriousness and good faith" of the United Nations.

The statement of the former isolationist brought quick and sharp rebukes from Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, the majority leader; Senator Tom Connally of Texas, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Senators George W. Norris of Nebraska, Walter F. George of Georgia and Styles Bridges of New Hampshire.

"If we are fighting for the right of people to maintain the government they desire," Mr. Reynolds said, "we can convince the people of the world of our seriousness and good faith only by requiring our ally, Britain, to grant immediate independence to the 370,000,000 people of India."

AUG 2 1 1942

Comment by Barkley

That brought from Mr. Barkley the comment that men in Mr. Reynolds's position should be especially careful of their comments, because their words carried much more weight than those of Senators and Representatives not holding such posts.

Deprecating the issuance of "broad statements" by men in such posts, Mr. Barkley said he also included in his condemnation Representative Andrew J. May, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, who recently suggested that the war was nearly won.

Mr. Connally indicated his belief that the North Carolinian's statement would be exploited by the Axis powers, and added that "in the great struggle now going on anything that detracts from a common effort does not serve national interests."

AUG 2 1 1942

Any moves that the United States might make in the Indian situation should originate in the Executive branch, he held.

Mr. George, who preceded Mr. Connally as Foreign Relations Committee chairman, made a similar comment.

"Any statement that can be interpreted as a denunciation of Britain which comes out of our government will be hailed by the enemy as evidence of disunity between Britain and ourselves," he said.

Questioned by Norris

Mr. Norris asked Mr. Reynolds what his reaction would be if a member of the British Parliament should suggest that Southern States "establish freedom and independence for all" by removing poll-tax restrictions on their voters.

Mr. Reynolds replied that he felt that Britons could be "excused" for making suggestions on "political matters" to this country if the result would help toward winning the war. Any suggestions based on othed motives, he held, however, would be "presumptuous."

Mr. Bridges said that Mr. Reynolds's proposal would not promote unity between this country and Britain, adding that he was "seeking to dictate to Britain what to do about India."

AUG 2 1 1942

Mr. Reynolds replied that he was not wording his "request" so that it could be construed as a "demand."

"I simply want this country to make a few friendly suggestions," he said.

He said that Japanese propaganda in India was extremely effective because it promised independence to the Indians. He held that "the best way to combat this infamous and untruthful propaganda is by Britain giving India the freedom that Japan is promising her."

Moslem Terms Offered

NEW DELHI, India, Aug. 20 (Reuter)—The working committee of the All-India Moslem League, in a resolution issued this afternoon after three days of debate, says it is willing to consider any proposals for the setting up of a provisional government of India provided the demand for "Pakistan" [separate Hindu and Moslem States] is conceded. The committee is willing to negotiate on such proposals with any other political parties on the footing of equality.

The resolution expresses the hope that Moslems will be able to carry on with their peaceful occupations and will not be intimiated from any quarter; otherwise they will be compelled to resist such efforts in order to protect their lives, honor and prosperity.

The resolution says the committee is of the opinion that if the Moslem masses are to be roused to intensify war efforts they must be assured it will lead to realization of "Pakistan." It calls on the British Government to come forward with an unequivocal declaration guaranteeing to Moslems the right to self-determination and to pledge that it will abide by the verdict of a Moslem plebiscite and give effect to the "Pakistan" plan in keeping with the basic principles of the Moslem League's Lahore resolution of March, 1940.

The resolution states that, "Having regard to the oft-repeated declaration of the United Nations that they will secure and guarantee freedom and indepnence for the smaller nations of the world, the working committee invites the immediate attention of the United Nations to the demand of the 100,000,000 Moslems in India to establish sovereign States in the zones which are their homelands and where they are in the majority."

Outbreaks in Madras State

BOMBAY, India, Aug. 20 (AP)—Looting and arson by Indian independence demonstrators broke out anew today in the Madras State. A communiqué said that 3,000 Indians attacked a police station in the West Godavari district and looked homes, and that 500 persons attacked government offices in the Ramnad district and looted the local treasury. The police fired on demonstrators at Bhimavaram.

British List Nine Killings

NAGPUR, India, Aug. 20 (AP)—Indian dissidents beat and burned two policemen to death and killed three others in an attack on a police station at Ashti, a British communiqué said today. Four district officials, including the subdivisional magistrate of the village of Chimus, were pounded to death and their bodies were burned by a mob, the communiqué added.

Nehru's Credo

GLIMPSES OF WORLD HISTORY. By Jawaharlal Nehru. John Day. $4.00.

N.Y., N.Y.
Common Sense

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU'S Glimpses of World History is an unusual book in many ways. It consists, in the main, of letters written from prison to his daughter between 1930 and 1933; in parts it contains postscripts written during the interlude between Munich and the beginning of the present war. Nothing in it is subsequent to the end of 1938, and therefore the author's attitude to the war does not appear.

Sept.—1945

The book contains two sorts of material: on the one hand, accounts of those parts of past history which he thought it most important for his daughter to know; on the other hand, an account of events since 1914, especially in Asia. Of the purely historical part it is enough to say that, considering that it was written without access to books except those in the prison library, it shows astonishing breadth of knowledge. I do not believe that any politician in the Western world knows as much history. But it is not on ancient history that readers are most anxious to learn Nehru's views; I shall therefore confine myself to his comments on events during the past thirty years.

Every Western reader, if he can sufficiently divest himself of bias, will profit by the account of imperialistic tyranny in Asia. Nehru has no special animus against the English, in spite of the fact that they have kept him so many years in prison, and that it is against them that his political activities have been particularly directed. As a good Marxist, he attributes their sins to capitalism, and finds the French and the Dutch, where they rule, equally objectionable. This broad outlook saves him from personal bitterness. He is not surprised that the English so frequently imprison him, and is not concerned to attribute moral blame to nations or individuals. Only rarely does he display bias. For instance, he mentions with approval Mustefa Kemal's prohibition of the fez and the veil, but is horrified that in parts of Bengal the government regulates dress.

This illustrates what seems to me an error that he shares with many reformers. Foreign tyranny is bad, but at the present time some of the worst tyrannies are native. Nehru, after all, is still alive; if he had been German or Russian or Japanese, he would have been put to death, not by foreigners, but by compatriots. (As regards Russia, he would question this, but not as regards Germany and Japan.)

It is important to understand Nehru's hopes, since they have as good a chance of being realized as those of any other idealist. He admires the Soviet Government, and believes that, if its economic system were established everywhere, tyranny would cease. He hopes that the various nations of Asia will achieve communism and self-determination, presumably in alliance with Russia. He dislikes Chiang Kai-Shek for his persecution of communists in 1927; this must obviously have weakened the force of Chiang's appeal to India at the time of the Cripps mission. He objects to the Zionists as allies of Western imperialism in a country belonging by right to the Arabs. (I cannot say that I have ever found Zionists particularly enthusiastic about British imperialism.) Like most Indian nationalists, he ignores the problem of the military defense of India; I think, if pressed, he would recommend an alliance with the U.S.S.R. Perhaps this is going to be the solution for the whole of Asia—even for Japan, after defeat. I cannot myself view this solution with enthusiasm, but that does not make it less probable. Whether it will come about is likely to depend upon the course of the war.

Nehru is a believer in democracy, but thinks the parliamentary form in capitalist countries outworn. What he would substitute is not clear; still less is it clear how, after establishing communism, he would prevent the growth of a bureaucratic tyranny. All this, I think he would say, is a problem for the future; the first thing is to free Asia from foreign imperialist rule.

I am convinced that only harm can come of attempts to prolong white supremacy in Asia, and that not only Europe, but America also, will have to learn to regard Asiatics as equals. This country might do something to reassure Oriental nations in this respect by amending the unjustifiable immigration laws which restrict the Indian and Chinese quotas to 100 annually and inhospitably prohibit Oriental immigrants bringing their wives and children with them.

Why Not a Free India Now?

SIR: Will you permit me to say through your columns that the present moment, instead of being the worst possible time for the Indians to shift to self-government, may well be the best possible time? With an enemy just outside their gates to help them forget their differences, and with their self-respect and ingenuity quickened by their new sense of freedom, they ought not only to fight valiantly in defense of what would be their own, but make new discoveries in the difficult business of living together. The American colonies might have wrangled decades away to no end over some such matter as slavery had they not first been obliged to consider self-government with a hostile army present to initiate them in forgetting differences.

In any event it does not necessarily follow that the Indians would be unable to wage war just because they were busy with the first steps of self-government. The Chinese, right before our eyes, have been performing very much the same double feat that we say is impossible for the Indians. We said the same thing about the Chinese before they had a chance to disprove our words.

With the enemy in their country, Chiang Kai-shek and the Communists have composed numerous differences, many of the twenty-eight provinces have adopted government by democratic election, the people, through the development of countless co-operatives, have stepped up production, and they have performed miracles of educational and governmental service—all at the very time they were waging war against a powerful enemy whose home base is only a matter of hundreds of miles off shore. In the whole of the New Life movement they have risen to such heights of patience and sacrifice and daring that China may well be the moral leader of the world by the time the war is over—if she is not already.

We wish to win the war. If the Indians were spontaneously on the march as the Chinese are, the end of the Oriental half of the struggle might well be in sight. But India is not marching with any of the Chinese spirit, and nobody expects her to do so when she is not marching openly as herself. How, then, can immediate self-government—perhaps with a provisional government most nearly representative of conflicting interests, that would be reconsidered after the war—bring to the United Nations any disaster that they do not already face with India disgruntled?

If the Axis wins the war, England will be out of India. If the United Nations win the war—on the platform of freedom for peoples—a morally sensitive China right at hand will inevitably support India, and England will be out in that case, too. And no proposed board of arbitration of United Nations would dare in self-respect to report for anything except freedom for India. So why does Britain not win the gratitude of the Indians—and all the rest of us—by helping the people take the step at this tardy yet auspicious moment? Can Britain in the present nervous state of affairs do anything in defending the Indians as ruler that she might not do as a friend pledged to withdraw as soon as the war is won?

Apr 30

Of course nobody can prove in advance that the details of Indian conduct will be thus and so. But Indians are, after all, human beings. And we do know how human beings in general respond to a frank and generous recognition of what is best in them. And we know that the peoples of India possess manpower, and much intelligence, and steel, and cotton, and many another war necessity. If Japan moves upon India in the present situation, the Indians will in fact be driven to choose between Japan and England; and a percentage of disgruntled people will always try any new thing. But with the same resources, and with the choice between Japan and themselves, as India, there would be a different response—unless the people of India are unlike all other peoples on the earth. So why is the moment not opportune for their freedom?

GANDHI, CHAMPION OF HINDU RIGHTS, HAS BEEN THORN IN BRITISH SIDE

SEP 3 1942

Spent Most of his Life in Non-Violent Fight to Improve Conditions Among the Indians

India, spawning ground of religions and of mystical movements, has come to a grave crisis and the prime mover in that crisis is Mohandas K. Gandhi, a frail ascetic who has spent most of his adult life in a non-violent struggle to improve the lot of Indians, as he sees it.

56b

Here are some highlights of the career of the strange little man:

1869—Hohandas Karamchand Gandhi born October 2 at Porbander, near industrial city of Ahmadabad.

SEP 3 1942

1882—Married at age of 13 to another 13-year-old who became mother of four, before Gandhi and she agreed on "brother-sister" relationship.

1887—Went to England, studied law at University of London.

1893—Went to Natal, South Africa, as attorney in law suit, found Boers treating Hindu settlers like native Negroes and started movement for Hindu suffrage.

Backed British In Boer War

1895-1914—Resided in South Africa after year at home, spending nearly two decades in championing Hindu cause, being imprisoned several times giving up lucrative law practice to further the movement; espoused British cause in Boer war, heading Red Cross unit. Later organized hospital in Johannesburg to fight plague and once led stretcher company with troops suppressing native revolt in Natal.

1914—Led his first passive resistance campaign in South Africa and made a settlement with General Smuts.

1915—Returned to India, shared leadership of Nationalist movement with C. R. Das; advocated pacifism during World War and organized ambulance corps for British army; won two war medals.

1917—As Gandhi's followers reach total of millions, British announces policy of making India eventually an "intergral part of the Empire."

Opened Disobedience Campaign

1918—Gandhi instituted "Satyagraha," literally "insistence on truth," or non-violent disobedience of laws considered unjust.

1919—Britain set up 10-year trial period of government by dual British-India control.

1920—Gandhi started passive resistance campaign, including boycotts of government service, legislature, courts and foreign goods, surrender of all public offices and withdrawal of children from government schools. British imposed stringent political regulations following riots.

SEP 3 1942

1922—Sentenced to six years in prison on charges of conspiring to spread disaffection with a view to overthrowing the government.

1924—Released from prison following appendectomy.

1925—Announced intention of retiring from the world for a year.

1930—Gandhi began with an attack on the salt tax, a levy which touched every household, by drawing a small amount of illegal salt from sea water. He was arrested in May after the campaign began spreading with rioting as a consequence.

1930-1934—This was the period of two round-table conferences in London, at which India's dominion status was pledged by the British, the period of Gandhi's renewed civil disobedience program, his fasting "unto death," and his continued fight to abolish the Hindu caste system. Some of the time he spent in jail.

1937—Frail health drove him into seclusion in a mud hut 200 miles north of Bombay. He tried to renounce the title of Mahatma (Great Soul) and on his 68th birthday started a 3-year campaign for prohibition.

Attacked Nazi Persecution

1939—Went on his sixth hunger strike in March, in protest against administration in Rajkot state. Fast lasted four days. In this period Gandhi demanded independence as the price of India participation in the war.

1940—Leads Congress as it meets on question of Indian independence; Britain promises "free and equal partnership" in return for war effort, but Gandhi is unimpressed.

1941—New civil disobedience program in progress.

1942—Gandhi, having quit again as leader of Congress party, says civil disobedience is off for the duration; meets China's Chiang Kai-shek; Britain offers full dominion status after the war, with right to secede; proposal rejected, with Gandhi influence against it a big factor; Gandhi named to head new civil disobedience campaign; he and other leaders placed under arrest; rioting starts.—A.P.

As An Indian Sees It

British and Indian Princes Exploit Natives

OCT 31 1942

By KUMAR GOSHAL

THE British Government tirelessly reiterates that it is difficult, if not impossible, to have a democratic solution of the Indian problem. One of the reasons given for this is the existence of numerous Indian states ruled by Native Princes. In a recent broadcast Lord Halifax, once Viceroy of India, said, "The independence of the princes is enshrined in solemn treaties between them and their King-Emperor . . . To scrap these treaties unilaterally would be to scrap one of the principles for which we went to war with Germany."

MR. GOSHAL

RESISTED FEUDAL RULE

This fine solicitude shown for the Native Princes is of comparatively recent origin and stems from motives neither ethical nor humanitarian. In the first half of the nineteenth century the British followed a policy of continuous conquest of the decaying Native States under any and every pretext. But the revolt of 1857, popularly and wrongly known as the Sepoy Mutiny, threw a scare into them. The revolt was an attempt on the part of some of the Native Princes to turn back the tide of foreign domination. It failed because the vast majority of the Indian people were by that time fed up with feudal rule of the princes, and refused to support it.

BUT the British Government realized that "All India is at times looking for our downfall," as Lord Metcalfe, once Governor-General of India, wrote. They remembered that Sir John Malcolm had said that if all India were divided into British Districts the Empire would not last 50 years; but that a sufficient number of Native States, without political power, supported by the naval supremacy of Britain, would ensure an indefinite life for the Empire.

REBELLION WOULD BE DIFFICULT

OCT 31 1942

So from 1858 on the British government signed treatty after treaty with the remaining Indian rulers, and even elevated some of the petty landowners to the rank of princes. These treaties guaranteed each prince protection "against rebellion or insurrection . . against attempts to eliminate him and substitute another form of government."

56b

THUS today there are 562 Native State scattered all over India, "a vast network of friendly fortresses in debatable territory," as Rushbrook Williams has said. In the middle of the nineteenth century the Indian people were outgrowing the feudal period; without interference from outside, they would have eliminated these princes in the natural course of historical evolution. The British Government preserved them from oblivion solely for the maintenance of British rule. As late as 1930 Professor Rushbrook Williams stated: "It would be difficult for a general rebellion against the British to sweep India because of this network of powerful loyal Native States."

PEOPLE EXPLOITED

The 93,000,000 people living in the territories of these princes are no different in linguistic or in cultural and social heritage than the rest of the Indian people. Their condition, under the autocratic rule of the princes, is worse even than that of the people under direct British rule. The outside world learns very little about these miserable people, illiterate, incredibly poor, disease-ridden and overburdened with heavy taxes arbitrarily imposed. Guaranteed against internal rebellion by the power of the British Raj, these princes exploit their people mercilessly.

THE British Government has spared no pains to keep these people in the most backward condition imaginable. On June 25, 1891, they passed a law stating that "No newspaper or other printed work . . containing public news or comments on public news, shall without the written permission . . of the Political Agent (British) be edited, printed or published after August 1, 1891."

MAHARANA ABDICATES

But all is not serene in these Native States. The people of these territories are awake, and they have organized a powerful democratic movement of their own known as the States Peoples' Conference, working in close cooperation with the Indian National Congress. (The Congress is illegal in the Native States). In 1939 the conference declared: "With the hard-earned money of the poverty-stricken and miserable people, enjoyment is bought and luxury is flaunted by their Rulers in foreign countries and in India. This system cannot continue. No civilized people can tolerate it. The whole argument of history is aaginst it; the temper of the Indian people cannot submit to it." The people of the States have gone on record for the establishment of a united India under a democratic government of their own choosing.

OCT 31 1942

I WRITE these lines because I seem to notice a trend. The Indian princes are said to be looking longingly to the United States.

Chicago, Illinois

TOWARD PEACE IN INDIA.

Recent dispatches from India mention efforts to bring about a peaceable solution of the Indian question. Men of good will, it is said, are attempting to find a basis of agreement between the British [redacted] 18 1942 and the advocates of Indian independence, an [redacted]ment which will find support among all the various racial, religious, and social groups concerned.

Americans recognize, of course, that the first consideration in any such settlement must be assurances that India will not fall to the enemy and that our military position will in no wise be jeopardized. Americans will hope that these conditions can be met. If they can, our own political experience may prove helpful in suggesting the means by which an orderly transition to the new governmental régime can be achieved.

When the United States contemplates giving a new political status to people who have been connected with it in less than full citizenship stature these people are invited to prepare a constitution and submit their form of government. If it is approved, the new people are admitted to full membership in the Union. In that fashion we have converted territories into states. Of late years, when people associated with the American form of government have been regarded as more entitled to complete independence and better fitted for that than for membership in the Union, steps have been taken to give them their liberty.

In the unavailing efforts of Great Britain and the All-India Congress party of India to find a ground where Indian aspirations and British needs could be reconciled it does not appear that the British proposed or emphasized this method of dealing with the emergency. Certainly it would have taken the responsibility of handling India's divergent religious, racial, and political elements off the shoulders of the British government and have placed it upon the Indian leaders who demand independence now.

Gandhi, Nehru, and the other members of the All-India Congress committee who have been arrested, with the consequence of rioting and disorders [redacted] the British and American lines facing th[redacted]anese, [redacted]e allowed at least one point in their insistence upon action now and not after the war. They could say to the British negotiators that now the Congress leaders have some trading power. They ask for something and they offer to give something in return for it. After the war they will have nothing to offer. If they do not insist now upon the satisfaction of their national ambitions, after the war they will have promises in their hands, but they will have no bargaining ability. A horse trader needs, first of all, a horse.

The British realize that the Indian question presents one of its greatest difficulties in the United States. We are thought not to understand all the problems presented by caste, untouchability, heredity, degradation, princely houses, fierce religious antagonisms, and all the other elements which fragment the country. Without a pretense of extravagant virtue and without being silenced by mock modesty, we can say that the American republic has been exporting revolution and ideas of self-government and independence to the world from the moment of its birth.

The average American took the ideas which philosophers had cultivated in a vacuum for centuries and made them flesh and blood. These ideas have stepped from island to island, and from continent to continent until now in what were the remote parts of the world when the Declaration was issued the principles are vibrant with life and are inspiring peoples who were supposed to be at once indifferent to them and incapable of using them. This is the most successful export of revolution and independence in the history of man, and it as much as anything is responsible for the new epoch upon which we are entering and which we may but dimly perceive at the time.

As Americans we do not believe that the results will be unfortunate and we cannot concede that there will be many self-imposed restrictions upon it. We're not taking snap judgment on the [redacted] situation, bad as it seems to be and as [redacted] as it encourages our powerful enemies. It is, however, to be considered that a proposal inviting the Indian factions immediately to submit a form of government which they think would be accepted by India itself, which would solve its problems and produce stability instead of a civil war and chaos, would place responsibility where it ultimately must rest, and would relieve our British allies of the criticism that they are again promising something which they will not be able to grant.

India Council Aroused By Amery Report

NOV 2 - 1942

Reference to Absence of Rioting Believed To Have Provoked Attacks

By HARRY A. STANDISH.
For North American Newspaper Alliance.

266

NEW DELHI, —(By Wireless)—India Secretary Leopold S. Amery, whose statements always are subject to severe scrutiny throughout India, has again succeeded in stirring up a wave of indignation here. At the beginning of the present disturbances, Amery's cocksure reference to the absence of rioting in Calcutta is believed by many authorities here directly to have provoked the violent riots which broke out there the next day.

This time the India secretary has even stepped on the corns of the viceroy's executive council. I understand that six members of the council have sent a telegram of protest to the viceroy. The point of annoyance is Amery's recent house of commons statement, "I am not prepared in the present circumstances to permit interviews with congress leaders."

Question Raised.

This statement raises a constitutional question because Indian leaders maintain that Amery, as secretary of state for India, has no power to ban interviews. This can be done only by the viceroy after consultation with his executive council, it was said here. Members of the council always have strongly resented any implication that they were rubber stamps operated from Whitehall through the viceroy and it is claimed that Amery's statement provides strong ammunition for critics who claim that Indians should refuse to hold office under the present system of government.

NOV 2 - 1942

The council members claim they have, in fact, real authority to make or implement decisions in their departments and genuine combined influence in matters of broad policy. Therefore, another point of irritation here is Lord Simon's statement in the house of lords describing members of the council as "advisers." In India, an "adviser" is a civil servant acting as a counsellor of the governors of the various provinces.

Meanwhile, M. K. Gandhi, who is still held incommunicado in the Aga Khan's palace at Poona, is worshopped almost as a god by hundreds of thousands of people in the Gujaret area of which the textile city of Ahmedabad is the center. Gandhi lived and worked in this area for nearly 20 years, seeking out untouchables in the village industries and helping low-caste spinners to organize trade unions, thus raising their living standards.

NOV 2 - 1942

Saint to Millions.

In Gujarat, Gandhi, who is a saint to millions of Indians, is worshipped as little short of a deity. Pictures and even images of this meager, loin-clothed figure are to be seen in thousands of homes of mill workers alongside those of the Hindu gods with which Gandhi shares the daily ceremonial family worship.

During the recent Gandhi week, which coincided with the Mahatma's birthday, almost every street in Ahmedabad had a rough shelter symbolic of Gandhi's simple hut. The shrines contained big pictures of Gandhi raised on an altar and draped with spotless handwoven cloth. Each day worshippers garlanded these pictures with flowers and school boys and girls placed offerings of fruit and goat milk before them.

NOV 2 - 1942

Officially Congress party leaders in the past have tried to discourage any popular move to deify Gandhi, but in Ahmedabad recently local Congress officials have appeared to be actively fostering the tendency to worship the Mahatma's image as a part of their independence campaign.

NEW INDIAN TALKS ASKED BY STUDENTS

SEP 6 1942

World Assembly Also Calls for a Second Front 'in the Shortest Possible Time'

AND FUTURE SAFEGUARDS

Leaders of Britain, China, Cuba and Greece Plead for Unity in the War and Later

SEP 6 1942

By WINIFRED MALLON
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5—The International Student Assembly adopted at its final session today a declaration of principles calling for immediate resumption of British-Indian negotiations designed to free India and enlist its people in the all-out war effort of the United Nations against Axis powers, and calling, as well, for the opening "in the shortest possible time" of a Second Front in Europe, and for the post-war development of an international organization of all peoples with power enough to enforce its decisions and assure peace and plenty for all.

56

The delegates, nearly 400 in number and representing more than fifty countries, were guests at a White House garden party given for them this afternoon by Mrs. Roosevelt, and tonight they were addressed at the closing mass-meeting session by officials of China, Cuba, Greece and Great Britain, all of whom urged on the students the importance of united action for victory and for the establishment of a better world order, failing which, they said, the war would have been fought in vain.

SEP 6 1942

Pleas for Collective Security

Speaking for the Latin countries of the Western Hemisphere, Dr. Aurelio F. Concheso, Ambassador of Cuba, hailed the assembly "as an act of positive affirmation effectively contributing to the strengthening through ties of solidarity the ideals and objectives which unite all the countries now at war against the Axis."

Dr. Hu Shih, retiring Ambassador of China, and A. Michalopoulos, Greek Minister of Information, warned the students that peace must not only be won but must be enforced, and urged as the first duty of their generation, called to fight for the freedom which was won only to be lost again by the victors of the first World War, the establishment of an effective system of collective security.

"My generation wasted twenty years without ever working out a procedure and a machinery for making the world safe for democracy and for humanity," Dr. Hu Shih said. "That old international order was good enough for the peace-loving and law-abiding countries. But it was not good enough for determined aggressors.

"We must rid ourselves of the prejudice that force is something inherently evil and to be avoided in any idealistic scheme of world reconstruction. We must learn to think with Pascall, the French philosopher, that justice without force is impotent. And we must learn that the old idea of balance of power will never work again and must be replaced by a new concept of overwhelming power behind law and order."

Fight on Aggressors Pledged

Mr. Michalopoulos, speaking for the countries of Europe under enemy occupation, told the assembly that they would "fight on to the end until victory comes, as it surely will," with the hope and trust that, having done their duty by themselves and democracy, "democracy will not fail to do its duty by us, now and after the war."

Harold Butler, British Minister to the United States and Director General of the British Information Service, told the delegates that they had it in their power "to fashion the kind of future which some of us older ones worked for in vain after the last war."

"But you will not achieve it, if you are only bound together by the ties of self-interest, by the prospect of profitable trade, by the hope of material advantages," he said.

"The only living bond on which nations can be permanently united is a common faith in justice for all and a common resolution to fight against injustice wherever it be found. That means looking realities in the face, not pretending that things are just or not very unjust when in fact they are utterly vile and abominable. Those who believe in freedom must accept all its obligations.

"Do not be afraid of dreaming dreams. The idea of liberty itself began as a dream, an apparently impossible dream. It only became a fact through the ceaseless and undaunted efforts of men, who worked and fought for years and for generations for the faith that was in them. If you can translate the ideal of the United Nations into a permanent reality, then from the blood and suffering and sacrifices of this great ordeal will rise a better world than any of us have even known."

A major task in the accomplishment of the desired ends was "to promote self-government among those who have never enjoyed it," Mr. Butler said, adding that "British policy has steadily pursued that aim for thirty years and more."

The promise given India of full independence, "as soon as Indians themselves could frame an agreed constitution," would be carried out "when the war is over," Mr. Butler added, stating that the difficulties involved were enormous and would require time and statesmanship.

"It cannot be done with the Japanese at the gate," he said. "But when peace returns, the Indian people will have the fullest opportunity to work out their own salvation with the complete goodwill of the British peoples."

This pledge came after an agreement had been reached today on the question of Indian freedom between the British and Indian delegations to the Assembly. This agreement was embodied in the declaration finally drafted for the Assembly.

This agreement, which replaced an earlier assertion of the belief of the delegates that "India must be granted immediate independence," was as follows:

"On the basis of a national coalition government in India, we urge that negotiations be reopened at once between Great Britain and the Indian people toward the granting of political freedom, so as to mobilize the Indian people for an all-out war effort alongside of the United Nations."

It was signed by S. Chandrasekhar, leader of the Indian Student Delegation, and the Rev. Alan Booth of the British delegation, with the approval of the other three members, Wing Commander Scott Malden, Captain James Cochran and Sub-Lieutenant Richard Miles.

The Slavic delegates, who yesterday adopted a resolution calling for the opening immediately of a second front in Europe, accepted today the milder declaration of the assembly's "credo," favoring such action "in the shortest possible time," on the understanding that their own stronger resolution would be included in the "minutes" permanently recording the procedures of the four-day sessions.

Paul Robeson will address a Freedom for India rally tonight at the Manhattan Center. In a statement issued yesterday by the Council of African Affairs he said:

"The people of the world recognize the urgent necessity of immediately granting freedom to the Indian people, that they may take their proper place in the united struggle against Fascism."

CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek gave Negro America something about which to think in his words to the Eleventh Forum of the New York Herald-Tribune. This forum which was dedicated to the theme "Our fight for survival in a free world," performed a worthy educational role.

"China," said the Chinese leader, "not only fights for her own independence, but also for the liberation of every oppressed nation. For us the Atlantic Charter and President Roosevelt's proclamation of the four freedoms for all peoples are cornerstones of our fighting faith."

12/5/42

It would be well if Negro leaders in America took these words to heart. This struggle for the liberation of all oppressed is the tie that binds the oppressed of the world. Their indissoluble unity is the only guarantee of their freedom.

12/5/42

China's leader added another gem to this when he said, "There will be neither peace nor hope, nor future for any of us unless we honestly aim at political, social and economic justice for all the world, great and small." Mr. Chiang called for an immediate start in this direction. We echo that lofty thought.

Negro America is not so foolish as to believe that all its ills will immediately be cured. But a great measure of political democracy is coming out of this war for all who fight against the evil that is Hitler. And out of this political democracy in the very process of the war must come a correspondingly great advance of economic and cultural democracy.

12/5/42

It must be fought for. This fight can only be won if Negro America "not only fights for her own independence (equality of opportunity in our case) but also for the liberation of every oppressed nation." For that we need unity in our own ranks.

The Real Case Against Gandhi

Courier - Journal)

N.Y., N.Y.

Sir Stafford Cripps' interview with DeWitt Mackenzie, published in yesterday's Louisville Times, emphasizes the major danger involved in any immediate transfer of responsibility for India's government to the Gandhi-dominated Congress Party.

Gandhi's obsession with the principle of non-violence, Sir Stafford told Mr. Mackenzie, makes it "impossible for his followers to participate in any government no matter what its nature, which wages war." The demand, therefore, that government be given immediately to the Congress Party is a demand that people with a fanatical objection to waging war should have control of the destiny of one of the focal points of the war.

OCT 24 1942

To even a casual student of Gandhi's career, the validity of such an objection must be obvious. Gandhi has said that he would tolerate the presence of Allied troops in India, but nothing more. The wave of popular support for the war effort which enthusiasts see as the first result of a sweeping British withdrawal from India would be smothered by the Hindu disapproval of violence and by Gandhi's unshakeable conviction that he can convert such people as Hirohito and Hitler to non-violence by the simple power of persuasion.

Louisville, Ky.

It is fashionable to pooh-pooh such statements and to insist that if India were responsible for her own destiny, the result would be enthusiastic support for the Allied war effort—support which, it is implied, Gandhi himself would benevolently countenance. Nothing seems farther from the truth about Gandhi. It should be remembered that during the very rape of Poland he recommended non-violence to the Poles. In 1939 just before the war began, he addressed to Hitler a letter of astonishingly naive argument in which he pointed out the victories which could be gained by non-violence. He announced last summer that one of his first acts, should the demand of the Congress Party for unconditional self-government be granted, would be to try to call personally upon the Japanese and German leaders in order to debate with them on the futility of war.

OCT 24 1942

Add to these evidences of Gandhi's own rigidity on the subject of war, the fact that he is, as Sir Stafford Cripps agreed, the greatest single influence upon the Congress Party, and probably upon all India, today. When Louis Fischer asked this powerful figure whether the policies of self-government he envisioned were not likely to result in chaos, Gandhi blandly answered that they very well might. Theoretically it is probably true that a nation has the right to invoke its own chaos if by that means it achieves growth and self-sufficiency. But there can be few of us whose futures as still-free members of the United Nations are at stake who could feel that the granting of such a right to India at this stage in the war's progress would not endanger the lives and futures of far more millions than even India holds.

N.Y., N.Y. OCT 24 1942

London, Oct. 23 (AP)—A German radiocast, unconfirmed by any British or Indian source, said today that Mrs. Gandhi, wife of India's imprisoned nationalist leader, had died. (She had been reported ill earlier this week.)

Mrs. Gandhi was not arrested when her husband was taken into custody and placed incommunicado in the home of the Agha Khan at Poona, India, last August 9 following the start of the nationalist leader's latest non-violence campaign against British rule. The Gandhis were married when both were 13.

India Justified In Freedom Fight, Readers Declare

OCT 10 1942

OCT 10 1942

Despite the fact that nothing more than an ominous silence penetrated through the tight censorship from far off India, the American Negro was most articulate this week when he responded with a loud "yes" to the Pittsburgh Courier's Bureau of Public Sentiment query: "Do You Believe That India Should Continue to Contend for Her Rights and Her Liberty Now?"

This question, the third in a series of scientific studies on how colored America thinks on pertinent national and international subjects, yielded the most far-reaching response yet enumerated by the Bureau.

OCT 10 1942

VARIED GROUPS ANSWERED QUERY

The Negro population, answering in the affirmative 87.8 per cent of the time, was thoroughly sampled. In accordance with their representation in the population, the question was put to housewives, farmers, defense workers, educators, soldiers, businessmen, domestics, clerical workers and other segments of diversified Negro America.

Overwhelmingly, from the north and from the south, from male and from female, the sincere belief was the same . . India is justified in her contention for freedom—NOW!

So enthused were the people when they were approached on the Indian controversy and so vitally interested in a matter which they considered an important part of the total United Nations war effort . . It became possible for the Bureau to analyze the reasoning behind this flood of sympathy for Indian independence. It boiled down to this: Negroes believe that freedom for India now would revitalize the millions of colored inhabitants on the side of the United Natons and give conclusive proof that this war is being fought for world freedom.

The question:

"DO YOU BELIEVE THAT INDIA SHOULD CONTEND FOR HER RIGHTS AND HER LIBERTY NOW?"

Over 10,000 American Negroes answered.

87.8% SAID YES
10.7% SAID NO
1.5% HAD NO OPINION

Southern Negroes joined with their Northern brothers in full approval of the Indian struggle for self rule. The North was more postive by the small margin of 1.6%.

The South said:

YES 87.4% OF THE TIME
NO 12.6% OF THE TIME

For the North:

Yes 89%
NO 11%

Very little difference of opinion was noticed in the thinking of men and women. Result: Males said "yes" 88.2% of the time and the women answered likewise 87.5% of the time.

In the 10.7% negative answers, the minority opinion can be summarized thusly: "Independence now would hurt the war effort." "We cannot afford to embarrass England now." 'Indian leaders cannot control their own people." "India is not educationally developed."

Next week: DO YOU BELIEVE THAT A "MARCH ON WASHINGTON" WITH CONGRESS IN SESSION WOULD ACCOMPLISH ANY MATERIAL GOOD?

NEGROES BOOST U.S. IN INDIA

By A. T. STEELE
Chicago Daily News Foreign Service

SOMEWHERE IN INDIA. — There are no stauncher Americans anywhere than the Negroes of the American Army engineering unit stationed at the eastern India base. Nor could there be any better advertisement for the United States in this land of dark-skinned people than the presence of these well-fed, well-paid well-equipped American Negroes.

Most Indians and many Englishmen are surprised to learn that the Negroes receive the same pay and the same treatment as their white colleagues.

"Are you colonial troops?" one of the Negro boys was asked by an innocent questioner.

"Colonials,——Heck, No!"

"Hell, No," was the reply. "We are Americans. And don't you forget it."

A lot of fuss is being made over the Negro unit. Their talents for music, for dancing and for athletics put them in heavy demand. The other night a quartet composed of Corporal Dansby and Pvt. Hartford Reeves of Alabama, Pvt. James Lee of Navasota, Tex., and Pvt. John Jones of Monroe, La., put on a program of Negro spirituals over a big Indian broadcasting station. The station manager could scarely believe his eyes when he received a flood of mail from Indian listeners.

"I cannot understand it," he said. "Nobody ever writes fan letters in this country."

Jitterbug Bites Indians

Jitterbugging was an unknown art in this city before the Negro arrived. Now, wherever the colored lads go they infect the English and Anglo-Indians with the jitterbug cirus.

Pvt. Willie Walker of Georgetown, S. C., is the recognized champ. He went over to an Anglo-Indians hospital recently for a minor ailment. Before he left he was giving lessons in jutterbugging to fellow patients, nurses and even dotcors. Big, bashful and black as ebony, Willie sees a big field in India for the jitterbug art.

"They eat it up," was his commentary.

Most of the Negro troops are from the Deep South, chiefly Texas, Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina. But there are a few like Lorenzo Powell of Chicago and Farnk Smith of Chicago, who have northern addresses. Over a bottle of lemonade at a loacl hotel — none of the hotels here have a color bar — Powell, Smith and a Beaumont, Texas boy Robert Cauley, regaled me with stories of their experiences. They had just won a softball contest from an Indian police team to whom they had taught the game.

Time Out for Tea

"You know what? Those Indians called an intermission after the seventh inning not to stretch, mind you, but to have afternoon tea. They stuffed us full of tea and cookies we could scarcely waddle through the rest of the game."

Morris Hegman, former Memphis, Tenn., boxer, is another Negro who has made quite a reputation for himself here. He spends a lot of his spare time giving pugilistic points to Indians and Anglo-Indians who are keen about boxing.

The Negro detachment's main job at present is supervising the loading and unloading of vital freight but they are subject to call for any kind of engineering work. They also do their daily stint of rifle drill—just in cast. They have white officers and Negro non-coms Capt. John oMyers of New York, their commanding officer, said that more than 70 per cent of his unit were better off economically today than they were in peacetime occupations. The majority have been farmers, laborers, bellboys and railway workers. Negro First Sergt. Lewis Seawood of Wilson, Ark., told me that he had salted away $3000 since he had been in the Army and sent an equal amount home. Not bad for a boy just out of high school.

Troops Religious, Patriotic

The Negro troops are much more religiously inclined than their white ocleagues. Some of them go to chapel not once but several time weekly. The Bible is their favorite reading matter. They are fond of church socials but likely as not follow them up with an unroarious jam session at some local cafe. Their home ties are very strong and there is only one country in the world for most of them — the United States.

"I guess the most thing we want," remarked Sergeant Seawood mournfully, "is letters from home."

The Indians have heard exaggerated stories about the American Negro problem and about the oppressed conditions under which American Negroes are supposed to of them to find the American Negro troops so intensely patriotic and so well taken care of. In the street the Negroes tower over the Indians like giants. They are not much interested in Indian politics though they enjoy the company of Indians and Anglo-Indians.

Considering the difference between American and Indian pay scales, the Negro private is rich enough to hire Indians to polish his shoes, clean his gun and do his work — if so minded. But Army regulations will not allow it and the Negro have better uses for their money. Besides the boys are no shirkers. They are throwing themselves just as hard into the job of winning this war as their white compatriots.

Will Cut Off Labor Supply From Employers Discriminating Over Race, Color

P.M. Daily

56d

Special Correspondence

OTTAWA, Nov. 17.—Canadian employers have been ordered by the National Selective Service to refrain from discriminating against employes, or potential employes, on account of race, color or creed, under penalty of having their supply of labor cut off entirely.

No permits will be issued to workers to seek employment at any plant where such discrimination is continued, National Selective Service has ordered. No person in Canada is permitted to seek employment without permit, nor any employer to hire a person without permit.

No advertisement asking for help is permitted to contain any expression such as "gentile preferred" or "protestants only," or any phrase which indicates an employer's intention of discriminating against any class of person.

Questions Banned

Regional offices of the National Selective Service have been instructed to refrain from using any form of questionnaire which contains any question or indication of applicant's race, creed or color.

The order further says:

"No official of Selective Service shall do anything to encourage or facilitate any such discrimination, that is, no such official shall make any remark to, or ask any question of any applicant or employer that could be interpreted as condoning or suggesting discrimination in employment against any class of person and no official, in selecting applicants for referral, shall take into consideration any factor other than the applicant's ability to fill the vacancy."

Special provisions are made in cases of war plants where the employment of certain categories of aliens is prohibited and in such cases, for example, where a Catholic family desires to employ a nurse of the same religion, or a Jewish family wishes to employ a Gentile for the performance of such things as may be prohibited to it on Sabbaths or Holy Days.

Finally, National Selective Service says:

"If it comes to the attention of a National Selective Service officer that any employer is unreasonably refusing to engage otherwise qualified persons referred to him by the office principally on the grounds which are discriminatory within the meaning of these instructions, the National Selective Service officer shall notify such employer that, in view of the evidence of discrimination, he is required to refer the matter to the head office, at Ottawa, and that the result may be directions to grant no more permits until such time as it is satisfactorily established that such discrimination has stopped."

The edict is understood to have been issued as a result of disclosures of widespread discrimination throughout Canada, but more particularly in the Montreal and Toronto areas.

Negro Named President Of Oxford Union; First Naval Officer Appointed

Colored People Fill Important Positions; Race Does Not Hinder Success of Those With Ability

Nov. 20/1942

LONDON.—(ANP) — The recent election of Cameron Tudor, West Indian Negro student, as president of the Oxford University union is an event of outstanding significance.

It shows first and foremost that people in Britain are not deterred by any considerations of color from recognizing the outstanding merits of colored people in their midst.

Mr. Tudor received on his election over 400 telegrams of congratulation from all over Britain. The vice chancellor of the university, Sir David Ross, honored him with an informal luncheon.

Mr. Tudor's election would not have been complete if the Nazis had not contributed to his success. This is what they said:

> "A Negro was elected President of the Oxford Union society, according to the London press. London papers stress the fact that this is the first time a Negro has been elected to this post. The Oxford union has always played an important part in English political life and was considered to be the social antechamber of the English parliamentary system. Formerly, members of well known English families occupied the post, Several presidents later became ministers of the crown. In the England of today, a Negro is at the head of this institution."

Colored people with qualifications to fill important positions are steadily being appointed in Britain. Thomas Fowell Boston, L.D.S., R.C.S. qualified recently at the Edinburgh Dental hospital and has just been appointed dental officer to the county borough of Newport, Isle of Wight.

Mr. Boston will be working under the authority of the medical officer of health, Dr. Fairley. His appointment is a responsible one. The dental care of the district's school children will be entirely under his supervision. In addition, his duties extend to various council hospitals.

Thomas Boston was born in Sierra Leona. He is the younger son of the popular Sierra Leone barrister, J. Fewell Boston, who is known as the father of the criminal bar in West Africa. Mr. Boston, senior, is also the proprietor of the Sierra Leone "Daily Guardian."

Thomas Boston is a versatile young man, who has musical and athletic talents. He played football and tennis with distinction in Edinburgh during his student days. After he qualified, he was appointed demonstrator in his hospital for several months.

First Uganda Surgeon

Dr. Albert Kagwa, M.R.C.S., L. R.C.P., is the first of his race from Uganda to obtain a British medical qualification. Dr. Kagwa received his education at St. Dunstan's school, Catford, London, and at the London Hospital Medical college; he was the first African to enter the college.

He had a distinguished athletic career as a quarter-mile sprinter both for the United Hospitals club and for the University of London. He played rugby for the Hospital 1st XV, and other first class clubs.

At present Dr. Kagwa is a house surgeon at the London Hospital annex "somewhere in England." Dr. Kagwa's home is in the state of Buganda, in Uganda British East Africa.

His father, the late Sir Spolo Kagwa, K.C.M.G. (Honorable major-general in the Brtiish army) was at one time prime minister of Buganda, and was one of the most distinguished Negroes in the British empire. He was one of the regents appointed to the infant King Kabaka of Uganda in 1897. He spent all his energies in the service of his little master. He was a skillful leader in adjusting national life to the new day which had dawned.

Visited Britain for Coronation

At the coronation of Edward VII, Apolo Kafwa represented his country. King Edward received him at Buckingham palace, and he was present at the coronation in Westminister abbey.

After his return to Africa he was made a knight commander of St. Michael and St. George, one of the first Africans to receive the honor. He met and made friends with many famous men. Splendid physique. quiet dignity, and quick intelligence were among his outstanding attributes. His books on ancient customs, legends and religion are in all the great libraries of the United States and Europe.

He administered affairs with skill and judgment, and was prime minister of Uganda for 35 years. During the great war (1914-18) he and the Kabaka co-operated with British officials in the protection of the frontier between Uganda and German territory. Sir Apolo, who had welcomed the British to Uganda, was glad to see all the resources of his country used on the allies' behalf.

Naval Negro Officer

N. R. Junor from Jamaica has brilliantly concluded an extensive course in nautical training at the chief naval school in London. He has been gazotted sub lieutenant in the R.N.V.R., and is now serving on one of Britain's battleships. Mr. Junor thus becomes the first Negro to be appointed a ranking officer in Britain's navy.

The training for the Royal Air force is perhaps the most difficult of all the services. West Indians are proving themselves efficient to the highest degree in this branch of the fighting forces, and are receiving an appreciable number of promotions.

It is now a familiar sight in Britain to see colored RAF officers and sergeant pilots with wings heroically displayed on the left breast of their tunics. I recall with pleasure my visit to the West Indian committee in London, where I met Pilot Officer P. B. Nanton from Antigua. All these West Indian airmen are flying side by side with their fellow pilots of Britain.

Colonial Social Center

Another hostel and social center for colonial seamen was officially opened recently in the East End of London by the under secretary of state for the colonies, Harold McMillan. "Colonial house" is the name given to this new and modern hostel, the fifth of its kind in Britain for people of African descent. The others are in Liverpool, Newcastle, North Shields and Cardiff.

Mr. McMillan said: "I bring you greetings from Lord Cranborne, the colonial secretary, who is unable to attend on account of important duties of state imposed upon him." (Lord Cranborne was at the time in Gibraltar and Malta getting a first hand impression of conditions in those heroic and hard-pressed parts of the colonial empire.)

The under secretary pointed out that the hostel was financed and run by the colonial office and public subscriptions. "Colonial house is a symbol of international friendship and understanding, for it has already sheltered sailors of other nations and will continue to do so in the best of fellowship," said Mr. McMillan.

The warden, A. K. Lewis, B. A., from Sierra Leona, Freetown, Nigeria, is a member of Middle temple, one of the Inns of Court. He has worked with great ardor and self-sacrifice for the establishment of Colonial house, and has thus rendered his race a great service.

The welfare department of Britain's colonial office has appointed well-qualified Africans with distinctive gifts to manage the various hostels now established in Britain.

Christmas Message Calls for 'Total Peace,' Individual Freedoms— Hits Marxism, Civilian Bombings

By the United Press.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Pope Pius denounced Godless authoritarian government and "Marxist Socialism" today in a Christmas message to the world.

He condemned racial and national discrimination, deplored the bombing of civilians and called for a new world in which all men would have free choice of government and religion.

"We are tied impartially to all people and are willing to collaborate in any new order which will bring a just peace," he said in a 40-minute speech broadcast from Vatican City.

After the message he gave his "Urbi and Orbi" blessing to the world.

"Juridical order is necessary for total peace," the Pope said. "It is useless to fight without faith in God. Only through the co-operative efforts of various nations can peace be established in such a way that no further conflict will be possible in future.

'Feels Compassion.'

"Those who aim at peace must aim at the reintegration of lawful order, which is at present being altered by the positivism and utilitarianism of various political and social movements."

At the outset of his speech, after the College of Cardinals had delivered their Christmas greetings, the Pope said he felt compassion, according to the motto Miserio super turbam (I pity the people).

"It is for us a holy trust, inviolable and at all times valid," he said.

"It is our motto in the present situation of humanity as it was the motto of Jesus Christ. The church would belie herself were she not to seek to be a mother to every anxious and filial cry by all classes of humanity which reaches her ears."

Assails Prejudice.

DEC 24 1942

The Pope said that there had risen an era which excluded ethical conceptions and forgot God. He decried "legal positivism," which he said exaggerated the value of purely human laws and sought to establish supremacy of a particular nation, race or class.

Such positivist theories he said had in common "that they consider the state or its representatives as the absolute authority, exempt from any criticism, even if their acts are in violation of Christian and human laws."

"The church still condemns Marxist Socialism," he said.

(At Berne, Switzerland, this was received as: "The Church condemned and still condemns Communism and nationalism. These orders contrast with God," Berne said the Pope said.)

"Those who aim at building a new world must fight for the right of free choice of government and religious order," he continued. "They must refuse that the state should make of individuals a herd of whom the state disposes as if they were lifeless things.

"All barriers of prejudice must be smashed.

"We must not lament but reconstruct. The new war cry must be 'God will it,' like that of the crusaders.

"We will strive to establish a new social and moral order. We owe this vow to all those who lie buried under the fields of battle, to the widows and orphans. We owe it to the exiles swept from one country to another for no reason other than race or political opinion. We owe it to the thousands of civilian victims of air attacks, who have lost their lives and property."

He said that "international agreements made to regulate the conduct of war and also to limit war to actual combatants and safeguard the fate of prisoners have in many instances remained a dead letter."

For Material, Moral Health.

(Berne said that the Pope spoke in a firm voice.)

The Pope called for a better world based on the right of the individual to work and enjoy the fruits of labor, and to conserve the family in a state of material and moral health.

The Pope said his benediction and paternal encouragement went to all those who were willing to take part in "this new and human crusade" for a better world.

He protested against national or racial discrimination. He said that people are killed, or at least put into such conditions that they must finally perish, for no other reasons than those of race or nationality.

He appealed to mankind to humanize war, including the treatment of noncombatants and prisoners.

Regrets Bombing.

Especially, he expressed regret at aerial bombing of civilians.

"Those who aim at peace must aim at the reintegration of lawful order, which at present is being altered by positivism and utilitarianism of various political and social movements," he said.

The German Bishop of Fulda has profoundly deplored propaganda against Christianity, accord to a Vatican broadcast directed to Germany and quoted today by the British, CBS reported.

"Last night Vatican radio, in a broadcast to Germany, "gave a report of a sermon pronounced by Dr. Schmidt, the Bishop of Fulda in Germany. The German Bishop declared:

"'We deplore profoundly that there exists in Germany a propaganda directed against Christianity and against the principles of Christian life. We cannot approve the words spoken in favor of a Germanic world philosophy.

"'Have not 95 per cent of the people of this world affirmed, according to the latest figures, their loyalty to the Christian ideology?'"

JAMAICAN TECHNICIANS IN LIVERPOOL SETTLING DOWN TO ENGLISH LIFE AND CLIMATE

FEB 14 1942

Invent New Method to Double Output of Certain Types of Machines

HIGHLY PRAISED BY EMPLOYERS

By RUDOLPH DUNBAR

LONDON.—(ANP)—I recently paid an official visit to Liverpool for the purpose of interviewing the technicians who have come here from Jamaica to help in our war factories. There are some 200 of these men, e. g. welders, riveters, fitters, motor mechanics, etc. They had to go through a rigorous test in Jamaica before leaving for the United Kingdom to work in various war factories where they are now engaged successfully. I came in contact with most of them while in operation of their craft in the factories, and others at their hotel, West Indies house. When I disclosed to them the nature of my visit, they were happy and genuinely pleased to know that the authorities had taken such keen interest in their welfare.

The officials on the whole are extremely kind, courteous and considerate to all of the Jamaican technicians. This is noteworthy especially when you review the position and witness the trying ordeal which confronts the officials in carrying out their work satisfactorily. One cannot but feel great admiration for the infinite detail of accomplishment in Leary Constantine's work, He is tempered with gentleness; this together with his method of Caribbean psychology, has produced re- for the men at West Indies house. Added to this are mobile projectors which show the latest news reels. Plans are being made to furnish a five piece combination of West Indian musicians from London to provide dance music and entertainment to stimulate the vigorous element of young blood among the techni- markably fine work which has gained the admiration of all the Jamaicans. It will be remembered that Mr. Constantine, the famous West Indian cricketer, was appointed welfare officer in Liverpool a few months ago.

The employers have shown a general concern for the men's welfare as well. Having not been accustomed to the hustle and bustle of rush-hour periods in this country, one of the technicians resented this discomfort and remained behind always to catch a bus that afforded more comfort and ease. By this procedure he arrived frequently late for work. The man was reprimanded by his employer and when told the circumstances of the situation, the employer overcame the dificulty by purchasing a bicycle for the technician.

In all the various technical departments, it has been unanimously agreed upon that the Jamaican technicians are highly competent workmen. When they are assigned to do a job of work, it is executed with meticulous accuracy and amazing speed.

I visited a tank factory where four of the technicians were happily working admist the deafening orchestration of machines and the rhythmic staccato of the lathe. They were Cecil Constantine Higgins, Arthur Frankson and Ernest Tang of the who worked in a sugar estate as a fitter. They were very satisfied with conditions in general and had no complaints to make except about the climate. I spoke to the manager who conducted me around the factory and to these men he generously paid a high tribute. A large group of these men are engaged in a royal ordnance factory somewhere in England. Here in this factory, it is said that the Jamaican technicians possess indispensable qualities. One of the technicians, Bertram McGeachy, with his intuitive sense of mechanism invented a method which was approved by his manager to double the output machines. This method is now working successfully.

A large number of the technicians are motor mechanics and are engaged in the Bootle corporation repairing civil defense vehicles. It is said by an official that they are efficient to the highest degree in this department. And they are fully cognisant in all the intricacious of motor mechanism.

When the Jamaican technicians arrived in England it was quite clear to the officials that a sort of social centre would be needed. The ministry of labor therefore took over a building which was converted so as to provide sleeping accommodations for 40 West Indian technicians, and club facilities for all the technicians. The majority have found suitable billets in private houses and are very comfortable. This guilding has been named West Indies house and is operated for the ministry of labor and national service by the YMCA. I note with satisfaction that the building satisfies every reasonable requirement. It is comfortably heated and this has been the subject of considerable comment among the men.

The food at West Indies house is very good and is prepared by an English cook. But the boys do not enjoy English cooking with an evident relish after having been for so many years accustomed to their peas and rice, fried fish, dumplings and various other West Indian dishes. The authorities are making arrangements for a West Indian cook to prepare the favorite dishes of the Jamaican technicians. About two hours after dinner is served at West Indies house, tea, coffee and cakes of a decidedly good quality are served in the lounge at reasonable cost.

There are regular cinema shows cians. Everything possible is being done by the authorities to make the men happy and comfortable.

The physical condition of the men is good in spite of the rationing of essential foods, and the comparative absence of fruit, especially bananas and oranges which are so plentiful in Jamaica. There is absolutely no doubt the men are perplexed at the gloom of winter and the freakish English climate which confront them with distinct advantages. One man expressed a great deal of surprise to see the sun shining so brightly while it is still bitterly cold. Says another: "I don't understand the foolishness of the weather in this country! One minute the sun is out, and the next minute it goes in again; in Jamaica when the sun is out, it is out, and when it is in, it is in."

Flogging Sought In Food Rackets

MAR 1 - 1942

LONDON, Feb. 28.—(AP)—Lord Woolton, British food minister, advocated whipping and severe prison terms for black marketeers today as a campaign against illicit traffic in rationed food and clothes got under way.

He met with Hugh Dalton, president of the board of trade, and Herbert Morrison, minister of home security, to plan a three-department offensive.

The food minister declared he was doubtful whether anything but "penal servitude and threat of flogging" would frighten the racketeers.

Simultaneously, Jews in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Manchester, Glasgow and Cardiff organized "black tribunals" to punish Jews caught in black market operations.

The tribunals would deal out punishment by business pressure and social ostracism.

RACE PREJUDICE UNKNOWN IN RUSSIA

Pittsburg Courier

FEB 28 1942

LONDON, England, Feb. 26—Today, with aggression sweeping all over the world, bringing with it the injustices of racial tyranny, it is notable to learn that Moscow was saved from the Nazi brigands by Cossack forces led by a Jewish General, Lev Dovator.

It is just as though the Ku Klux Klan were to elect to go into battle under a Negro leader! This is typical of the absence of racial discrimination in the Soviet Union, where the citizens of the darker sections of the country, the descendants of the warrior hordes of Ghengis Khan, previously held in complete suppression under Czarist rule, are rallying gladly to the support of the Union, in which they occupy an equal place with all the other Soviet Republics.

India Will Get More Power To Govern Herself

FEB 23 1942

LONDON, Feb. 22.—(AP)—Prime Minister Churchill is planning to consolidate the empire front in the Far East by granting additional powers of self government to India and by sending a cabinet representative to the country in an effort to "put the India problem on a more satisfactory footing," informed quarters asserted tonight.

FEB 23 1942

One source said that Sir Stafford Cripps, former British ambassador to Russia, had made it a condition of his acceptance of a seat in the war cabinet that the government reach an agreement on India policy.

Sir Archibald Sinclair, minister for air, it was forecast, would be the government representative sent to India to carry out the policy.

This policy, it was said, as tentatively drafted, provides for an Indian national administration headed by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, former president of the Nationalist congress party.

A congress party coalition government in the British provinces of India, now ruled by governers, with the aid of advisors, is also a part of the program, it was reported.

FEB 23 1942

The dramatic appeal of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, of China, to Britain to grant India her freedom, one Indian said here, certainly was made known to the British government, and probably also to the United States, before it was issued in New Delhi Saturday.

Government sources, however, declined to comment on the appeal.

FEB 23 1942

Chiang declared it was necessary for China's and India's millions to unite in a fight for freedom in the world and against aggression.

Churchill Sees End Of Race Persecution

OCT 29 1942

By the Associated Press.

OCT 29 1942

LONDON, Oct. 29.—Prime Minister Churchill declared in a statement today thta "when this world's struggle ends with the enthronement of human rights racial persecution will be ended."

The Prime Minister's statement was read by the Archbishop of Canterbury before a meeting convoked as a demonstration of protest against Nazi treatment of Jews

"The systematic cruelties to which the Jewish people, men, women and children, have been exposed under the Nazi regime are among the most terrible events of history and have placed an indelible stain upon all who perpetrate and instigate them," the Churchill message added.

The Archbishop of Canterbury. Dr. William Temple, declared there was every reason to fear that a large proportion of Jews "from 2 years old and upward" being deported from France were destined for "the ghastly ghetto in Eastern Galicia (Poland), where thousands of Jews already have perished.

OCT 29 1942

"It is hard to resist the conclusion," he said, "that there is a settled purpose to exterminate the Jewish people if it can be done."

CHURCHILL SINGLES HIMSELF OUT AS THE DEFIANT EXPONENT OF EXPLOITATION OF BROWNS AND BLACKS AND YELLOWS

ALMOST as arresting as the American-British invasion of Morocco and Algiers in West and North Africa was Winston Churchill's almost truculent protest: "I have not become the king's first minister in order to preside at the liquidation of the British Empire."

Only those persons in a position to get a peep behind the scenes can recognize the importance of the Churchill statement and appreciate the operation of forces, within and without the British Empire, which would impel him to make such a declaration at this time. Churchill's grandiloquent response to anti-imperialist pressure is as significant and revealing as Hitler's impassioned avowal that he is not going to run away no matter how tough the going gets. Hitler thus admits that the war which he brought on is getting tougher and tougher for him. Churchill acknowledges that anti-imperialism sentiment throughout the United Nations' world has become challenging, so challenging that he might as well come on out in the open and let everybody know where he stands. He is springing into the breach that has been made in the Tory lines. Growing sentiment in England, the United States, Russia and China against the exploitation of weaker peoples has forced Mr. Churchill's hand. Mr. Churchill becomes more than the defender of the British Empire. He is now the visible, acknowledged, active exponent of the right of the strong to live at the expense of the weak.

Mr. Prattis

SPOKESMAN FOR REPUDIATED SYSTEM

THAT is all I can see in Mr. Churchill. He tipped his mitt, so to speak, on his attitude toward colored peoples in his notorious reference to Mahatmi Gandhi. Rumors have circulated out of London that Mr. Churchill's attitude toward the black people of Africa is not even one of benevolence and that he has not taken kindly to the presence of American Negro soldiers on English soil. More and more he becomes clearly limned as the fiendishly eloquent spokesman for a system which is being rapidly repudiated by the rest of the world. One must presume that a statesman so skillful in the use of the English language as Mr. Churchill always knows the words he is using. He says he has no intention of presiding at the liquidation of the British EMPIRE. Is he referring to any threats to the sovereignty of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, to any of these independent props of the British Commonwealth of Nations? They do not consider themselves a part of the British EMPIRE. They belong to the British COMMONWEALTH. They have their independent armies and navies and can start or stop fighting at any time they choose. They regard themselves as their own bosses in a British League of Nations and accept only the moral obligation to regard the foe of one as the foe of each and all. The British EMPIRE is something different. India is a part of the British Empire. Nigeria, the Gold Coast, Rhodesia, Tanganyika, Uganda and various and sundry other parts of Africa are parts of the British Empire. In the British Commonwealth of Nations, the constituent members haye a political economy dictated from Whitehall for the benefit, not of themselves, but of a British class which is now in a death fight for its life. Under the old system, they grew richer as the yellows and browns of Asia and the blacks of Africa grew poorer. Churchill has served notice that the class he represents does not intend to relinquish one farthing of advantage.

It is fortunate, indeed, if reports are to be accepted, that the English people themselves do not wholly share Churchill's point of view.

LINEUP IS CLEAR

THOSE of us who have been trying to pierce the fog in our war aims should be grateful to Churchill. He and President Roosevelt united to produce the Atlantic Charter which, on its face, looked like a charter of the four freedoms for all the peoples of the world. There were a few persons who thought there was a catch in it. When Wendell Willkie returned from Asia, he brought word that the people of China and India and other parts of that vast continent were wondering if the Atlantic Charter had any real substance for them. Mr. Roosevelt said, "Sure! Hasn't Mr. Willkie read what Mr. Cordell Hull and I have repeatedly said?" Undoubtedly, Mr. Willkie had read the speeches of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull. Mr. Willkie must have been fishing for a more explicit answer from Mr. Churchill. He now has that answer. Bluntly, Mr. Churchill has told Mr. Willkie that, so far as he is concerned, the Atlantic Charter is not intended for the people of the Pacific beyond Australia and New Zealand.

We, therefore, are coming to know who is on the Lord's side and who isn't. Mr. Roosevelt has placed himself on the side against imperialism. So has Mr. Hull. So has Mr. Sumner Welles. So has Vice President Wallace. So has Wendell Willkie. So has Chiang Kai-Shek. So has Gandhi. So has Nehru. So has Stalin. So has Molotoff. In other words, the leaders of all the peoples of the United Nations have placed themselves against the old order of imperialism and empire, except Mr. Churchill. He stands alone, defying the earthquake of social forces which are toppling the skyscrapers of our ancient notions. There was a guy named Samson who pulled the temple on himself. He thought he was strong, too.

LONDON.—If Morgan State College plays Virginia State in a football game on Thanksgiving Day before 10,000 spectators, there will be more colored people in the stadium on that occasion than there are in the British Isles.

NOV 14 1942

For that reason, it is difficult for one who reads this in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Newark, Richmond or Washington really to understand the tremendous adjustment in habits our troops have to make in England when they finally realize that, compared to America, there are practically no colored people in England.

Estimate Shows 9,500

A liberal estimate by the Colonial Office says there are about 500 colored students, 7,000 Africans and West Indians, widely scattered, and 2,000 seamen in the British Isles. A thickly populated three blocks in Harlem would show that many inhabitants.

What does this scarcity of colored people mean? It means that our boys are going through an entirely new experience. Most of the things they take pride in back home are missing, and it makes an awful void. I know because I have encountered a strange world myself.

No Restaurants or Newspapers

There are no colored colleges, presidents, teachers, newspapers, restaurants, insurance companies, large landowners, magnificent churches, organizations like the NAACP or Urban League.

There are no blocks of beautiful homes, golf courses, and theatres, owned by colored Britishers. I have seen no police precincts staffed by colored officers, no firemen, drugstores, barber shops or beauty parlors.

They never had a chance to leave their Southern homes before, and therefore never realized there was a part of the world which was willing to forget a man's color and welcome him as a brother. This British world is as near all white as our West, or New England or Canada.

First Negro President of Oxford Union

OCT 10 1942

RUDOLPH DUNBAR

One of the most famous Societies in the British Empire is the Oxford Union. It is not a very easy institution to explain, but in brief it represents the political nursery in which the undergraduates of this famous university are able to make themselves aware of correct debating procedure, and also it gives them that which is even more important than a knowledge of correct procedure—an appreciation of, and a flair for the spoken word.

OCT 10 1942

It is organised on almost the same lines as the House of Commons. Its debates are decorously run, and more often than not, reported not only in the local press, but in the national press as well. Very many of Britain's most famous politicians and public men had their early schooling in the Union, and William Ewart Gladstone, one of Britain's most famous Prime Ministers, first rehearsed his somewhat ponderous speeches as a youngman within the Union Society's Chamber.

To be elected President of the Union is the greatest honour that can befall an undergraduate. The list of past Presidents who later became famous in broader fields is an impressive one. It includes not only the significant name of Gladstone but also the names of Lord Curzon, Lord Oxford and Asquith, the Earl of Birkenhead, Lord Simon, Hilaire Belloc and the recently retired, as well as the present Archbishop of Canterbury.

OCT 10 1942

Open to all undergraduates, the Oxford Union works and votes democratically. It is extraordinarily sensitive to the trend of public opinion among the youth of Great Britain. It is therefore of significance that the Union, for the first time in its history, elected a twenty-three year old Negro to be its President. James Cameron Tudor, a tall, broad-shouldered West Indian and a Socialist, was elected in contest with the Honourable Derek Mond, son of Lord Melchett.

OCT 10 1942

The voting went ninety-two to sixty in favour of Tudor, and this despite the popularity of his opponent, and the fact that the Honourable Derek Mond happens to be an ex-President of the Oxford Union Conservative Association.

Mr. Tudor is known as "Cammy" to his friends, and was born in Bridgetown, Barbados. He is the eldest of the eleven children of Mr. Cameron Tudor, a business man and a Deputy of the House of Assembly of Barbados. He was educated at Harrison College (where, incidentally, Sir Pelham Warner, President of the M.C.C. went to school). He went to Oxford to study "Modern Greats" (politics, philosophy. economics) In 1943, he hopes to sit for his final examinations, but he will stay on to become a Doctor of Philosophy. His thesis, according to present intentions will be the Political History of the West Indies. Then he wants to go home, enter political life, and help his home country to attain Dominion status. He is a Socialist, believes in the British Commonwealth of Nations, but wants the Colonies to be given Dominion status as soon as possible.

OCT 10 194

James Cameron Tudor (the resounding and aristocratic name, incidentally, has come down to "Cammy" from the man who owned his ancestor as a slave !) is by no means a "blue stocking." In spite of his political interest and his earnest studies, he has the happy, good-natured temperament of his race. It is, perhaps, descriptive of him that he is both Chairman of the Oxford University Labour Club and a prominent member of the Oxford Rythm Club, the latter organisation being pre-occupied with swing music. He likes tennis and a game of bowls. Occasionally, he broadcasts in the British Broadcasting Company's West Indian Service.

From his grandfather who, oddly enough, was the first Negro to study at Heidelberg University, he learnt German, and hopes to broadcast in that language in the European service sometime.

Nazi Bombs Blast Racial Prejudice In Big Convoy

DEC 26 1942

By GEORGE PADMORE

LONDON—(Censored)—It took a heavy shower of Hitler depth bombs and torpedoes to smash Jim Crow on a recent convoy taking munitions from America to the Soviet Union.

The Nazi Luftwaffe blasted apart the artifically-erected race barrier set up by some of the Dixie white seamen who refused to mix with the Negro crewmen.

It all happened three days out from Iceland when swastika-decorated bombers appeared over the convoy on its way to Archangel. Up to that time the color bar had been rigidly observed.

But the heroic courage displayed by the colored seamen in face of a terrific enemy bombardment completely changed the outlook of the white sailors. As the Nazis launched their fierce barrage, two Negroes on duty at the wheel stuck to their posts without flinching.

The story of the Negroes gallantry was told by John Venaccia, American-born Italian member of the crew, on reaching London.

"There was a good deal of color prejudice among our crew when we set out but by the time we reached Archangel, there wasn't a trace of it left," said Venaccia.

"Many of our boys were from the South and Midwest where they'd hardly ever walk down the same street with a Negro. They had never sailed with Negroes before and to have to eat with them went down badly."

DEC 26 194

Describing how prejudice disappeared as wave after wave of bombers roared overhead, he said: "How could it be otherwise? The two men at the wheels were Negroes and they stuck it through everything."

It was generally recognized that the staunch courage of these Negro men saved the ship and all the crew.

The crew was completely united after that. When the crew of the ship landed in Britain after having delivered their precious cargo, they felt they had achieved a common bond of understanding.

NO DIALECT BOOKS WANTED IN SCHOOLS FOR NEGRO CHILDREN

FEB 6 - 1942

Librarians Say "Uncle Remus" Lingo Should Be Eliminated; Dixie Merchants Favor Old Order

569

CHICAGO, Feb. 5 (By Hazel L. Griggs for ANP)—Negroes, as a group, no longer talk like Uncle Remus and should not be portrayed in books, especially works designed for the very young, in this manner, is the contention of six of the country's outstanding colored librarians and teachers, as revealed recently in a communication to Publishers' weekly, a trade journal read widely by librarians and book dealers. The communication, written in answer to several letters published previously by the magazine, refuted statements made by several southern white librarians ond book sellers who held that books about Negro children are not realistic unless they are written in dialect.

FEB 6 - 1942

In their reply, the librarians declare that though books containing illiterate dialog and ridiculous pictures of the Negro often are intended merely to entertain, they do in effect injure and humiliate Negro youngsters and thus are harmful in result. One white author of books about Negro children, filled with illiteracy and caricature, maintained that illiterate speech habits, should be preserved on the grounds that they are "quaint and colorful."

The librarian group studded with names well known in the library field. responding, stated that at a time of world strife "when children are hearing on every hand the need for unity, tolerance, and democratic ideals, it seems incredible that books strong in racial ridicule should be given the enthusiastic defense this type book received.

The controversy, regarding juvenile Negro literature, began when Eva Knox Evans, white author of books about colored characters, and teacher in an Atlanta school, took a stand for more literate books dealing with Negrose, declaring in an initial article in Publishers' weekly that the absence of dialect in books about Negro children does not detract from their effectiveness as regional stories, nor from their feeling of authenticity. Mrs. Knox cited Eleanor Lattimore's "Junior," "Tobe" by Stella Gentry Sharpe, and Arna Bontemps' "Sad-Faced Boy," as examples of stories about real people written with dignity and humor and without dialect.

Letters to Publishers' weekly, following the printing of this article, all from white persons in the literary world held that books about Negro children seldom sold unless dialect were used. Yet it was admitted that Tobe was a best seller in this type of book.

Concluding that dialect is dated and unrealistic in creating pictures of modern Negro children, Mrs. Knox says: "Negro children want to see themselves in books as they really are, not in caricature." The librarians approving her stand and protesting the opposite views were: Eliza Atkins Gleason, director, Atlanta university; and Hallie Beachem service; Virginia Lacy Jones and Wallace Van Jackson, instructors at the school; Charlemae Rollins, children's librarian, Hall branch Chicago, Chicago; Georgia Gowen Poole, Spelman college; N. P. Tillman, English department chairman, Atlanta university; and Hallio Beachem Brooks, librarian, Atlanta university.

"Lanterns on the Levee"

A friendly note to the editor says: "The professional book reviewers have had so much to say in praise of 'Lanterns on the Levee' by William A. Percy of Greenville, Mississippi, that I wish you would tell me, now that Mr. Percy is dead, what you think of this book and what will be its permanent place in our Southern literature."

It is a vile and evil book because it uses brilliancy, scholarship and glamour to undermine faith, religion, ambition, ideals. Purporting to be an autobiography it proves to be the record of a distorted, disillusioned and misanthropic mind. Along with penetrating stories and arresting comment upon the relations of the Negro and white races in the South, it holds out not a scintilla of hope, encouragement or good will for the future of the Negro race. It represents the race as inherently criminal and unresponsive to kindness. It defends the big plantation system and the discredited and patronizing tenant and crop-sharing systems that have nearly ruined Southern agriculture. It is no more encouraging to the white race. The South, he says, is made up of aristocrats, poor whites and Negroes. He, of course, speaks as one of the aristocrats and never lets the reader forget the ante-bellum home, the 3,000 acre plantation, the patriarchal role he must fill toward the rest of humanity.

He uses the experiences of world travel, of soldiering in the first World War, of observations of human frailties to ridicule and lament the hopelessness of spiritual aspirations and religious faith. He sees the whole world in chaos and forecasts future unhappiness for the human race for a thousand years. Between highballs he unfolds these gloomy and discouraging thoughts to his three adopted sons.

There is no excuse for such a book written by a cultured and intelligent man and it has nothing in it to merit permanency. As an autobiography its value is for the student of psychology who is seeking an example of melancholia, frustration and disappointment.

City Split Over Merits Of Race History Play

MAR 20 1942

Proposed Showing Before Whites Creates Argument

MAR 20 1942

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—(ANP)—A Negro history play that was enthusiastically acclaimed after two performances here created a city-wide disturbance when it was learned that it was to be shown to a white audience.

569

The play, "The Builders," created around the lives of Denmark Vesey, Harriet Tubman and Frederick Douglass by a group of high school children under the direction of Miss Romona Lowe, was of the high school had seen the play, but it was rumored that he was advised to act by a Negro principal who said he didn't want white people laughing at his hostory.

Some 150 Negro children who had cut school walked up and down the main thoroughfare of the Negro section shouting lines from the play. Fist fights between opposing factions had to be broken up.

Although 500 Negro students attend the local high school, the teaching force is lily white. This is the first time that an all-Negro cast had been invited to perform on the high school stage. Negroes are generally excluded from the dramatic society. No Negro history is taught throughout the school system.

MAR 20 1942

their voluntary contribution to Negro History week. Due to the group was invited to put the prosuccess of the performances the duction on at the local high school for two assembly periods which would have involved thousands of white children.

MAR 20 1942

Certain disgruntled members of the group who had been dropped from the cast started a whispering campaign against the dramatization. Negro children who had never seen the play threatened to beat up the participants if they persisted in their determination to present it to the white students. They also threatened to stay away from school the day of the scheduled performance.

MAR 20 1942

Parents becoming alarmed phoned into the school asking that the play be banned. Mrs. Maggie Cresswell Negro policewoman, appeared at the high school to forcibly prevent the production. The superintendent ordered the assemblies cancelled when the cast was ready to go on the stage. Neither he nor any of the white officials

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT'S BLACK MAMMY

MAR 28 1942

Some months ago the United States Treasury department published a defense pictorial magazine with a group picture of 21 white children on the front cover. Written in bold type underneath the picture were these words, "So that they might face the future unafraid." The implication being buy defense bonds in order to insure the security of the future generation of Americans.

Since no Negro child was represented in the group, the Chicago Defender promptly reminded Treasury officials that thousands of loyal and patriotic Negro citizens were buying defense bonds and stamps and that they were not making the sacrifice merely to make democracy safe for white America, but for black America as well.

This week the Treasury department sent out as part of its defense literature a grotesque illustration of a Negro Mammy with these lines:

569

A cheerful old mammy
Named Hannah
Who'd lived eighty years in Savannah
Said—"Sho 'nuff, I'll buy
Defense Bonds, 'cause I Am in love with the Star
Spangled Bannah!"

MAR 28 1942

This is an insult to the intelligence and dignity of the Negro people and we resent it most strenuously. To imagine that this old mammy stuff will inspire present day Negroes to buy defense bonds is to take an unrealistic, stupid view of the attitude and reaction of the black citizens. Either the Treasury officials are uninformed or misinformed on the Negro issue or there are fifth columnists among them busily engaged in creating disaffection and disunity among America's largest minority group. In truth this amounts to an obvious sabotaging of the national government's efforts to bring the maximum energy and patriotism of the masses into this titanic conflict.

Let us once more remind the Treasury department and all other federal agencies that this consistent alienating of the Negro's affection is giving aid and comfort to the enemy, delaying if the present attitude of the Nordic d into the mould of war of color.

Protest "Old Black Joe" In School Books

MAR 1 4 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP)—Roused over the sentiment in a number of songs used in the District of Columbia music books Mrs. Velma G. Williams, colored member of the school board, and Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, superintendent of colored schools, voiced their disapproval of these particular songs in a recent meeting of the school board and brought down the re of several members who could see no harm in the words.

MAR 1 4 1942

59

Charging that some of the songs used in seven books in the system contain words offensive to the colored people, the board entered a serious debate over the merits of the complaint.

CALLED FOLKLORE

White members were opposed to any change, declaring that the music of Stephen Foster, chief composer of the songs that brought about the protest, have come to be regarded as American folklore and were not insulting.

These members also said that the famous choirs of Hampton and Fisk had sung them and therefore, they could see nothing to make the words objectionable.

MAR 1 4 1942

Among the songs cited were "Old Black Joe," "My Old Kentucky Home" and several others equally as well known and extremely popular in certain sections of the country.

Tried to Get Script Changed

SEP 5 - 1942

Wanted to Buy Back Contract But Cost Proved Too High

SEP 5 - 1942

In a review of "Tales of Manhattan," Twentieth Century-Fox release, featuring Paul Robeson and Ethel Waters, the Star-News, wrote in part, "It is difficult to reconcile the Paul Robeson, who has almost single-handedly waged the battle for recognition of the Negro as a true artist, with the "Luke" in this film.

"Robeson's impressive and passionate indictment of reactionary influences in the field of art, has no doubt, been largely responsible for the high respect in which he is held.

"His acceptance of this role leads one to wonder whether Robeson is abandoning his lot as a martyr, though he hasn't exactly starved, for an easier path."

569

It wasn't an easy statement to make about so eminent a personage as Mr. Robeson, but is gratifying to report on the famed actors reaction to the criticism.

"The criticism being leveled at me currently for my part in 'Tales of Manhattan,'" he said, "is justified and the film does reflect on my race."

SEP 5 - 1942

Robeson explains it adequately however by saying that he didn't realize that it made the Negro look ridiculous until the shooting and then he tried unsuccessfully to get Producer Boris Morros to change the script. He went further than this attempting to buy his contract only to find that the cost of such a move was prohibitive.

'Nigger-in-Woodpile' Remark Over WOR Stirs Wide Protest

OCT 2 4 1942

3-69

Responsible race leaders, interested in the improvement of interracial relationships and constructive use of the nation's major propaganda media in presenting Negroes in a dignified light as opposed to the general practice of following the ridicule pattern, are again urging the censorship of radio programs which have occasion to make Negro references. Representations have already been made to the Federal Communication Commission.

OCT 2 4 1942

The new activity in this matter was provoked by resentment over a WOR program last week in which the commentator, Bessie Beatty, took occasion to observe that there was a nigger in the woodpile.

No soft spoken apologies can allay our resentment of the use of such terms over the air. It may have been a slip of the tongue but it betrays the fact that it has happened before. Hence in spite of her exhaustive vocabulary that unrehearsed program has shown the real Bessie.

We prefer to fight here at home for we have plenty to fight for.

Miss Beatty has a daily 45-minute program and, as those concerned point out, unless she is disciplined or censored, she has that many additional opportunities to insult the Negro listening audience.

PV talked to P. Steele, program executive, about the incident and what WOR intended to do about it.

Steele admitted that the station was thoroly put out over the Beatty slip (ad libbed apart from her written script) and that not only would she be instructed to apologize but would be unequivocally forbidden to deviate from her written script in the future.

Most important station action is the one putting the word nigger on the station's "unmentionables" list.

An alternative suggestion is the retention of consultants who would advise the radio stations on the propriety of terms, idioms and anecdotes referring to Negroes.

This would avoid the common plea of the stations whenever these incidents occur, viz.: they didn't know that the term was objectionable.

Typical of listener reaction to the Beatty broadcast was a letter sent to the program director of WOR by Ethel Allen, of Rutherford, NJ.

The letter follows:

OCT 2 4 1942

Dear Sir:

Did you hear Bessie Beatty use the epithet "nigger in the woodpile" in her daily broadcast today? Well, she did it.

Do we, as Americans, have to sacrifice our all in this war abroad and listen at home to such insulting remarks?

When "Dear Imogene" had a Georgian editor of a recent book on her program we would not have been surprised had she done something of the sort, but she had only a short time and it didn't happen.

We were quite shocked to hear this fall from Bessie's lips for she had made some believe that she is rather liberal and about as unprejudiced as we can expect the average white American to be.

INSULTS NEGROES

56g

The Raeborn Studio, 211 North Seventh street, is passing out coupons which purport to offer some inducement for persons wishing to have their pictures made. In each of the four corners of the coupon which is about four hand corner are these words, "Colored trade unsolicited." This is a slanderous public statement and an insult not only to 110,000 Negroes in greater St. Louis but also to the entire colored race. We suppose the V's in each corner are indicative of "Victory for race prejudice" and so far as we are concerned, the owner of the studio can have all the victory that can come out of spreading the propaganda of racial prejudice against colored people at this particular time. Then, too, there are legions of white people in St. Louis who would not enjoy seeing this slanderous statement against colored people passed out publicly and indiscriminately. They, too, will resent it.

And whereas we have not visited the studio yet, we are willing to bet dollars to doughnuts that the proposition of making $2.50 for 39c is a skin game and graft sailing under the wings of legitimate business ........ attention, Better Business Bureau!

Ring Down the Curtain On Anti-Negro Plays

Daily Worker

N.Y., N.Y.

5-69

(Here's an indication of what protest can do. We think the article below from the Pittsburgh Courier of Nov. 14th is worth repeating.)

"Out of respect for the opinion of Negro students," the theatre department of the University of Wisconsin dramatically banned presentation of Noel Houston's prize-winning one-act play, "According to Law," six hours before curtain time. Vigorous protests by Negro students working in close collaboration with liberal white students of both sexes forced the decision.

The curtain was raised on the backstage drama when it became known that Samuel Boyea, board member of the University's International Club, had walked out on the cast of which he was the only Negro member. Boyea said that "after much painful thinking," he decided to quit rehearsal ranks because "it isn't cricket to play a role which, like all American Negro roles, creaks along on the omnibus of tears and sentiment."

Nov. 16, 1942

Boyea added that the role of Charlie Teague in the play patronized and portrayed the Negro as a "spineless, crushed, cringing, hopeless individual and a prototype of the Hollywood sub-human type" and therefore could not be played by him "with any racial self-respect or dignity."

As a challenge to Boyea's protest, Negro and liberal white students were permitted to see a midnight, full dress rehearsal of the play by Director Jim Terzian. The Negro role was portrayed by a white student member of the Wisconsin Players, since after Boyea's outburst, the part became "too hot to handle" by any Negro student.

The audience violently protested against the presentation and under the leadership of Argyle Stoute, Negro medical student of N. Y. drew up an indictment of the play. Prominent among the points advanced were:

1. This play insults and disgraces the contribution which the Negro is making in this fight for democracy.
2. This play pointlessly belabors a charge of rape against a Negro defended by a degenerate lawyer who is drunk and thus points the way to the alcoholic road to equality.
3. This play is patronizing and fatalistic in its approach.
4. This play carries a message of hopelessness and is dated.
5. This play cannot be excused on the basis of art for art's sake because it is so unreal.

Among the signers were: Second Lieut. John O. Brown of Oklahoma; Marie Faulkner, Nashville; Jas. Buchanan, Mark Kennedy and liberal white students Peggy Mann, Joan Goldberg, Jack Geiger (P M correspondent), Arnold Rogow and Virginia Ricks. After listening to the points of the indictment, Prof. Ronnie Mitchell, faculty head of the Theatre Dept., admitted that "this is a new education for me" and called off the play with the promise that in the future the theatre would work in closer harmony with Negro students on interracial plays.

Federal Management Of Negro Situation, Social Reforms Offend

'Secession' Threat Warning Sounded By Louisiana Governor

Dec. 6, 1942

BY FRED TAYLOR

News-Age-Herald Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Each week brings more evidences of a burgeoning movement in Alabama to stage a revolt against the New Deal Democratic party.

Social reforms in general and federal handling of the Negro situation in the South in particular are furnishing the ammunition the would-be revolters in this state are getting ready to pass in a party "secession" attempt.

Blocking any effort to win a fourth term for President Roosevelt, war or no war, is the principal objective of the plan, which calls for Southwide party "secession," if the movement is really to achieve any degree of success.

Indications that certain political leaders in other states, stirred by the way the administration and Democratic national headquarters have attempted to handle the Negro situation, will join in the movement came last week from Louisiana's Gov. Sam Jones, who minced no words in warning of a party "secession," threat. Gov. Jones declared the Deep South had received better social, economic and political treatment from the Republican party than from the present Democratic administration.

There are many Southerners, of course, (certainly a majority) who would take issue with the Louisiana chief executive on this declaration.

Spearheading the movement in Alabama are Birmingham's portly lawyer-politico, Horace Wilkinson, and Gov. Dixon. They started the ball rolling some months ago when Wilkinson delivered a scorching speech at Bessemer on "racial relations," with Dixon, long a bitter political enemy of Wilkinson, passing out printed copies of the speech from the governor's office.

Some observers sized up Gov. Dixon's action in seizing on to this red-hot political issue as motivated by the fear his old foe, Wilkinson, might run off with it and use it with devastating effect in the next gubernatorial campaign.

They contend the governor well knew what an inflammable issue racial relations could be made in Alabama, particularly if fanned to white heat, and that the retiring chief executive wanted to be sure he got in on the ground floor, since it long has been known he has eyes on the governorship four years hence.

Dec. 6, 1942

Others are wondering, however, if Gov. Dixon, bidding for a second term in 1946, and Wilkinson have really become reconciled and will be in the same political bed in the next governor's race.

* * *

NEXT MOVE—Word leaked out some days ago that the next move in the "secession" plan would come in January, when the State Democratic Executive Committee meets in the Capital City for reorganization.

A resolution is to be offered calling on the state party governing body to release party voters from the pledge in choosing presidential electors in the next presidential election in 1944.

In other words, release Democratic voters, who cast their ballots for party candidates in the May and June primaries, from the usual pledge to support party nominees insofar as choosing presidential electors are concerned in the general election.

Anti-New Deal strategists considered introducing a joint resolution calling for this at the recent special session of the Legislature, but it was decided to wait until the May session, when it would follow whatever action is taken by the state committee along this line.

If such a resolution were adopted by the state party governing group action in January, the committee would be expected to reaffirm its action when it meets in January, 1944, to fix primary dates and make other preparations for elections the year of the presidential campaign.

* * *

AROUSED — State Committee Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile lawyer, stirred Alabama Democrats recently with his letter to Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn. His letter asserted the manner in which the administration and Democratic headquarters had sought to handle the Negro situation had made it "utterly impossible" to raise any substantial party funds from Alabama Democrats.

Incidentally, Chairman McCorvey, who will be reelected state committee head in January and who very probably will run for delegate-at-large from this state to the 1944 Democratic convention, whaled away at the national government and party leaders for their efforts to nullify the poll tax laws of Alabama and other Southern states.

Following on the heels of this, the Legislature unanimously adopted a joint resolution by Jefferson Representative Tram Sessions commending Senators Lister Hill and John H. Bankhead, as well as members of the state's House delegation, for their part in helping fight (and subsequently kill) anti-poll tax legislation. All opposed it except Jefferson's lame duck Representative Luther Patrick.

* * *

WOMEN—Answers came promptly from members of Alabama's congressional delegation commending Birmingham's Mrs. Charles J. Sharp, Black Belt reared and former Democratic national committeewoman, for her letter (copies of which were sent to delegation members) asking Senate Majority Leader Alben Barkley to keep the poll tax record straight by inserting her epistle in The Congressional Record.

Dec. 6, 1942

The letter written by Mrs. Sharp, vice chairman of Jefferson County's Democratic Executive Committee, was dispatched to Barkley to "make clear to you the attitude of Southern women towards the recent anti-poll tax bill," after he had read into the record letters from two Alabama women lauding the move to nullify poll tax laws.

Mrs. Sharp's letter stated, in part:

"As former national committeewoman, as chairman of the committee on constitution that successfully prevented the packing of the Supreme Court; as chairman of the Alabama Council of Democratic Clubs (the organization which denounced the so-called Southern Conference for Human Welfare), and now as vice-chairman of the Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee, I want you and your colleagues to know that the patriotic women of my state are now, have always been, and will continue to be, squarely behind our representatives in the Congress of the United States who have fought and who will fight again, against this encroachment of the states' rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution of the United States. They have always made this fight, secure in the knowledge that their women are one on this issue.

"I am not speaking for foreign elements, Northern Republicans or New Dealers. I am speaking solely for the women of Alabama who held this state in the Democratic column in 1928."

Dec. 6, 1942

Congressmen Frank Boykin, Sam Hobbs and Joe Starnes were among those sending prompt replies to Mrs. Sharp. Boykin said: "It (letter) strengthened and encouraged our leaders to know that the women back home are solidly behind them."

Starnes wrote: "Let me congratulate you for your letter to Senator Barkley, which let him know how the Democratic women of the South feel on this issue."

Hobbs stated: "I sincerely hope Senator Barkley will comply with your request and insert your letter in the Congressional Record," adding it was "a very fine letter."

* * *

SPARKS — Gov.-Elect Chauncey Sparks spent Thursday and Friday huddling at his Capitol (provided temporarily) offices with Speaker George Miller and other legislative leaders and, when he went back to Eufaula for the week-end, the incoming chief executive had pretty well determined what senators and representatives would be placed on standing and recess committees.

Personnel of both standing and interim committees will be announced when the Legislature meets Jan. 12 for a 10-day organization session. Since the Legislature can be organized easily in one day, Sparks and his leaders are at loss to know what to do with the other nine days.

As stated here some weeks ago, the Eufaulan will seek to limit the organization session to less than one-half the time provided in the biennial sessions amendment, which was drafted by one of Gov. Dixon's pre-inauguration "brain trusters." By cutting this session in half and by having held the special session to five days, Judge Sparks expects to save enough money to pay expenses of eight 11-member recess committees.

Dec. 6, 1942

The two most important recess committees will be the finance and taxation group and the committee on war emergency legislation. A catch-all committee will be the judiciary group.

* * *

INAUGURATION — As revealed here before, the Sparks inauguration will have fewer frills than any governor's induction into office in many quadrenniums. There will be no luncheon, no dinner, no ball and no doo-dads.

There will be a military parade, formed by units from the various encampments over Alabama, and there will be an inaugural address, with Judge Sparks to be introduced by T. B. Hill, Montgomery attorney. As is customary, the Supreme Court chief justice—Judge Lucien D. Gardner—will administer the oath of office. And there will be "open house" in the governor's office after the ceremonies.

* * *

HOWARD THAMES, capitol superintendent, completed plans weeks ago for construction of an inauguration platform on the Capitol steps overlooking Dexter Avenue. Places will be reserved for department heads, campaign managers, members of the Legislature and others, but no large committees have been named.

Carl Bear, Sparks' private secretary, and Thames are handling the details.

Dec. 6, 1942

* * *

QUESTION MARKS — Platform reservations are usually designated by name, but Bear and Thames are having to use question marks instead on some reservations. They are awaiting Judge Sparks' announcement on "cabinet" appointments.

Some thought he would make some announcements last week, but it may be early January before he reaches a decision on one or two places.

* * *

HUDDLE—A good indication of the way political winds are blowing was given the other day when Auburn's Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of A. P. I., and a power among Alabama farmers, had Senator Lister Hill as his guest at Auburn for homecoming.

Two days later Dr. Duncan and Alabama's junior senator were seen lunching together in Montgomery.

* * *

SHAKEUP—While Judge Sparks' advent as governor will not bring the usual wholesale changes in state personnel, it is expected to signal a considerable shakeup and reshuffling of employes in some departments.

Even though the incoming governor announced (he had it in his platform) civil service will be retained, this does not necessarily mean employes under the merit system, particularly some department subheads, will retain present ratings under the new regime.

And, of course, this does not mean they will be fired. It does mean, however, that several very probably will be demoted to jobs in lower brackets of the classified service. It also means that others already working for the state will be given long deserved promotions.

Changes in present ratings can, and very likely will, be recommended, not by the incoming governor but by some of those he will appoint to "cabinet" jobs. Those close to Sparks say he will leave such recommendations strictly up to department heads, with the final say-so coming from the personnel director and State Merit Board.

Thus, it would appear that simply because an employe or sub-head is covered by the merit system, it does not mean he or she is secure in a particular job with a particular rating. Federal, as well as state, county and municipal civil service systems, provide employes can be demoted for cause.

Dec. 6, 1942

Good reasons must be shown for demoting an employe in the classified service, with inability to fill a certain post being a good reason, if the personnel director and the Merit Board can be convinced of the person's inability to perform certain duties. Civil service advocates point out this is a necessary provision included in all merit systems to keep employes on their toes and maintain efficiency, as well as to serve as a constant reminder that a civil service rating, alone, will not protect an employe in his or her particular job.

The state civil service law contains such a provision in Section 313, as follows:

"An appointing authority (department head), may, upon giving written notice, stating reasons, to and with the approval of the director, demote a classified employe under his jurisdiction from a position in one class to a position in a lower class."

NEWSOME — John Newsome, Ninth District congressman-elect, was much impressed with the work being done by the Patman small business committee to save small manufacturers and little business men from extinction during the war, after sitting in on the congressional group's hearing in Birmingham Friday.

Dec. 6, 194

Newsome, a small business man himself (radio and electrical appliances dealer), who emphasized the need for greater representation in Congress for little business men in his recent campaign, was honored by Texas' Representative Wright Patman and other members when they invited him to sit with them as one of the committee.

"I think this committee is doing one of the finest things possible for the small business man and the small manufacturer," declared Newsome, "in helping keep down monopoly and finding a way to keep the little men, who really are the backbone of this country, in business."

"Birth Of Nation" Planned as Talking Picture; Vicious Slap at American Plea for Unity

56h

Word comes from Hollywood this week that tentative plans are being made to revive Birth Of A Nation, the anti-Negro film of 1914 glorifying the Ku Klux Klan. It is said that Harry Sherman, the man who loaned D. W. Griffith the money to complete production of the movie in 1914, has viewed the picture four times in his own private dressing room, and is trying to clear up the tangle of complicated ownership rights so that he can remake the film into a talking picture.

NOV 7 - 1942

According to rumor along the motion picture Rialto, Sherman wants to bring Griffith back to Hollywood to supervise the modern version of the movie. Lillian Gish, who rode to stardom on the strength of fame garnered from her role in the original version, is supposed to aid Griffith in picking the leading female parts for the talkie revival.

Birth Of A Nation is the most vicious kind of anti-Negro propaganda. It not only glorifies the Klan as the "savior of white womanhood," but depicts Negroes as thieves, rapists, drunkards and murderers. At a time when every effort is being made by fair-minded Americans of both races to do away with such propaganda, even a contemplation of reviving this type of picture should be stalemated before anything concrete is accomplished towards its production.

We do not know who Harry Sherman is, but we think that every attempt should be made to stop the revival of this picture. Active protest should be made to Elmer Davis, Office of War Information, Washington—ND.

Captured Americans In Philippines Almost Starve; Rebellious Filipinos Crushed

By JULIUS C. EDELSTEIN
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The Japanese are treating conquered Filipinos and Americans with a mixture of refined barbarism and ruthless terror, reliable insular circles said tonight on the basis of "underground" reports from the beleaguered islands.

While Nipponese planes are dropping leaflets exhorting Filipino troops to surrender and promising them good treatment, the areas already under Jap occupation are experiencing a type of treatment comparable to the worst meted out by the Nazis in Europe, these sources said.

The several thousand Americans trapped in Manila have been given clean, fairly comfortable quarters, but have been virtually deprived of food, it was said.

Food Stores Are Looted

The Jap army of occupation numbering about 200,000, has been ordered to live off the land, with the result that both civilian stores and homes have been looted.

Filipinos normally live on rice, bananas, and fish. This is similar to the Japanese diet. Americans in the Philippines eat imported meats, local poultry, and fish.

All except a few of the Americans have been herded into ancient Santo Tomas University where there is ample room but food is restricted to a few handfuls of rice per person, according to these reports.

Japanese guards, while occasionally brutal, are reported to be fairly respectful. The chief terrors are hunger and ever-present mosquitos.

Filipinos who transgress the strict lines of Japanese-ordained conduct have been thrown into virtual pestholes, it was said.

The entire population of Manila is on a starvation diet because the city has always depended on food imports. The Philippines, as a whole, requires heavy imports of rice. All rice supplies have been taken up for the army, and the local population is shifting for itself.

Sabotage Heavily Punished

In the northern Luzon Province of Pampanga, "rice bowl" of the islands, there has been an extensive amount of sabotage and rice field burning, which has been punished in the severest manner, it was said.

The peasants of this area, long the most recalcitrant, unruly, and radical of the entire archipelago, are said to have resorted to mass action, including strikes, to show their resentment against their new masters.

Captured Filipino soldiers have been treated even worse than their non-combatant countrymen, it is reported. Some have been taken to Japan to work in war industries and in the fields.

Outside of the Manila area, Americans are being handled savagely it is said. Hundreds have lived in the hinterlands since the days of the occupation in 1898. Most of them have been placed in rude "concentration camps" along with outspoken Filipino leaders.

The Japanese, with their traditional passion for sanitation, have made most of these camps resistant to disease, but have devised a hundred forms of cruel oppression, the reports alleged.

Race and the Pacific

QUEEN WILHELMINA'S proposals for an autonomous East Indies in a postwar Dutch Commonwealth of Nations indicate that leaders of the United Nations are at least thinking about the problem of winning the colonial peoples for the anti-Fascist coalition. But hardly more than that.

In our own country, only Negro Americans seem conscious of the racial implications of the conflict in the Pacific. A few individuals, such as Pearl Buck and Wendell Willkie, have stressed the importance of considering this factor. But we are the only important group who view these implications from the standpoint of the people themselves.

Other groups, indeed, are interested—but for motives that are not in accord with the military necessities of the war. The defeatist press, including the great newspaper chains of Hearst and Roy Howard, wish to fight a racial war. So do the Rankins and Coxes of the poll tax South. Even an important sectoin of Wall street, personified in the interests clustered about the publisher of Time-Life-Fortune, project an American victory gained by our own efforts, principally through naval operations and the protracted process of jumping from island to island. Then there is a section of the State Department represented by Joseph Grew, former ambassador to Japan, which envision a victory by ourselves alone, without the aid of the peoples of Asia.

All these groups have in common the aim of restoring Western imperialism in Asia, and a special kind of imperialism in which United States big business will be absolute master. Fortunately, they are not at present dominating the policies of the United Nations, for their policies could mean only disaster for us.

Japan's Main Weapon

THE POLICIES of these imperialist forces play directly into the hands of Japanese Fascists. The unholy trinity of big business, the militarists and the Imperial Family which now rule the Japanese state have adopted as their foremost political slogan, "Asia for Asiatics." This is a racial slogan. Its more popular form is the admonition: "Drive the white man out of Asia!"

Nor can it be denied that the clique headed by General Tojo has enjoyed a certain success in its application. The disaffection of the Burmese is now part of the record of those dismal Allied failures in the first few months of war. The passivity of the other colonial peoples reflected their susceptibility to Nippon's political catch-word. It is a fact that Chinese unity is still threatened by a powerful bloc within the Kuomintang who wish to join the Japanese.

At this very moment, the Japanese are concentrating their energies on winning the peoples of Asia to their professed aims. Recent dispatches tell of the wholesale "Japanization" of the occupied countries. More alarming, however, is the evidence that the Japanese are avoiding the stupidities of France, Britain, Holland and the United States. They are not leaving these seized territories defenseless, but are MOBILIZING AND TRAINING ARMIES of the native peoples to assist them when the Allies at long last attempt to re-conquest of these countries.

Obviously, therefore, the rantings of Hearst and Rankin, and the more cleverly expressed aims of Luce and Grew, merely strengthen the Japanese Fascists. They are able to say to the peoples of Asia: "See, we told you so. The white men merely want to enslave you again." They are able to carry on their efforts to change the character of the Pacific conflict into a racial war.

Negro America's Opportunity

FORTUNATELY, some of the leaders of the United Nations understand that military necessity sets other requirements for victory in the Pacific. They understand that the United States cannot win this war by its own efforts, that only the full coalition of United Nations—especially China — in conjunction with the colonial peoples themselves can give us a victory short of a colossal price in the lives of our troops and the sacrifice of our civil population.

What Queen Wilhelmina proposes is not decisive, so long as Britain clearly shows by her policy in India that the British government would not tolerate a free Netherlands Indies. The key to winning Asia's colonial peoples remains the freedom of India.

Because we Negro Americans recognize these facts more clearly than any other section of the people of the United States, it is our responsibilty to mobilize and increase pressure for a correct policy toward the colonial peoples. Least of all can we afford to have the conflict in the Pacific become a racial war

The Literary Scene in Peru

AUG 10 1941

By FRANCES R. GRANT
AREQUIPA, Peru.

PERU'S literature — as its history—has been a contrapuntal play of seacoast, mountain and jungle, each exerting its powerful seduction on the creative spirits of the country. Inevitably, writers of Peru feel the challenge and by some inner predisposition, become partisans in this war of forces, which at present is taking the form of a struggle between "Indigenistas" and "Hispanistas." To the former it is the Indian influence that will determine the norm of Peru's cultural life, while the latter feel that Spain alone is Peru's true cultural inheritance.

Just now the Hispanistas are having their moment, under the nostalgic spell of the Pizarro four hundredth anniversary. This has brought to the fore two eminent biographers of Francisco Pizarro —one the extremely erudite José de la Riva Aguero, irreconcilable leader of the pro-Spanish movement, who looks upon Atahualpa as almost his personal enemy. Less passionate is the biography of Raúl Porras Barranachea, whose devoted labors in the archives of Spain have permitted him to formulate a work at once scholarly and literary.

THIS is not to say that the lovers of native Peru are under a shadow; they still in effect are having their triumph, for it was one of their number—Ciro Alegría—who won the Farrar & Rinehart prize. And, although almost every newspaper remained silent in regard to his victory and failed to comment on his passage northward, the literary circles of Peru acknowledge him as their leading novelist; in fact, one of their few novelists since the novel form is not at present one of Peru's most compelling literary mediums.

José Ferrando, whose work, "Panorama Toward Dawn" (Panorama hacia el Alba), won the national prize in the same contest, had never before written a novel, having received his literary apprenticeship as secretary and ghost writer to a popular Spanish poet, for whom, by order, he composed sonnets or essays.

More familiar among current novelists of the soil are Enrique Lopez Albújar, great short story writer, whose "Matalache" is a saga of the mulatto and mestizo of the northern coast; José Maria Arguedas, whose "Agua" (Water) and recently published "Yawar Fiesta" are pleas for the Indian of the sierra and his struggle for social justice. More violent in his plea is Cesar Falcón, confessed Marxist, while such novelists as José Felix de la Puente, Ernesto Reyna, Luis Alayza Paz Soldán, José Dies Canseco pursue their work in a more lyric manner.

Possibly most marked in the aspects of literary Peru of today is the quality of serious works of research—in the fields of history, education, biography, science. As Jorge Basadre, eminent historian and librarian of San Marcos, stated it to me, "It is as though we had reached a new maturity in our writing." In these fields stand out Basadre himself, Victor Andrés Belaunde, Alberto Ulloa, Julio Tello, Raúl Porras Barrenechea, Pedro Benvenneto Murrieta, Mariano Iberico Rodriguez. Among these scholars are the integralistas—those who would reconcile the world of the Indian and the world of Spain into a new fusion. It is this new vision which has been described superbly by Uriel Garcia in his work "El Nuevo Indio" (The New Indian). For him the new citizen of Peru —be he white, Indian or mestizo —is he who loves the Peruvian soil and who is formulating its varied and abundant treasures into the essential Peruvian culture that is to be.

in Peruvian history. Like her father—Ricardo Palma, Peru's great immortal—she loves Old Lima with an absorbing passion and one must remember her gratefully for her biography of Pancho Fierra, inimitable aquarelist who captured forever the Lima of yesterday—a Lima fast disappearing under the intrusions of a tourist world.

AUG 10 1941

Most favored expressions of contemporary Peruvian writers are the cuento, the tale; the essay and the poem. Of cuentistas there is too numerous a list to mention; all of them seek their themes, not in an urban or white man's world, but in the Indian, the chola or mulatto. Master tale-tellers are Lopez Albújar, with his sensitive "Cuentos Andinos" (Tales of the Andes); José Maria Arguedas, Arturo Jimenez Borja, Emilio Romero and others. Here, too, may be mentioned Luis Varcarcel, at once archaeologist and writer; his "Tempest in the Andes" places him in the vanguard of the extreme Indigenistas, who, as the subtle literary critic José Jimenez Borja asserts, are like the Russian school of the narodniki, perceiving the Indian as a kind of muzhik, awaiting the coming revolution.

AUG 10 1941

Of essayists, Peru, as all Latin America, also claims an abundance, leading among them being Estuardo Nuñez, Aurelio Miró Quesado, Luis Alberto Sanchez, José Alvarado Sanchez, José Flores Arraoz and others. Nor may we here forget Peru's most subtle humorist, the architect Hector Velarde, whose "Circus of Pythagoras," "I Want to Be a Philosopher" and other works have nation-wide popularity.

Beyond all argument, however, Peru's natural expression is poetry—and her literary life has never lacked for a bounty of lyricists, reaching such peaks, in the beginning of the century, as José Santos Chocano, called the Poet of America; Abraham Valdelomar, genius of the pre-war decade, and Cesar Vallejo, who, despite his premature death a few years ago, takes rank with Pablo Neruda and other hemispherical figures.

AUG 10 1941

Today José Galvez remains the poetical heir of Peruvian traditions, heir in prose and poetry to Ricardo Palma. So vast is the list of lyricists that one may but mention a few—Emilio Westphalen, Enrique and Ricardo Peña Barrenechea, Xavier Abril, Luis Fabió Xammar, Martin Adán, Manuel Beltroy, José Hernandez, Luis Valle Goicochea, Alejandro Peralta and many more of equal rank. If in some poets one hears the Spanish influence of Luis Góngora and Garcia Lorca, more often the poetic voice of Peru has become, like the world about it, the expression of the "inquietudes" of our contemporary life.

The Latin Americas And The Color Problem

MAR 1 - 1942

THE United States is courting the friendship of the Pan-American nations that there may be a unanimous all-out effort on the part of the Americas for the defeat of the Axis powers.

Some of the countries have given favorable response to the urge of this country in these regards but others have been and are still hard to handle.

MAR 1 - 1942

There are several reasons why the nations South of the border have not gone all-out for the invitation of the United States and among which we wish to mention only one reason —the color problem.

The nations of the Latin-American countries have not been sold on the lily-white psychology of the United States and in the nature of things it is not reasonable to expect that they will.

MAR 1 - 1942

The fact is simple to understand. Out of the 120,000,000 people who live in those countries only 25,000,000 are pure white. That leaves a majority of citizens in these countries who are persons of color and who would be very reluctant to accept the American view of things purely white.

In these Latin American countries Negroes hold high positions in the governments. In Brazil a Negro was president of the country. It may be said in passing that Brazil is larger in area than the continent of the United States.

Obviously, if the United States desires to sell the Latin American countries on white psychology as a part of the war effort it is only reasonable to suspect that a 100 per cent response will be lacking.

MAR 1 - 1942

The United States should no longer send only its fat, sleek, selfish business men to these countries to better relationships between the Americas. It must send persons of color to these countries in its effort to win them over to the side of democracy and the principles of equality for all men.

Ally Brazil

AUG 30 1942

BRAZIL has declared war on Germany and thus joined the allied cause for a victorious war and a just peace.

Brazil is the biggest country in South America and is larger by some 25,000 square miles than the mainland of the United States.

It is populated by white, brown and yellow people but none who are citizens are identified in any other way than Brazillians. Brazil has no color line and its darker people are given those position which they are capable of filling. This accounts for the fact that at one time in its history that country had a Negro president.

AUG 30 1942

More than likely soldiers from this country will join with the soldiers of Brazil somewhere in the war area to participate in joint belligerency to stop the common enemy. No doubt the segregation of Negro soldiers in the United States Army will be obnoxious to Brazillian military strategy as some of the movie characterizations of American Negroes which Brazil consistently refuses to show in the same manner that it suppresses news about American lynchings.

Perhaps, all in all, Americans can learn a good deal about better race relations from our good neighbor. They may learn that it is possible for citizens in a country to live together, work together and play together—irrespective of race or color—without malice and without prejudice.

AUG 30 1942

And by the very same token it is hoped that the white ideology that obtains in England and the United States will not contaminate the good feelings between the people of color of Brazil or the other South American countries.

DEC 18 1942

THE SOUTH DOES not want its scocial customs broken down. The reactionary leaders are determined to stop the progress of the Negroes in spite of the war, Democracy and everything else. They are not alone in their program of retarding the war effort with racial intolerance . . . they have plenty of support from northern sympathizers who through undercover methods urge the rebels to keep the Negro down.

Dixie customs are contagious and the north has become contaminated with all kinds of second rate forms of citizenship for Negroes. In many states, laws don't mean a thing . . . the color of your skin determines how the law shall be applied. . . . In our own state, "FREE KANSAS," we have civil rights laws and laws against segregation, but what does it mean? I have found very little difference in the way Mississippi applies segregation and jim crowism than from the way it is done in Kansas.

If I would go to a picture show in Mississippi, I would have to climb to the buzzard roost through a back entrance . . . the same here, and in many cases—no admittance at all. If I wanted to eat a meal in a white cafe in Mississippi, I would have to dine in the kitchen or at some special jim-crow counter . . . the same here, if you don't believe it . . . just walk in one of the Dime stores on Minnesota avenue. Now there is a fundamental difference in Dixie segregation and northern segregation. Dixie has jim-crow laws that must be erased from the statue. The north forces jim-crowism upon Negroes because they accept it . . . the law forbids, but yet Negroes will put their O. K. on it by paying for it. . . . We can't stop a white place of business from setting up a jim-crow lunch counter, but we can certainly see that no sales [illegible] made over that jim-crow counter to Negroes. . . . As long as Negroes support jim-crowism by paying for it, there is nothing we can do about it. Civil rights laws won't mean a thing!

DEC 18 1942

Segregation and jim-crowism are insults to me and my race. I resent insults from any man and I will not spend my money with some man or institution that insults me. We cannot always blame the other fellow for injustices, but we must take stock of ourselves and see if we are not responsible for some of the injustices heaped upon us. No one will kick a dog around that will bite, such a dog gets respect. Human beings are respected when they demand it, and it cannot be demanded by supporting the most hideous type of insults . . . SEGREGATION and JIMCROWISM. There are courts in this land. Men and business places that insult you can be made to pay. The Mitchell law "Equal Accommodation" has caused the railroads to answer to more suits in the last two years filed by Negroes because they did not get equal accommodation in travel than ever before. Congressman Mitchell made it possible for Negroes to get equal accommodation in traveling as interstate passengers, but it is up to the Negroes to see that the railroads give it to them.

DEC 18 1942

I think that the Negroes in Kansas ought to get together on what they want . . . whether they want segregaion or rights as other citizens. If they want rights as others, then there should be a move to stop those who support segregation by spending their money with business places that insult the entire race. In order to make a law workable, there must be created a sentiment for the law . . . but when we just drift along, support insults and only a few of us foam at the mouth, we are likely to remain in chaos.

---

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON once said in a speech back in 1895 at Atlanta, Georgia, the following words:

"In all things that are purely social we (Negroes and Southern Whites) can be seperate as the fingers, yet one as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress."

Mr. Washington made this statement in defiance of the much advocated "Social Equality" theor which southern whites used to hol the Negro down. The Negro has never sought so-called social equality. He does not want it today in the sense that a lot of white people think. The Negro does not want intermarriage of whites and Negroes any more than the whites. He is proud of his own race and merely wants Equality of justice and a right to enjoy Democracy as other human beings.

NEGROES IN Northern states must safeguard our social, political and economic gains in order to save the millions of Negroes from persecution by Southern rebels who are hellbent to stop the Negro in his tracks. Ours is a battle ground that must be kept intact. That calls for hard work and sacrifice. We must realize that after a year of fighting for Democracy that the victory is not to the swift, but he who holds out to the last. There are no shortcuts to progress and neither can the race make progress with week-kneed sisies playing the leading role.

The postwar setup will not and cannot be the same as it was before. The big question confronting the American Negro toda . . . what is our fate?

Batista Asks All Out Aid In War Effort

DEC 19 1942

Calls Upon Race To Act In Concert With Free Peoples

BY ALVIN E. WHITE

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(ANP)—To the Negroes of the United States, Fulgencio Batista, president of the Cuban republic, last week expressed the hope that they would show the same strength that all free men in the world are showing, and that they lend their aid to the final achievement of victory and thus insure justice and freedom all over the world.

Batista, visiting the United States on an official mission, was seen in the famous old mansion, the Blair house, just opposite the state department.

56k

Surrounded by members of his own official family, members of the Cuban embassy and military aides from the United States army and navy, the "strong man" of Cuba did not belie his title.

Of medium height, broad of shoulder, flashing of black eye, Batista cordially welcomed his colored visitors with an accented "I am very glad to know you."

DEC 19 1942

DELAYS APPOINTMENT

After a long wait for the president, we were finally ushered into the drawing room. Enroute to a formal dinner being arranged by Sec. of State Cordell Hull, President Batista told his aide he would gladly stop and see the visitors, thereby delaying his appointment for about 10 minutes.

A formal introduction in the hall of the mansion, where the entire staff stood respectfully awaiting the word of the President, was followed by a few choice words in Spanish by Dr. Ben Carruthers of the Pan American union. President Batista then waved us to the drawing room, saying in English, "We will go in here and talk."

Here he was asked for a statement to the colored people of America. Half in Spanish and half in English, he gave utterance to the words above.

Asked about the benefits accruing to the native Cubans as a result of his administration, Batista said, "There are no racial differences in Cuba. We are all working toward one union, and solidarity."

DEC 19 1942

He was then asked about his favorite project, the newly established educational system, and how his minister of education, a Negro, Sen. Remon Vasconcocelos, would fit into the scheme.

To this Batista replied that Dr. Casconcocelos would take an active part in the new program of progress.

Gracious to the "nth" degree, President Batista easily gave the impression of being a man of destiny. His every act bespoke the strength and determination to make Cuba a nation to be recognized.

This little island republic declared war on the axis just shortly after the attack upon Pearl Harbor and was one of the first Latin American nations to openly declare itself an ally of the U. S.

Here to cement the relations between this and his own country, President Batista has made many friends by his simple and direct approach to all problems facing his native land.

After President Batista arrived in the United States, he was the guest at a formal dinner at the White House, which included most of the prominent men in the country—cabinet members, army and navy officials, and members of the government.

DEC 19 1942

GUEST OF ROCKEFELLER

Later, he was guest of Nelson Rockefeller, coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, at a formal luncheon attended by many notables in this and Latin American governments.

Everything surrounding the president was strictly formal with FBI men surrounding the place and covering every inch of the house in which the President was domiciled.

DEC 19 1942

Courtesy pervaded the entire situation and the manner in which Batista himself handled the situation on his hurried arrival and departure is indicative of the characteristics of the man who rules the destiny of Cuba, a land where one-third of the inhabitants are colored.

The peculiar economic and social structure of the island does not permit of comparison with our race problem, since there are many darker people who are considered in the same class with the whites.

"The Southern Way"

NOV 14 1942

FOUR years ago, as now, Southern "statesmen" were talking about outsiders keeping their hands off and letting the South settle the race question in its own way.

We hear more of that today, because the Nation is engaged in the greatest war of all times, and the manpower needs for both military and production purposes are apt to upset some of the South's methods of keeping the Negro in a certain isolated spot.

Four years ago Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, made a speech to North Carolina Young Democrats. We don't remember just what was worrying him at the time but he demanded that the South be allowed to settle its economic, social, and racial problems in the "Southern way."

The next day, the Raleigh Evening Times, commenting upon Senator Bailey's remarks, had the following to say:

NOV 14 1942

> First, we'd like to ask Senator Bailey: "What is the Southern way?"
>
> Is it the way that has led the South, slipping and floundering, and flopping, through a half century of aimless meanderings when other sections of the country were making rapid strides forward?
>
> Is it the way that has led the South to its present unenviable rank—last in educational facilities, lowest in income and per capita wealth, first in sharecropping and its attendant evils?
>
> We've been blaming our troubles on the Civil War long enough. That was a crippling experience, but it must be obvious by this time that the South is convalescing overtime. Any business man worth his salt welcomes new ideas, and doesn't hesitate to copy those of his competitors which show him a better way to get things done. Let's be good Southerners and good business people at the same time.
>
> Let's, in short, quit telling a well-meaning nation to "keep its nose out of our business." For our business is its business—its concern. An aching foot can make the whole body feel miserable.

NOV 14 1942

There is nothing that we could add that would more nearly express the truth that the South needs to embrace.

It is enough to say that the most encouraging sign on the horizon of the Nation's future—if we win this war—is the growing impatience of more and more Southern white people with the idea that in order for the South to maintain its civilization, or to progress to higher degrees of civilization, it is necessary to repress and oppress the nine million Negroes who live in the South.

Dixon's Name In Discussions Of Presidency

NOV 9 - 1942

Governor Is Viewed As Spokesman Of Real Democracy

NOV 9 - 1942

By ATTICUS MULLIN

As strange as it may seem, the writer heard in many places in Birmingham during the present week, the name of Frank M. Dixon mentioned for President of the United States.

There is a concerted effort on to get Gov. Dixon to allow the use of his name for president with a view to impressing the country that there are still real Democrats left in the land.

"I heard his name mentioned," said Judge Horace Wilkinson of Birmingham. "I believe he is the outstanding Southern Governor and I believe that he could campaign this country and secure lots of delegates for the presidency. I would not say he could be nominated but he could bring the Democratic Party back to some sort of semblance of its former principles."

The thing is not as far-fetched and as visionary as it seems on the surface. Certainly no man could accuse the writer of being a disciple of Frank Dixon, or of even believing in half of the things he stands for. We don't think he has shown the proper consideration for President Roosevelt. Not that he has been against war or for isolationism, far from it. He is as patriotic as any man we know but we feel that because of his hatred of many things Roosevelt (or should we say Mrs. Roosevelt) stands for, we fear he has leaned the wrong way at times.

NOV 9 - 1942

But from what we heard in talking to hundreds of farmers from every county in Alabama, Dixon could go a long way towards showing this nation that the South is not a soft sister, that it has not forgotten its own way of life and that it does not intend to continue to be regimented in thought and action either by Mr. Roosevelt or Mrs. Roosevelt.

Dixon for president may not be a slogan to win with but it is a slogan that might result in a renaissance of pure democracy. Gov. Dixon, with all of what we regard as his personal faults, has always stood for democracy undefiled. He could, if properly put forward, stir the Southern States to a point where they would demand a president who would let them alone in their social relations, at least.

We came away from the Birmingham meeting of farmers convinced that Dixon has their respect, if not their love. Many of them think he is doing quite a demagogic stunt in putting forward the race issue but they endorse it just the same.

Hoover took some of the Southern States away from the Democratic Party. From what we heard Mrs. Roosevelt may take some more Southern States away from the Democratic Party. Certainly if a Southern Democrat of standing should rebel against the administration's effort to force social equality in the South, the South would be torn from stem to stern.

NOV 9 - 1942

From what we heard, farmers and people generally love President Roosevelt but they would like him much better if Mrs. Roosevelt was a home body, instead of a continual boil on the back of the neck of at least the South.

DIFFERS WITH MR. ROGERS

Editor, Orlando Morning Sentinel:

Spread out before me side by side on my desk are the two editorial pages of the Orlando Morning Sentinel—Monday, Oct 26 and Tuesday, Oct. 27.

It is most interesting to compare, for the sake of analogy, the Public Thought Columns of these two consecutive issues: one captioned "The Negro Question," by Woods W. Rogers Jr., the other "How to Aid Visitors," by Frank A. French, both residing in Orlando.

The first communication, copies of which were arrogantly mailed by the author to Town Hall, New York, NBC and sundry individuals, was couched in anything but sane and polite terms. The unrestrained language of the diatribe is not characteristic of Florida, by any manner of means; such haranguing and name-calling is an effective antidote for the friendly publicity campaigns the State has promoted through the years among our northern people—about 3,000,000 of whom come to Florida in normal times, and spend annually something like $375,000,000. Not that money is everything, but why, by arbitrary ravings, prejudice a clientele which the State has spent millions in building up?

I seriously doubt if Mr. Rogers has ever been in New York's Town Hall. If he had been he would realize that a large proportion of the audience are intelligent, cultured and patriotic American citizens—many of whom spend their Winters in Florida.

A great open forum like Town Hall, besides attracting to its doors the intelligentsia, also has its gallery hecklers and agitators. If when Mr. Rogers uses such terms as "arrogant bunch of polyglots," "conjugators with the black race," etc., he means this latter group of Town Hall patrons, he does not make himself clear.

Besides, why is it necessary in this most critical hour of the nation to dig up a war that has been dead and buried for over three quarters of a century? Let's take care of the war we are in now. For should we lose this one it won't make any difference whether Eleanor Roosevelt champions the negro of the North or South, or whether the "carpetbaggers," which Mr. Rogers refers to, were guilty 75 years ago.

Let's forget the color question for the time being [except for the yellow Japs] and while we're at it let's obliterate the Mason-Dixon line. We're in this war up to our necks: let's leave our mud pie making till we again catch our breath following the fight which really matters—saving America and the world for democracy.

While I was born in the North and have lived there the greater part of my life, my parents and grandparents were all Virginians and strong southern sympathizers. I'll admit when some crack-brained lecturer or writer—or anyone else from the North—has the audacity to tell South how to manage its negroes it makes my blood boil: and if ever I violate the 13th Commandment it will be on that score. But I don't intend to flaunt the controversy at a time when there are so many vital subjects to talk about.

What a refreshing contrast is Advertiser French's "plug" to get visitors to the State to shift from coastal points in order to get away from the "deadening atmosphere," as he calls it, of continuous dimouts. Concurrently Winter Garden's city officials have mailed out letters to several hundred tourists inviting them to avail themselves of this inland city's beautiful lakeside tourist park where no sirens of air raid warnings or black-outs occur.

Suppose these invitations and those of the Chambers of Commerce over the State were to be sent out in the spirit of Public Thought letter No. 1, in which name-calling and opprobrium abound.

Letter No. 2 breathes the true spirit of Florida's pioneers and leaders to build up and preserve this great commonwealth as the number one tourist State of the nation.

Let's gather the "scrap" and lick the Jap first. Then if the critics want to damn the Eleanor Clubs, the Claude Peppers, the Town Halls and the "Yanks" let's give 'em the green light. Harping on these issues now is "fiddling while Rome burns."

Race Progress Is Cited By Collier's

Nov. 15, 1942

"The Negro Lifts His Head" is the subject of an interesting "outline" article of the most recent developments in national interracial relations by Walter Davenport, famed writer, being featured in the November 21 edition of Collier's magazine, which went on sale Friday.

The feature article is illustrated with pictures of Negroes and white Americans getting along together well under numerous circumstances.

SCK

Mr. Davenport begins his article by telling of a Mississippi Army captain, who told a London audience that Englishmen "could congratulate themselves that their government had such relatively tractable colored men as Mohandas Karamchant Gandhi and Jawaharial Nehru to placate, instead of dangerous radicals like the less widely publicized Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters." Asked what Americans proposed to do about it, the Mississippian is quoted as saying "that neither legislation nor postwar pact could force the Southern white man to abolish race segregation," for which he was spoken to sharply later by his superiors and the subject made taboo in England.

Davenport pictures the American Negro as "ignoring no opportunity to make the war pay them dividends in equality" being "scornful of promises of postwar grants" and contending "that they are not so avid for new legislation as they are for honest administration of Constitutional rights, laws and court interpretations already on the books." The writer also says Negroes "protest that their service in uniform is humiliated by Jim Crowism but defy you to prove that their loyalty is the less for it" and maintain they are just as efficient as the white man in industry, while deploring "the reluctance of the White House to act promptly and ruthlessly against Southern politicians who disregard the Negro's legal rights—to a free franchise, for example."

The Collier article reviews the fight of the Negro press, the N. A. A. C. P., and the March on Washington movement which resulted in Executive Order No. 8802. It discloses the actions of the reactionary white organizations, such as Georgia's Vigilantes and the proposed "League for White Supermacy." Clashes between Negro soldiers and white southerners are reviewed, as well as Eleanor Clubs and the Chicago "Temple of Islam."

The writer has presented what he admits to be an "outline" of the interracial situation in the United States. He doesn't attempt to predict what will come out of the situation. But his article is interesting and should be read widely.—William Fowlkes, Jr.

Jews After The War

When the militaristic and persecuting dictatorships have met their inevitable fate and nations unite in a new effort to establish a better peace, fundamental freedom, in its broadest sense, will be a major objective for all peoples.

That fundamental freedom does not necessarily imply an identity of government in all lands. Liberty can exist under governments which differ in form and procedure, provided they uphold the fundamental freedoms. But these freedoms are essential to a full life of dignity, significance and opportunity for any people. They will surely be the goals everywhere, once the false lures of totalitarianism have been exposed for the vicious delusions that they are.

SCK

One of the first steps in pursuit of a new order, which will be really a good order, a better order, will surely be the restoration of full rights to Jews in Europe, and wherever else they may have been the victims of discrimination and persecution. But even when that great day comes, of course, the tragic plight of millions of Jews will not be altogether transformed. It will be a great time of rejoicing and thanksgiving, not only among Jews but among all humane peoples everywhere, when political liberation has been achieved for enslaved victims of the despots. But there still will remain acute problems. All intolerance will not at once be vanquished. Dispersed peoples will not immediately have homes and adequate opportunities. An enormous work of reconciliation and reconstruction will remain to be done—and as quickly as possible.

* * *

It is especially in dealing with this urgent situation—and opportunity—to come that the Zionist movement for a Jewish homeland in Palestine hopes to be of great use. This week a statement signed by 733 Rabbis representing all elements in American Jewish life outlines this aspiration.

This statement is a reply to a declaration by 90 other Rabbis critical of Zionism as inconsistent with Jewish religious and moral doctrine. "Our colleagues," declares the statement signed by the 733 Rabbis, "find themselves unable to subscribe to the political emphasis 'now paramount in the Zionist program.' We fail to perceive what it is to which they object."

The statement then goes on to point out that effective political action is essential to opening the doors of Palestine to homeless Jews for mass immigration after the war. It is asked whether Jews of Palestine would be denied "the same rights that are allowed to all other peoples resident on their own land," the right of self-determination if they became a majority? Or, it is asked, would Jews be held down to a minority?

The 733 Rabbis, who included Birmingham's Rabbi Abraham J. Mesch, of the conservative Temple Beth-El, and Rabbi Milton L. Grafman of the reform Temple Emanu-El, contend that their colleagues have done the homeless Jews of the world and those in Palestine "a grave disservice" though, it is pointed out, the minority rabbis concede the need for Jewish immigration into Palestine and have subscribed "to every practical accomplishment of Zionism."

Nov. 17/42

* * *

"An Allied peace which will not frankly face the problem of the national homelessness of the Jewish people," the majority statement declares, "will leave the age-old tragic status of European Jewry unchanged. The Jewish people is in danger of emerging from this war not only more torn and broken than any other people, but also without any prospects of a better and more secure future and without the hope that such tragedies will not recur again and again Following an Allied victory, the Jews of Europe, we are confident, will be restored to their political rights and to equality of citizenship. But they possessed these rights after the last war and yet the past 25 years have witnessed a rapid and appalling deterioration in their position. In any case even after peace is restored Europe will be so ravaged and war-torn that large masses of Jews will elect migration to Palestine as a solution of their personal problems. Indeed, for most of these there may be no other substantial hope of economic, social and spiritual rehabilitation."

* * *

It is prayerfully to be hoped that when the victory for freedom comes, there will be a profound reaction from the barbaric Anti-Semitism that has so tragically darkened recent years in Europe. Some students of the situation, having in mind particularly the Nazi indoctrination of German youth and the bitterness and misunderstanding of this period of conflict, fear that it will be long before true tolerance is achieved in Europe in broad measure. This feeling can be understood, of course—indeed, there is reasonable cause for it—but still we think there also is reason for hope that there will be a sincere and far-reaching turn away from such prejudice and cruelty after the war. Evil in many of its worst forms should be dealt a discrediting blow. At any rate, we think that all lovers of justice and freedom should hope and work to that end. There should be no surrender in advance to a sense of hopelessness and futility.

But, of course, in the most favorable conditions that can be expected, there will remain great problems, much homelessness. Consequently, the Zionist homeland as a place of new opportunity is a vision commanding wide understanding and sympathy.

Some concern and criticism of the movement among American Jews have been founded on the apprehension that the Palestine project might make the position of Jews more difficult in other countries. But, say the 733 Rabbis, "every fair-minded American knows that American Jews have only one political allegiance—and that is to America. There is nothing in Zionism to impair this loyalty." This spirit embracing both American loyalty and the establishment of a homeland for refugee Jews need not, we think, involve conflict or division, provided that this spirit is steadfastly maintained, provided the respective emphases are clear and well proportioned. Loyalty to this country is not incompatible, of course, with special regard on the part of other Americans for another country—that, for example, of their forefathers.

RISE IN SOCIAL GAINS AFTER WAR FORESEEN

Greater Toleration Predicted by Russell Sage Director

Nov. 20, 1942

As salvage from the catastrophe of war will come opportunities for social and economic gains, it was declared last night at the meeting of the New York Academy of Public Education by Shelby M. Harrison, general director of the Russell Sage Foundation.

"One of the wartime gains," he said, "may be a new toleration and respect for other races which happen to differ from us in pigmentation. The American Negro, newly valued as worker and soldier and fellow-citizen, is gaining rights long overdue."

SCK

Mr. Harrison listed among the social gains the following: A new impetus for adult education; enlargement of job opportunities for the handicapped as a result of the labor shortage; industrial decentralization and advancement of building techniques through mass construction methods for wartime housing.

"On the health front," Mr. Harrison added, "the large percentage of men rejected by the draft for physical disabilities has spotlighted the inadequacies of our past forms of medical care and disease prevention. This, with the war shortage of medical personnel, may at last break through the traditional obstructionist position of certain leaders in some of our professional circles."

Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase of New York University was elected president of the Academy. The membership of the Academy is limited to 200 who have achieved eminence in the field of education in the metropolitan area.

ROBERT QUILLEN SAYS:

The First Step In Solving A Problem Is To State It Clearly

A recent newspaper article by a famous lady author contains a statement beginning with the words: "The Negro thinks." It is a silly thing to say, for few if any white people know what any Negro thinks. And to imply that all Negroes think the same thing is patently absurd.

The Negroid tribes in Africa differ as widely as the Eskimos, Sioux, Incas and Aztecs of the Americas. Some of the negroes brought to America as slaves were proud, clean and intelligent; some were primitive, light hearted, simple and filthy.

Those differences were magnified by the addition of white blood. Most of the Negroes, except in the deep South, have some admixture of white blood—in some instances the blood of aristocrats; in others the blood of trash. And their ideas and intellectual capacities are as different as their racial inheritances. The rich, Harvard-bred Negroes of New York despise the poor and simple of their own race.

The race problem introduced by slave traders will be with us forever. It cannot be solved by sentimentalists who ignore facts. It can be dealt with intelligently only recognizing the fundamental facts that cannot be wished away. The two races are different and nothing can make them alike. Race "prejudice" is apparently inherent —placed in us by nature, as in other animals, to keep the race pure. The fact that children do not share it means nothing. Children have no understanding of ethics, either.

Yet despite their ineradicable differences, the two races can live together in peace and amity if they will— and if each locality will attend to its own business. The proof is in the fact that they do so live in many regions today.

The way not to handle the race problem is illustrated by Harlem, where recent increase of crime has focused the nation's attention.

Harlem is a poverty-ridden Negro ghetto. Its death rate for tuberculosis is five times that of white sections of New York. Its syphilis death rate is eight times as high. Its infant mortality rate is twice as high, and its maternal death rate three times that of the rest of the city.

All of these factors explain the crime record. More than one third of the inmates of New York's penal institutions are Negroes, though they comprise only a fraction of the population. Compare this with the situation in South Carolina, where the two races are nearly even in number. A recent survey revealed that more than half of the law-breakers were white.

This is sufficient evidence that Negroes given an opportunity to work and earn a living are useful, self-respecting and well-behaved people.

The Journal's Republic of LETTERS

Go, write it in a martial-hand, be brief—it is no matter how witty.—Twelfth Night.

STOP RACE AGITATION

Editor, The Journal: Like the wise man who has just had published in your "Republic of Letters" an article pertaining to race agitation, I say, too, that of all times, this is the most inopportune for any controversy on this subject.

Our Southern Negro is a part of our inheritance. We need no outside interference in our relationship to him. No true Southern Negro wants social equality. True, we have not been able and we have not done all that we could for them, but we are realizing this and doing more for their spiritual and educational uplift.

Our better housing projects are raising their standard of living and, let alone, we will go on living in peace with them. Give them better schools, give them teachers who understand their needs, who have grown up with them and whom they respect. Teach them that they are a race separate and distinct from other races. Teach them pride in their own color. Set them a good example in clean living. We have a great asset in our able-bodied Negro youth.

The passing generation of good old-time darkies love their white neighbors. They love our Southern climate, our cotton fields and flowing streams. They will do for us and we will do for them. Every highly educated Negro leader is teaching his people distinction ~~of~~ their race. They want separate schools, and no coeducation with the whites. This they know is folly. They want to be true Americans and loyal citizens. To help them in this high ideal is our duty and privilege.

A Northern gentleman opened his eyes in wonder when I said that my Negro washwoman was my good friend. She is. She worked for me for 25 years and would do anything for me or my family. She would protect my interest or my property. She knows I am her friend and she loves her "white folks."

Then let us stop talking and all pull together for the good of our country and the better interest of all. God is the Father of "all nations and tongues and peoples."

Minister Likes South's Way With the Negro Population

ATLANTA—Rev. J. Fank Norris, pastor of Temple Baptist church of Detroit, and pastor of First Baptist church, of Fort Worth, Tex., passed through Atlanta today en route to Columbus and Cordele, where he is to fill pulpits this week.

Dr. Norris feels that every effort should be made by every person to bring this country through the war in victorious fashion for the good of civilization and the peace and happiness and self-determination of the entire world. He said, with reference to the agitation over racial relations and the outside elements who are endeavoring to make capital out of the national emergency, to the disturbance and disadvantage of the Negroes of the South:

"The old historic South, of which Georgia is the prinicpal state and center, stands as the last bulwark against the subversive and subtle undermining forces that are seeking to overthrow the greatest government and civilization of all times.

IS FRIEND OF RACE

"I am the life long friend of the Negroes. They work for me. I preach for them and they are my friends.

"A most tragic situation confronts the whole nation.

"In the thickly populated states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania and New York, about 10 per cent only of the population is Negro.

"But this 10 per cent holds the balance of power in national as well as state elections.

"And it is well known that this heavy block of electoral votes decides every presidential election.

AFRAID OF BLOCK

"Cowardly politicians are afraid of this 10 per cent Negro vote and instead of asserting old fashioned Amercan independence, they kowtow to this Negro block. In the North they have what is known as the "association for the advancement of the colored race."

"The main purpose of this "association" is to bring about absolute social equality and inter-marriage of the races throughout this country. It has already become quite common in these states for Negroes to marry white girls, but I never hear of a white boy marrying a Negro girl. Why the difference?

"In Detroit, where I spend half my time, like in other great centers where there is a Negro block, we have had repeated race riots in which many have been killed.

DETROIT SAW RIOTS

"Take in the Northwestern High school, which as the largest high school in Detroit, the Negroes and whites sit and mingle together in the same classrooms. Yet Detroit was the scene of bloody race riots when Negroes endeavored to move into their government houses.

"Such papers as the Chicago Tribune and other papers in this North black belt scream from the housetops against any man in the South who has the courage to advocate and maintain white supremacy.

"It has been interesting as I have watched these advocates of Negro equality with the white races, inter-marriage of the races, that they are beating the tom-toms and shouting from the housetops and papers like the Chicago Tribune are telling the people of the great state of Georgia how to run their affairs, who to elect as governor, as well as how to run their state educational institutions."

THE NEED FOR CHANGING

By JOHN McCRAY

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

Is Doctor Embree Right?

Nov. 15, 1942

Dr. Edwin R. Embree, president of the Rosenwald Fund, is well known in southern states where millions of dollars have been expended in the interest of education.

It was he who drew several attacks from Governor Eugene Talmadge of Georgia because he felt the Rosenwald head was advocating bi-racial schools in that state, and, it was largely through Dr. Embree's influence that the Rosenwald Fund and other Foundations withdrew support to certain phases of Georgia's educational system.

Dr. Embree last week set forth a ten-point plan—five steps each for the two races in the south—towards bringing democracy into this section of the country. Here they are:

56K

For the white people, 1. Remove racial discrimination from the armed forces; 2, protect Negro soldiers from abuses in the south; 3. Insist upon non-discrimination in in war production; 4. Equalize educational facilities and, 5. Abolish the poll tax.

To the colored people, he advised: 1. Join labor unions; 2. Secure all possible industrial training; 3. patronize your own business enterprises; 4. Be proud of your distinctiveness and; 5. Keep moving out of the south.

Dr. Embree's advice to the white people is about everything that could be desired and the first four steps in his outline for colored southerners. But the final advice—"keep moving out of the south" is a discordant and "defeatist" note in an otherwise practical plan. Why advise pride in distinctiveness and in the same breath, advise leaving the section in which that distinctiveness is most marked? Or, why say "support your Negro enterprises," located for the most part in the south, and then add, "leave them as quickly as possible?" And the advice on labor unions must be taken with conditioning. Would he urge them to join the majority of A. F. of L skilled unions? How can they when these unions by-pass them?

I belong to that young group steadily rising to influence in the south, whose ambitions are to live, perhaps, forever, in the south and MAKE it a comfortable place in which to live. It is not necessary to say that I have faith in the south and believe that you can not solve a problem by running away from it. Soon or late, it must be tackled and the sooner the better.

This decision and attitude may sound strange to those who know the freedom that I only hear and read of in newspapers. But, since there are similar problems confronting me in the north centers. I prefer to stand and take it, to give back all I can to defeat them, to work diligently, even to the end of life, that there shall be more tolerance among Americans for peoples of all races, creeds and walks of life.

The brave and the fool fight for what they believe is right. The coward flees. Certainly the colored man has as much invested in the south as any other man Call him who sticks, gets kicked and fights back brave or fool, if you wish but I can not see where he improves his lot by fleeing from the scene of his trouble.

Elizabeth City, N. C. Independent

TO OUR NEGRO LEADERS

Numerous reports have come to this newspaper of rowdy young Negroes making insulting remarks to white women. At least two have been arrested by the police for such an offense.

We are at a loss to explain this conduct on the part of even a few of our colored population. An occasional offense is to be expected from some unscrupulous youth who has had too much to drink, in departing from the ways taught him by his parents. But the occasions are all too numerous to just happen.

56K

There seems to be some undercover movement among the lower class colored population to stir up trouble among the races. Where the inspiration for this underlying current comes from, we are not able to say. It might be due to the increase in the Negro population of the city because of the extra jobs that are available here, and the bringing in of a lot of irresponsibles who just don't give a damn about what happens to the heretofore amiable relations of the two races. It might be that there is a studied plan to cause trouble, being pursued by fifth columnists in our midst, or northern agitators who are no better than the fifth columnists.

Be the cause whatever it may, this newspaper appeals to our Negro leaders to investigate the conditions and take a hand in putting down and suppressing the attitude before it is too late. Sooner or later, unless there is something done about it, the actions of an irresponsible Negro of the lower class are going to cause serious trouble between the colored and the white populations. There are white men who would take up their guns and shoot not only a Negro but a white man who insulted their wives or their daughters or sisters. Sooner or later, if something isn't done to put a stop to the rowdying parctice of insulting the white women by Negroes, that is just what is going to happen.

Here in the south, and in Elizabeth City particularly, the white people and the colored people have lived amiably together too long to allow some irresponsible young buck to cause strife and trouble by his arrogance. One such young Negro man can tear down in a minute that which it has taken decades to build up. Much progress has been made by the Negro race, but that progress can only be maintained and furthered by continued patience and desire for cooperation between both races. It can be wiped out and the Negro race set back a hundred years by one such incident as has happened in the past few weeks.

Elizabeth City has some splendid Negro citizens, who are assets to their race and to the community in which they live. This newspaper, always respectful of deserving colored people, and always despising of those who would make trouble, in its desire to see a continuance of the pleasant and cooperative relations of the two races, calls upon our colored leaders to take a hand in seeing that this subversive movement is squelched before it is too late.

It doesn't matter what the northern agitators or the fifth columnists say, there will never be a mixture of the white and the colored races here in the south. There will never be a time when young colored men will be able to make insulting remarks to white women and get away with it. Such thoughts in the minds of anyone is only wishful thinking, and the more intelligent Negroes know this to be true.

The time to take action is now, and the safety of their race and the well being of the community lies in the hands of our Negro leaders in remedying the conditions that now exist.

Negro Youth and the Colleges

[Because it speaks simply and clearly of one aspect of race relations—the individual's sensitivity—which is often obscured in discussion of more general political and sociological issues, we reprint below from The Daily Princetonian an open letter to the students of Princeton written by a young Negro.—THE EDITORS]

Nov. 9, 1942

SIR: Informed of the controversy over the admittance of Negro students to Princeton University, I deem it imperative that you weigh the views of a Negro youth whose choice of a college was decidedly affected by racial barriers. I was born and bred in Princeton. The events of your university during the past decade are among the most intimate of my childhood memories. I saw your Bill Bonthron challenge Glenn Cunningham. I cheered for Le Van, Fairman and Ceppi when the Bengals were invincible. I feel that I am just as much a son of Old Nassau as many of you are.

My plea is not the sob story of an irresponsible person who has committed a crime; although I may be considered criminal for destroying your fallacies and corrupting your illusions concerning the Negro and "his place." I am making no appeal to your emotions; my only purpose is to authentically define the desires of Negro youth and to eradicate any ideas concerning his complacency.

If you discriminate against me because I am uncouth, I can become mannerly. If you ostracize me because I am unclean, I can cleanse myself. If you segregate me because I lack knowledge, I can become educated. But if you discriminate against me because of my color, I can do nothing. God gave me my color. I have no possible protection against race prejudice but to take refuge in cynicism, bitterness and hatred.

Think on these things.

AMERICA'S "NEGRO TROUBLE"

The Informer
Houston, Tex.

OCT 24 1942

The major editorial of The Temple Telegram (Walter R. Humphrey, editor) in the issue of October 4, headed "Negro Trouble", was devoted to a discussion of what the paper called the Negroes "attempting to take advantage of the national emergency" "to better their position at the expense of the nation's war effort." Attributing it to Axis propaganda and "the sincere but short-sighted desire of Negro leaders to improve their lot while they can," the editor says that the Negroes cannot get away with this "movement" now.

There are many false assumptions in the editorial, but the thing that vitiates his thesis is his confusion of abuse, discrimination and injustice with segregation. Because it is popular to attribute everything to Axis propaganda, the editor deliberately slides that in to stir feeling, though he knows that it doesn't take any Axis propaganda to make Negroes resent being denied a chance to work in defense industries; resent being given raw deals when they appear in courts of justice; resent having their children denied proper facilities for education, while white children get five to ten times more facilities; or to resent having no sewers, lights or other facilities in their communities, while the whites are resplendent with these things.

Though the whites are the majority, Negroes will not accept his premise that they are wrong to seek equality before the law in all public relations. Numbers have never meant superiority and never will. There are degrees of character, personality and individual achievement, but they don't depend on numbers.

OCT 24 1942

But Negroes are not interested in individual differences; they are interested in having the editor and other whites respect their own laws of segregation by giving Negroes equal facilities on the black side of the dividing line, which makes for segregation.

The trouble that the editor speaks of in America arises beceuse he and his kind insist upon using their control of the governmental machinery to take advantage of the minority for whom they are supposed to be custodians of justice and governmental administration. Negroes are not taking advantage of the war; it is rather that the whites would take advantage of the war to continue wrongs and the war accentuates these differences, because we are fighting a war for democracy and equality. And it is embarrassing to the editor of The Temple Daily Telegram and others of his ilk to have their injustices and false assumptions exposed at a time when they are trying to make the world believe they are all out for democracy.

We agree with one thing in the editorial, and that is the statement that "it is time for some plain talk abut what is coming to be a serious national problem." The editor probably has not had an opportunity to lift his eyes and see that the race question has become involved in the issues of this war and it will not be settled when the last battle is fought, but will remain to plague all of us in the peace talk and in the years to come. His implication that Negroes should wait until after the war emphasizes his lack of knowledge of the situation. But his talking about the matter openly is proof of the fact that the race question has come in the open and is out to stay.

If we had an opportunity to talk to the editor, we would like to tell him that what he calls "the Negro problem" is the same problem America is having in its attempt to unify North and South America; the same problem that America is having in its relations with China; the same problem that England is having with India, and that they are having in Africa, and it is a problem that we will have to solve and that we can no longer put under the table.

OCT 24 1942

Neither is it so simple as a few "uppity" Negroes. The problem involves the question as to whether the white and dominant race is willing and ready to award to darker races the privlege of equality, justice and fair treatment, which the Constitution and the democratic way of life guarantee to all men, who achieve the status of citizenship. The trouble he talks about is now on the radio, in our daily papers, our magazines; it's in our war industries, and he is whistling in the wind when he thinks that he can frighten Negroes in Temple and settle this question.

"Split Personalities"

Again The News and Courier tells its readers that it may be in error and so may have been the last nine years about the New Deal and all its works.

How does The News and Courier know that the republic framed by the "fathers" in 1789 is not outworn, futile as a basis of government in 1933–1942, that it should not be filed in the Smithsonian Institution as an interesting and revered relic—and no more than a relic? Perhaps "democracy" should take the place of the republic in these "mod'n" times, the government should be centralized in Washington, the "socialized state" should be established and "social gains" never be abandoned.

The News and Courier is not infallible, nor is it a judge in Israel. The "leaders" of South Carolina, supported by the overwhelming majority of the state's people, accepted the New Deal, horns, hoofs, hair, handouts and all. (They digested the handouts.)

Now one observes South Carolina's New Dealers squirming and squealing and sobbing about details. They are afraid of the "negro question". They do not seem to wish the "damnable poll tax" abolished, although true New Dealers, or democrats, are consistent in damning it.

No democrat can object to the admission of negroes into white primaries, or to colleges, or to schools, or to hotels, because they are not white. In democracy (note we are not referring to the "Democracy" beginning with a capital "D") can be no color line. No democrat (small "d"), which is to say no liberal New Dealer, can say that the separation of the races practiced in Southern states is other than abominable without deserting and betraying his principles. The Southern New Dealers have principles; if they are unprincipled they should be interned.

One sees, one cannot but see, the Southern leaders of the New Deal still hanging around for subsidies and panting for them with their tongues out, trembling lest they offend the white folks back home about the "negro question" and stabbing the New Deal in the back. They are disloyal to the White House. They have their backs turned on the columnist, the president's wife now in England. It is discourteous. It is not "Southern chivalry". The White House New Dealers (Wendell Willkie has joined them) are democrats. No democrat draws a color line anywhere at any time. Numbers of the Southern, of the South Carolina, seers and prophets, all pretending to "liberalism" and dyed-in-the-wool adhesion to the president, are hindering and embarrassing him in his crusade for democracy. They badger and bother him about anti-lynching and poll tax repeal bills so that he is afraid to speak out about them, afraid to agree publicly with the pleadings of his own wife for democracy.

The News and Courier may be hopelessly in error in rejecting democracy, in rejecting the New Deal, but at least it is not riding two horses and galloping in opposite directions (the simile is not original), as the Southern New Dealers are doing.

There is not a Southern New Dealer now in prominent office who has not two faces, who is not a "split personality", who is not standing up when "down home" and on all fours frog-leaping toward the national treasury in Washington with New Dealers riding on his back. And his back is sore.

When The News and Courier joins the American democrats the men and women who now make it expect to get out of South Carolina and go to some farm district or small town in Ohio, New York, Vermont or Kansas, where democracy, however loudly it be proclaimed, is not practiced.

Mississippi Solon Raps Racial Equality

WASHINGTON. (AP)—Contending that the administration is enforcing social equality between Negroes and whites in public buildings and offices under its control, Rep. McGehee (D.-Miss.) told the House that the issue "is going to cause more trouble and bloodshed than the Civil War."

"The Negro race," he said yesterday," has not reached that stage of life that they can appreciate the falling of the manna from heaven. Certain classes of them are becoming arrogant, so much so until they are beginning to cause trouble throughout the land."

"WHITE FOLKS' PRIMER"

Apropos of the things which are distasteful to Negroes, is a letter printed in the "Letters to the Editor" section of the New York Times this week. That letter, characterized by Editor A. C. Powell jr as a "Primer for White Folks" is printed herewith:

Negroes Also Have Feelings

Distinguished Group Suggests Ways in Which These Might Be Regarded

OCT 24 1942

To the Editor of the New York Times:

We offer a list of situations wherein white people most often offend the feelings of Negroes. Unintentional slights are grouped with perversely malicious acts because what is done in honest ignorance by one person may be a deliberate insult by another. Perhaps there is scant logical justification for the Negro's sensitivity in some of these cases. Logic, however, is able to explain very little in the realm of personal attitudes, white or Negro.

1. The word Negro should always commence with a capital just as the words Jew and Indian. Such capitalization contributes to racial self-respect. Colored and black can begin with a small letter the same as white. The logic is that the term Negro refers to a specific racial group and hence deserves the capital. The terms colored, black, white, brown, yellow are simply descriptive of the color of one's skin.

2. Negroes like to be addressed by the customary titles of polite and civil society, Mr., Mrs., Miss. Where there is no familiarity they resent being addressed by their first names or by the slightly more formal last name. Adults dislike being called "boy," "girl," "aunty," "uncle." Negro women dislike the term Negress, because in Southern newspapers it is used in derogatory fashion.

OCT 24 1942

Epithets to Be Avoided

3. Taboo, of course, are the epithets "nigger" and "darky." Negro audiences do not appreciate them in jokes. The argument is that such jokes hold the Negro up to ridicule.

4. A sentimental tale about one's "old black mammy" will prevent or destroy rapport with a Negro audience. Colored students will frequently hiss a white speaker who eulogizes his father's old black mammy.

5. The Negro population has upper, middle, and lower class distinctions which closely approximate those of the white population. Snobbish, perhaps, but an upper class black intellectual does not like to be treated as some people treat their cooks. Negroes resent the blanket generalization that all of them are alike, just as do white people.

Movies Could Help

6. The movie industry seems determined to perpetuate a myth about the place of the Negro in contemporary America. Who has seen a movie in which a Negro was something other than a servant, buffoon or criminal? There is no reason why the movies should continue to be condescending or offensive in their portrayal of the Negro.

OCT 24 1942

7. Negroes want to be treated like ordinary human beings. Paternalism is almost as deadly a sin as deliberate mistreatment. The point at issue is that the Negro in America today feels that on the basis of accomplishment he should be treated as an equal. This, of course, is the crux of the problem.

Observance of the points mentioned will go far toward improving the relations of white and black in our common land. But surface politeness is not all that is needed. While mending our manners let us also give sustained thought to basic reforms that will extend democracy to our Negro fellow citizens. The solution of these problems cannot be achieved overnight, but to be aware of the evils of discrimination is a necessary step in planning for their eradication.

Things to Remember

Let us therefore bear in mind that by State law at least four million eligible Negroes are not permitted to register and vote; at least five million Negro children have schools below the minimum standards for white in the same areas; Negro youth have only one-fifth the opportunity of white youth to go to college.

At least seven million Negroes have pitiably inadequate hospitalization or none at all; there are thirteen million Negroes in America, about one million of whom are in the upper class; at least nine million Negroes live below the poverty line.

By law, or by policy approved or condoned by the Federal Government, Negroes can serve in the armed forces in only restricted capacities, whatever their abilities may be. Drafted Negro college graduates are finding it extremely difficult to work up through the ranks. Even the most ignorant Negro troops resent the way in which Negro ability is disregarded and not used.

Most Negroes are inclined to believe that they have everything to gain by a victory of the United Nations. But it is not enough to "incline to believe." They should be made to feel certain of it.

Negro Justice

While political pantywaists who run the liberalite magazines in New York fash themselves over polyracial utopias and light brown Americans, there is a piece of practical reform that Southern men of business ought to undertake that will genuinely improve the lives of men, both white and colored, south of the Mason and Dixon line. It is a simple matter of justice. There are no collectivist, neodealistic frills about it.

Negroes in the South should be able to depend upon the law for protection from physical harm. As things now are, they cannot. There is no guarantee to the Negro population of Charleston that if they are shot, stabbed, or beaten by negro outlaws, the crime will be punished in a manner proportionate to its heinousness.

If a white man kills a white man in South Carolina, the murderer is tried by a jury of his peers and may be condemned to punishment commensurate with his crime. If a negro kills a white man in South Carolina, the same process occurs. If a negro kills a negro, the killer is summarily tried and sentenced to serve a term of confinement that may be less than the penalty for second offense chicken stealing.

The result is that decent negroes of Charleston, the law abiding ones, and they are the great majority, live in terror of their lives when one of the cutthroat young bucks who divide their time between Harlem and the South is in the neighborhood. The dangerous negroes are aware, of course, that the punishment for killing their compatriots is light.

An argument advanced by complacent white men is that negroes are a childish people, incapable of cold blooded murder, that their killings are always crimes of passion, and therefore punishable only as manslaughter. They maintain that as these crimes are crimes of passion, they would not be diminished by harder punishment. Men who kill in passion have little time to think of consequences.

In certain cases, negroes are eminently capable of murder. Last year a negro man brutally murdered his wife on Meeting Street during a busy time in the afternoon. At least fifty people witnessed the crime. It was probably a crime of passion, for the man's wife, he said, had confiscated some of his money, but it was not the first one for him. He had killed a previous wife in the same way, and on that occasion had been sentenced to two years imprisonment. He is now, if the courts ran true to form, serving another two years. There is nothing to prevent him, when he is released, from marrying and dispatching another wife, and another, and another—one every two years until he has fulfilled his three score and ten.

Law is a matter of precedent and rule. Precedent prevails until [illegible] occurs to someone that the precedent is clearly wrong, and then a rule is entered to correct the precedent. The light punishment given negro murderers is a serious error of precedent. It ought to be corrected.

'ETHNIC DEMOCRACY'

An Editorial

Nov. 21, 1942

INTO A CHAOTIC WORLD groping through the darkness of a brutal Nazi-made war for a clear road to days of peace, there has come a brisk, refreshing breath of hope in the past several months.

It has been the exciting voice of a man growing with the hour in stature in the minds of the American people. And for the millions of Negro Americans, some angry, and aroused, some bitter and disillusioned, some solemn and forlorn, this man also shows a beacon.

He is our great Vice President, Henry A. Wallace.

His mark was branded on our democracy when he first set forth the concept that this is the century of the common man.

Now in a new significant address before the recent U.S.-Soviet Friendship congress in New York, Wallace has given the nation a new concept of democracy—what he calls "ethnic democracy."

Perhaps his term is a misnomer since ethnic pertains to contrasts in peoples rather than unity. But there certainly was no misunderstanding his words:

"Ethnic democracy means merely that the different groups must be given equality of economic opportunity . . . Russia has probably gone further than any other nation in the world in practicing ethnic democracy. From the Russians we can learn much, for unfortunately the Anglo-Saxons have had an attitude towards other races which has made them exceedingly unpopular in many parts of the world. We have not sunk to the lunatic fringe of the Nazi myth of racial superiority, but we have sinned enough to cost us already the blood of tens of thousands of precious lives. Ethnic democracy built from the heart is perhaps the greatest need of the Anglo-Saxon tradition."

These are bold, pioneering words in many ways. To thirteen million Americans with black skins, these words are salvation itself. They come to a people hungry for a sign from men in authority of sincere, deep-from-the-heart faith in living democracy.

Wallace has given us new spirit, new courage to carry on the indomitable struggle to win. He has uttered the precepts of an ideal that "neither might nor white is right."

Democratic State Executive Committee Chairman Complains Their Attitude Makes It Difficult to Raise Party Funds

56K

N.Y., N.Y.

PM's Bureau

Nov. 13, 1942

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A letter written by Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee of Alabama, protesting the attitude of the Roosevelt Administration and the party leadership toward Negroes, is figuring behind the scenes in the Senate battle over the poll tax.

The letter, insisting upon the maintenance of "white supremacy in the South," and protesting the activities of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, was sent by McCorvey to chairman Edward J. Flynn, of the Democratic National Committee.

"We simply have to maintain white supremacy in the South," McCorvey wrote. "We are going to maintain white supremacy in the South and there is just no rhyme or reason in the Federal Government, most especially during a Democratic Administration, taking such action as the Federal Government has recently been taking in connection with Government contracts in our section of the country.

"I can say to you without fear of contradiction by anyone who understands the Negro problems that President Roosevelt and his wife have done more towards upsetting and disturbing the friendly relations heretofore existing between the white people and the colored people of the South than all of the other Presidents and their wives who have occupied the White House during the time I have been old enough to take notice of such matters."

Raising Funds Difficult

McCorvey complained that he had been trying to raise party funds in Alabama, but had been met on all sides with statements that it would be impossible to get substantial money "until we first had some definite assurance from national headquarters that our party was going to turn over a new leaf insofar as the handling of the Negro situation in the South was concerned."

Southern poll-tax Senators called the McCorvey letter to the attention of Sen. Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.) yesterday in trying to persuade the Democratic leader not to make the motion calling up the Pepper-Geyer bill to abolish the poll tax. But Barkley rejected their appeals and announced he would make the motion. (Story on Page 12.)

McCorvey's letter said that "no right thinking Southern man is unjust or unfair to the colored race," but added:

"We will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having the white girls and white boys of our section working side by side with Negroes in factories or elsewhere, in filling Government contracts or any contracts."

The letter cited also the fight to repeal the poll tax, which McCorvey said "has made our people awfully sore with the national Government."

Denounces 'Rabble'

"I really see no reason why those in authority in Washington," he said, "should be trying to force the Southern States to let the bars down and eliminate the almost nominal sum of $1.50 per year for the privilege of voting."

McCorvey contended that "a great many of the thriftless, shiftless, worthless type of people, both colored and white, fail to pay their poll tax and, by reason thereof, we have a more intelligent electorate than exists in some States where all kinds of 'rabble' are permitted to vote without question."

Among those familiar with Alabama politics, the McCorvey letter is believed to be the opening gun in a campaign to elect Negro-baiting Gov. Frank M. Dixon, of Alabama, to the Senate in place of Sen. Lister Hill.

WHITE CHURCHMAN INDICTED AFTER STUDY MADE OF BOOKS

Nov. 19, 1942

56K

LOS ANGELES.—(ANP)—Scoring another victory for Negro papers in their fight for democracy and against race prejudice, the self-styled Father William R. Riker, bitter foe of Negroes, was arrested Friday of last week charged with sedition, by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Released under $7,500 cash bond by members of his colony near San Jose, Calif., he has been indicted.

Exposed by ANP Article

The arrest of the 68-year-old bearded patriarch, who 23 years ago set up a colony on some 100 acres, naming it "Holy City" has brought a sigh of relief not only to local citizens and fair-minded whites, but from all over the country whence protests began coming, following the expose of his real anti-Negro principles. This was a lengthy article by the coast reporter of the Associated Negro Press, who aided by a young colored sociology student, had digested the contents of seven of Riker's books. These, printed on Riker's own printing press by hatred-blinded followers with whom he had surrounded himself, were being secretly mailed to possible disciples of his "white supremacy" teachings. Among these were "God Speaks Through Holy City," "The Perfect Government," "The White Race Is Supreme," and others all full of bitter venom and suggestions of violence "if necessary" to drive the Negro "back to Africa."

Local Leader Swears Out Complaint

Immediately following release of the digest full page bannerlines appeared in most of the national papers frequently accompanied by editorial comment. The first books having been secured by "A. W." and the ANP representative by pretending they were sympathetic whites and giving false addresses other indignant race citizens followed suit, and also secured copies of the hateful literature.

But the first direct step to demand punishment for this agitator came from Sidney P. Dones, widely known civic leader, who called the Federal Bureau of Investigation early last April and arranged for a conference with him. Harry Levette, ANP representative, and John Taylor, ANP photographer. To their surprise, F. B. I. officials devoted more than an hour discussing the matter and at their request nine of the books were turned over to them. A sworn complaint was also entered, and since then the whole group has been hopefully waiting.

Tells ORT Keeping Peace Is Almost Herculean Labor

N.Y., N.Y.

Nov. 19, 1942

The suspicion and prejudice of national groups now assembled in America, all of them animated by two hatreds, one for the common enemy, the other for their own fellow-compatriots who differ from them in some point of policy or plans for the world after the war, was condemned yesterday by Hendrik Willem Van Loon, speaking at the annual membership tea of the Women's American ORT attended by 2,000 at the Waldorf-Astoria.

"To keep the peace between those contending groups is an almost herculean labor," he declared. He suggested that the chips on individual shoulders, now "lumber yards," be turned "into one great international bonfire."

The one weakness in the Nazi personality is sensitivity to ridicule, he declared, warning that the only way to put an end to Nazism was to make Nazis suffer "from that kind of ridicule which they fear as elephants are supposed to fear mice."

56K

The work of ORT in the camps of France where thousands of Jews are interned was praised by Pierre Dreyfus, son of Captain Alfred Dreyfus of Dreyfus case fame, who arrived here recently from Marseilles.

With the occupation of the whole of France by the Nazis, today the situation of the 110,000 Jews who live in the center and in the north has become increasingly worse, he said.

Expressing her congratulations and sympathy for the work of the ORT, Mrs. Anne O'Hare McCormick of THE NEW YORK TIMES, said she hoped she would never hear the word "minority" again in her life.

Other speakers included Mrs. Courtlandt T. Barnes, Mrs. Edward B. Gresser, national president of ORT, and Mrs. Alexander Dolowitz of New York.

Neglected or Unfinished

There is all the difference in the world between a job neglected and a job unfinished. This is one reason for congratulating the editors of The Survey Graphic on the happy choice of a title for their study of the race problem in the November number. They call it "Color: Unfinished Business of Democracy." They did not choose a subtitle like the failure of democracy, or the shame of democracy or the negation of democracy. It might so easily have happened formerly. It occasionally does happen even now when people have grown more careful about signalizing democracy's failure and shames.

The point we have in mind, this vital difference between a job neglected and a job unfinished, is illustrated in this number of The Survey Graphic by a double-page pictorial display concerned with the Negro in the U. S. A.

Negro Balance Sheet

The vivid little pictures and diagrams with a few words of text show that the Negro's life expectancy of 50 years is ten years shorter than the white American's life span, and childbed mortality among Negroes is three times as high as among whites. But a warning "Yet" calls attention to a diagram showing that the Negro death rate in half a century has been cut in two. Little pictures show that of children who have less than five years of schooling the colored youngsters are more than four times as many, proportionately. But another admonitory "Yet" calls attention to the fact that at the close of the Civil War only one in twenty Negroes could read, and today eighteen in every twenty can read. Even faster has grown Negro enrollment in the high schools, which increased tenfold between 1920 and 1940.

Negroes in School

There is no cautionary "Yet" between two pictures showing what Negroes earn in the cities of the North and what they earn in the rural South. Among the former we find that four out of ten Negroes earn less than $1,000 a year. This is another way of saying that six out of ten earn $1,000 a year or more. In the rural South it is only one in every ten Negroes who earns $1,000 a year or more. But it means that the Negro people in the North have made notable gains on the economic scale.

No doubt we have here given a somewhat different emphasis to the meaning of Unfinished Business from that intended by The Survey Graphic. Unfinished business may be two things. It may be a particular piece of business waiting to be started. It may be a piece of business not yet completed. American democracy's unfinished business with respect to the Negro's status in our nation may be made to mean that nothing has been done to improve that status. It may mean that much still remains to be done before the Negro has received his full share of justice and opportunity.

Only Losses Counted

That is what we meant by the difference between a job neglected and a job unfinished. It is a difference in emphasis that holds for other American problems than the Negro. Until a few years ago the dominant American mood was to stress the neglects and the failures and to overlook the achievements. For the Negro you quoted his higher death rates and his lower income and his inferior schooling, and so pronounced a verdict of failure. You failed to mention that the Negro's lower level nevertheless represented great progress and sometimes tremendous progress, as in the school figures; in other words, unfinished business.

---

Robbers Build Nation

It was a difference in emphasis that got into our writing about the American past. Historians dealing with our mighty economic expansion after the Civil War gave virtually all of their space to the Western landgrabbers and the railroad speculators and the robber trusts and the corrupt politicians; in other words, democracy's failure. Only toward the end of the chapter the historian would remark, to all intents and purposes, "Oh, now that I happen to think of it, while all this railroad wild-catting and land-boodling and other terrible things were going on, twenty-five million people came and made their homes in the Western country."

P.M. Bkn. N.Y.

Dear Editor:

I think that the black and white situation in this country is terrible.

If the white man was to give the Negro the same privileges as he inherits, it would be surprising the perfection which the colored race could obtain for themselves. Equal rights for all is soon to come and when it does, I am sure we shall all live in a smoother harmony.

Draft Boards and Bachelors

Dear Editor:

Many times I have read news items that draft boards would consider the status of single men who support invalid dependents. Yet I see how cruelly they act in many such cases. As long as one is single, some draft board just yanks him to the induction center, disregarding the extreme hardships thus created. Draft boards must become more human.

LIFE MAGAZINE AND PRESS FREEDOM.

AUG 18 1942

The administration has cracked down in arbitrary fashion on the current number of Life magazine. The Office of Censorship has denied the domestic issue a license to go thru the mails, and customs officials at the borders have been mutilating copies leaving the country. All this is being done because Life printed five pages of pictures and text called "Detroit Is Dynamite." The Detroit News, which ought to know, says the Life article is a "harsh indictment. To much of it Detroit must plead guilty, for the events mentioned are matters of record."

The article offends the burocracy because it tells some unpalatable facts about Detroit's failure to rise to the demands of all-out war and suggests that indifference and factional fighting are at the root of the trouble. The government, with complete control over all phases of the national life, has done nothing to resolve the problems which in Detroit are impeding production.

The administration must bear a large share of responsibility for the conditions that are portrayed. The class struggle got off to a running start in the sitdown strikes of 1937, which ran a violent course without a finger being lifted in hindrance by the New Deal governor, Frank Murphy, who subsequently was rewarded with a place in the Supreme court. Now that the whirlwind is being reaped, the burocracy takes characteristic refuge by trying to suppress the facts. Life's story is a severe condemnation of labor conditions in Detroit, and all over Michigan, where the New Deal permitted undeclared civil wars to rage, but Life did not create these conditions, nor can it be held responsible for them.

The only kind of news that the administration wants to reach the public is the goody-goody sort. The policy is deliberately intended to stultify the press, but a thousand affirmations that all's right with the world are not going to correct the basic defects that Life points out, nor will all the burocrats in Washington if they are set to work tearing out the pages of the offending article.

The disciplinary action against Life must be taken in connection with all of the other efforts to dominate the press, among them the flagrant and continuing attack with the purpose of destroying the Associated Press. In this attack, for the first time in history, the FBI was used for a political purpose when its agents were sent into newspaper offices as if to coerce independent editors. Life and its allied publications may have felt that their position as periodicals made it possible for them to view these developments with detachment, but the facts of life have now been forcibly brought home.

In the last 20 years there has been a steady upsurge all over the world of men who think themselves skilled in the arts of mastery. The symptoms of the authoritarian spirit are not always at once apparent, but they soon become so. The restraints to which people voluntarily submit in wartime offer additional opportunities of exploitation by the unscrupulous for their own ends. Even if the process is not conscious, the tendency is to limit rights of freedom and property. In enlightened lands like Britain, Canada, and other British dominions, we have seen these rights extinguished to an extent hitherto unimaginable.

In this country there have been men in high places who by their own words have shown that they are not disinclined to abuse the trust which, in time of war, must be reposed in the government. If the rights of American free men are to be destroyed, the first step will be to destroy the freedom of the press. The boast of an administration spokesman has already been heard that the government would yet exercise control of the press as fully as it now exercises control of steel and oil. For these reasons the arbitrary treatment of Life cannot be viewed with too much alarm by those who hope to preserve freedom in America.

uthern Girls In Washington Must Call Negroes "Mister"

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Southern girls, many of whom are from the Carolinas, now find that they must address Negro co-workers as "Mr," if males, and "Mrs" and "Miss" if females.

This was revealed today when a girl from the Carolinas, employed in the Library of Congress, received a notice from Herman H. Hinkle, director of the Processing department, as the cataloging and filing department of Library is known, telling her that the custom of addressing Negroes by their surnames was no longer permitted.

Practically one-fourth of the employes of the Library are Negroes and Negro employes as well as other Negroes dine in the great Library cafeteria, which is on the top floor of the main building, along with whites. This is a custom that has been in practice for several years and since social equality is now gaining a strong foothold in all governmental departments and agencies in Washington under the New Deal, this new order is the first that has been promulgated by which Negroes can not be addressed by their surname.

It reads as follows:

"To the Staff of the Accessions Division:

"It gives me sincere satisfaction to be informed that since March 11, members of the Assessions Division staff have cooperated in observing the normal formalities of business address.

"The altercations engaged in by certain members of the staff on March 11 are well known to all members of the division. They appear to have been settled on a personal basis to the satisfaction of all parties concerned without the necessity of any direct administrative action. It is my wish that no further occasions of this kind will arise in this department, and to this end I make the following statement:

"The long standing custom of some members of the staff of addressing Negro men employes by their surnames only is a discourtesy which violates the spirit of General Order 1052, declaring the opposition of the Library administration to discrimination against any employe, regardless of race, creed, or national origin. The use of the surname as a form of address is an informality commonly practiced between men and in itself obviously harmless. Where the practice is followed, however. as a mark of racial discrimination, it should not and will not be condoned.

"To each of the parties concerned in the present instance, I extend my most cordial thanks for your full cooperation.

"HERMAN H. HINKLE,
"Director of the Processing Dept."

Executive Committee Commends 'Manhood' In Resolution Here

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Governor Talmadge was sustained by the Georgia State Democratic Executive Committee Saturday in opposing coeducation of whites and Negroes, and administration leaders indicated he would make racial equality a principal issue in a campaign for re-election.

The committee unanimously adopted a resolution commending "the masterful manner" in which Talmadge handled state finances, and added:

"Whereas, he has been bitterly assailed, especially by interests from without the state, for his manhood and courage in thus upholding the sacred traditions of this state and the constitution he swore to defend,

"Now therefore, be it resolved that we commend him for his prompt and efficient action in this matter and for the manhood and fearlessness with which he faced this issue and dealt with it."

Talmadge, who has accepted an invitation to address a rally at Moultrie July 4—and presumably announce his candidacy—spoke briefly to the committee but avoided commitment on his plans.

Bryan Castelow, of Cuthbert, former congressman, keynoted the committee's endorsement of Talmadge with praise of Talmadge's fiscal management and a declaration that Georgia today faces a challenge of its state rights, as it did in the War Between the States.

"If the issue being made for us across state lines doesn't get a rise out of Georgia people," he declared, "I'll know the spirit of the Old South has gone to join that angel band." Then he continued:

"There's an element in the Northern states which ever since Lee's surrender at Appomattox has been trying to wipe out the color line. It's been trying to get racial equality. It's happening in Ohio—in the state of Jim Cox, the head of The Atlanta Journal. It's happened in the state where Dean Cocking came from. I commend Governor Talmadge for what he did. If he hadn't done it, he wouldn't have been fit to be Governor. Cocking should not only have been kicked out of Georgia, but out of Dixie."

Charges Denied

(Dean Walter Cocking of the University of Georgia School of Education was dismissed last summer after Talmadge charged—and Cocking denied—that the educator had advocated racial coeducation.)

J. O. Wall, of Eatonton, who told the committee he had been a farmer all his life, also commended Talmadge. Declaring he had often worked 100 Negroes on his land, Wall shouted:

"I like Negroes. I like 'em in their place. And their place is in the cotton field, hoeing and chopping cotton."

Wall challenged what he described as "Yankee influence" in Georgia colleges and said: "In a certain college there are 85 teachers today and 80 per cent of them are Yankees—and 80 per cent are advocating racial equality."

Saying Talmadge supporters would campaign on the issue, Wall shouted:

"In my section you're either for Talmadge or against him. And if you say you're gonna vote against him, we'll ask you whether you're for racial equality, and I can tell you you'll have a fight on your hands."

T. Hicks Fort, of Columbus, describing Talmadge as "one of the soundest, sanest, most courageous and most efficient governors in the history of Georgia," castigated the newspapers for criticism of Talmadge.

"There is enough and has been enough taking place in Georgia in the previous administration," he said, "to give them sufficient to comment upon and help to rectify. They ought to lay off Gene Talmadge. They are doing the state a great disservice; they are like wolves in sheep's clothing when they charge him with playing politics. They are playing the lowest, most despicable politics when they try to damn him."

Fort attacked the newly formed Student Political League, which he said was "doing an ungrateful thing after Gene Talmadge made the University System what it is and helped the teachers," adding:

"They follow the lead of sure-enough furriners in trying to damn him and tear him down. They are caught in their own enthusiasm and misled by the press."

Charles Redwine, president of the state senate and long a Talmadge adherent, told the committee "the people of Georgia either love the governor or hate him—and about 75 per cent love him and are going to elect him governor."

JUN 24 1942

New York World Telegram

Recognition of the rights of minorities has been part of the evolution of America and is part of its present strength, Wendell L. Willkie says in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Development of intolerance and oppression will weaken our fighting strength, he warns.

"Today we are living once more in a period that is psychologically susceptible to witch-hanging and mob-baiting," he writes. "And each of us, if not alert, may find himself the unconscious carrier of the germ that will destroy our freedom."

"Minorities are rich assets of democracy, assets which no totalitarian government can afford. Dictatorships must, of necessity, fear and suppress them."

A PHILIP RANDOLPH — OUR NEW LEADER

The lack of dynamic, practical and uncompromising leadership pressing forever onward the legitimate demands of the masses, has been the greatest handicap to the solution of the Negro problem. Although every major national crisis in the past has brought forth some kind of a Negro leadership, that leadership, however, has been of the wrong kind—the kind that could either be bribed into compromise or silenced by threats.

JUL 11 1942

For awhile it appeared that the burden of promoting the just cause of the Negro would have to be borne by enlightened, sympathetic whites of the moral and intellectual stature of Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Buck and Mr. Willkie. The Negroes who, though devoid of the requisite qualifications, would have catapulted themselves into leadership were dissuaded from such step by the very militancy of the new generation of Negroes who brook no compromise. They were forced to recoil into their shells.

Times and circumstances create great men; men who have courage, determination and a self-sacrificial spirit to carry on their work at the risk of forfeiting their own personal freedom. For the first time in our history, the Negro has found a clear-visioned, practical yet fearless leader: A. Philip Randolph.

JUL 11 1942

It was he who initiated the "March On Washington" that resulted in the issuance of the President's Executive Order forbidding racial discrimination in the defense industries, and creating the Fair Employment Practice committee. It is he who is organizing the masses on a scale unparalleled since the collapse of the Garvey movement. It is he who has come forward with a program and the means to achieve it. He says:

"The main and basic responsibility for effecting the solution of the Negro problem rests upon Negroes themselves. We believe that Negroes should supply the money and pay the price, make the sacrifices and endure the suffering to break down the barriers to a realization of full citizenship rights in America. The March On Washington movement believes in racial equality, and we propose to fight for it with all our might. It rejects the doctrine of racial supremacy of Adolf Hitler in Germany and Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia.

"We believe in the technique and method of mass action as an expression of Negro power to batter down all forms of racial segregations and discriminations. We are opposed to any movement or propaganda against white people and any movement or propaganda of anti-Semitism, anti-Catholicism, or anti-foreignism or anti-labor. The basic principle of the March On Washington movement is democratic. It believes wholeheartedly in the cause of the United Nations and seeks to aid in achieving victory of the armed forces of the United Nations over the Axis powers."

This is the type of leadership that all of us should endorse, and must endorse if we hope to achieve our goal in this world and take our rightful place in this democracy.

COMMUNISM AND THE NEGRO

THOSE who remember the bitter fights led by the National Negro Congress, the International Labor Defense, the New York Daily Worker and other Communist-supported organizations in behalf of the Scottsboro boys, the share-croppers, the WPAers and Home Reliefers—the ignorant, disfranchised and oppressed peoples of this country—during the depression days must be mystified at the present attitude of the Communist Party and its supporters.

Since Russia entered the war on the side of the Allies, they have taken the position that winning the war, and opening a second European front to help the Russians beat Germany are the paramount issues and the discussion of any domestic issues at this time is disrupting to the war unity so necessary to victory.

Instead of leading the fight against discrimination and jim-crowism of the Negro, Ben Davis jr., of the Daily Worker and Dr. Max Yergan of the National Negro Congress and others of kindred thought are now political bedfellows with the white South and its leaders who insist that now's the time to keep silent on these issues.

The National Negro Congresss instead of trying to aid the March On Wahsington Committe in its protest mass meeting at Madison Square Garden spent several hundred dollars advertising in the Negro press in what was construed by many as [illegible] attempt to sabotage this meeting. Th[illegible] intimated that this demand for full and equal participation in the war effort on the part of the of the Negro was hampering the war effort warned:

> "Those who would use selfishly the just demands of the Negro people to obstruct America's war program are not friends of the Negro. They work for Hitler."

And in The Sunday Worker of June 14, Ben Davis used two full columns in an open letter to A. Philip Randolph to explain why The Worker could not give publicity to the Madison Square Garden mass meeting. The burden of his argument was the same as that of Westbrook Pegler—that agitation for democracy at home at this time is hampering the war effort—but Pegler was more candid and terse than our Communist friends.

It's a strange sight to see known Communists who led a wave of strikes under the banner of the CIO, prior to June 1941, and who have been the severest critics of American democracy, now prate about their patriotism and love American institutions, including race prejudice as practiced in this country.

The Negro can less afford to keep silent at this time than at any time in his history. For the record shows that we only get what we are willing to fight and die for. At the same time we are fighting to repel an invading foe, we must insist that our neighbors here at home realize and recognize us as and give us all the rights and privileges of Americans too.

REP. RANKIN OF MISSISSIPPI

Irked by the campaign to abolish poll tax in southern states, Representative John E. Rankin of Mississippi accused the publishers of PM of promoting a drive for a Negro march on Washington. Unless too high an estimate is placed upon his intelligence, Representative Rankin has purposely misrepresented the facts. There is no plan that we know for a march on the nation's capital. The "March On Washington" is the name of a committee which is sponsoring mass meetings in various major cities for the purpose of rallying the Negro people to the cause of American democracy—a cause that is imperiled no less by Fascists abroad than by men of Rankin's ilk at home.

The prospect of a march on Washington, though a hallucination, is not what is disturbing Representative Rankin's conscience, if he has one. What really agitates him to the point of foaming at the mouth, is the momentum the campaign to outlaw poll tax has gained in recent weeks. He is concerned because he knows well what the political consequences would be if an anti-poll tax law should be passed by Congress. He knows that he would probably be among the southerners whose seats in Congress would be affected by this law. He is not deluding anybody with his ranting about national unity. If he were concerned about national unity, he would try to mitigate the economic and social abuses committed against the Negroes of his own state, and remove the thick veil of ignorance and prejudice that covers the faces of the white Mississippians.

The sooner men like Rankin are removed from Congress or from the civilized world for that matter, the better it will be for humanity and democratic civilization.

Speaks Not for Greenville

The News and Courier, October 31, printed, from a pamphlet issued in 1939 by the census bureau (Harry L. Hopkins being secretary of commerce), instructions to physicians, in case of birth of a child one of whose parents was white and the other negro, to enter the record "white". "The information", the pamphlet reads, "shows the race or the color of the child and is used in computing birth rates by color and race."

November 11 came a letter from J. C. Capt, director of census, saying in substance that the expression in the pamphlet did not mean what it said and that the child, when one of the parents is a negro is classified by the census as negro. This had been the custom of the bureau more than twenty years, the director said. (The pamphlet was issued in 1939.) The News and Courier received the director's explanation, despite its want of good manners in expression, with satisfaction and relief and said that public service had been done by it.

November 15, The News and Courier printed a letter from Julian Mitchell saying that the construction put by The News and Courier on the registration of the birth of a child as set forth in the instructions issued by the department, "was exactly in accord with the construction placed thereon by one of the large hospitals at the North, who instructed its employe charged with the registration of births, to enter such child as white and answered her protest by referring to the regulations issued by Mr. Harry Hopkins as secretary of commerce in 1939".

Now comes The Greenville News quoting, with lip-smacking glee, Director Capt's charge that The News and Courier has made "a direct misstatement of fact".

The Greenville News, if it does not know that Julian Mitchell is a responsible man, can find out who he is by inquiring in Main street, Greenville. This newspaper makes plain disapproval of The News and Courier's action in forcing an explanation from the director of the census. Its editorial is reprinted in The News and Courier as a specimen of the flippancy with which it can treat a subject of this kind, and from which might be drawn the inference that the practice of the Northern hospital mentioned in Mr. Mitchell's letter would excite no comment or opposition from it were a hospital in Greenville, construing the instructions of the census bureau in 1939 to mean what the words say, to order its employe to act accordingly.

The Man With His Head Up

In a temperate, balanced and just discussion by the writer of "Topics of The Times", in The New York Times, the progress of the negroes in the United States is discussed. The essence of it is that, while the negroes have not nearly arrived at the economic level of the white Americans, their advances have been great and they are going on. The mortality rate of negroes is still large, compared with that of the whites ,but "in half a century it has been cut in two". In 1865 one in twenty negroes could read; now only two in twenty cannot read.

Whatever progress the negroes have made has been caused by association with the white race. (it has not been recorded in Africa or in the West Indies), and 8,500,000 of 13,000,000 negroes live in the Southern states. Until migration on large scale began twenty-odd years ago, the proportion of American negroes in the South was much larger than it is now. The News and Courier does not expect Northern agitators for "racial equality" to acknowledge the facts.

———

The article in The Times, quoting from The Survey Graphic, mentions that four of ten negroes earn less than $1,000 a year, that in the rural South only one in ten earns $1,000 a year or more. It does not mention that a negro family in Harlem must pay $25, perhaps $40, a month for a home, while in the South a sharecropper or tenant has the cabin free of rent and the negro family in the village pays $4 to $6 a month at most. New York's way of reckoning is limited to dollars; New York is blind to the truth that a dollar stretches four or five times as much in the rural South than when it is spent for a fifth-story apartment. Further, it is blind to the truth that a two-room cabin, though cracks in its weather-boarding may sometimes let in too much light and air, has a plot of ground, a vegetable garden, appurtenant which a fifth-story city apartment has not. (Too many sharecroppers and tenants do not plant and cultivate the "garden spot".)

———

Separated from "Topic of the Times's" article by a column rule is an editorial about "New York's Job Problem", saying that, "in New York City, the greatest industrial city in the nation, are large unemployment, idle factories and idle machines, while many of its small businesses face the threat of extinction. . . . A considerable number of the 22,500 small plants in this city face great difficulties".

In the jammed city the high rents must be paid; the freight charges on the food and raw materials must be paid; were the white worker or the negro not paid three times as many dollars as the rural worker in the South receives he would starve or freeze, and that he is so paid it accounts for the difference that the farmer and the "middleman" receive for a bushel of sweet potatoes or a crate of tomatoes.

These negroes who live in the rural South and are paid less than $1,000 a year are not like the idle and the unemployed in New York. If they be able-bodied they are not idle; they are not unemployed. They are not on relief rolls. They are not hungry. They are not beggars.

———

Governor Jefferies of South Carolina is trying to prevent the soliciting of laborers to leave South Carolina. The News and Courier does not approve that policy, unless the solicitation be that laborers breach contracts, but it remarks that no prohibitory license fees are needed to prevent solicitation of laborers to leave New York. New York's idlers would be the last to separate from its "American standard of living". They must have that "standard of living" though they sit on their haunches with tongues out and beg government for it.

They have contempt and loathing for the rural workers, the "hicks", in the South. They denounce the plight of the sharecropper, they denounce the white employer for not doubling or trebling his wages. (There are no millionaire farmers.) This scorn, this contempt, this loathing, is planted and fertilized in them by New York's "intellectuals", by some of its great newspapers.

The Southern sharecropper, the rural white or negro family in the South, is not worrying about New York's idlers. He is not a beggar. He can hold his head up. He has self-respect. He has a right to it.

EMPHASIZING OUR GRIEVANCES

MANY WHITE PERSONS, unfamiliar with the problems of the Negro in this country, would get the impression from reading Negro newspapers that the discriminations, segregation and other ills suffered by our race are over-emphasized. Lest some of our Negro readers feel the same way, we are quoting herewith from a letter sent Chairman Edward J, Flynn of the Democratic National Committee by Gessner T, McCorvey, chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee of Alabama.

The letter, insisting upon the maintenance of "white supremacy in the South," and protesting the activities of President and Mrs, Roosevelt said:

Nov 28, 1942

"We are going to maintain white supremacy in the South and there is just no rhyme or reason in the federal government, especially during a Democratic Administration, taking such action as the federal government has recently been taking in connection with government contracts in our section of the country. . . .

"We will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having the white girls and white boys of our section working side by side with Negroes in factories or elsewhere, in filling government contracts, or any contracts."

New York Age
N.Y.

In this confidential communication the Alabama politician expresses the opinion of most southern white people, and of many other white people living in other parts of the country. They would rather lose the war than accord to the Negro the full equality of citizenship which is theirs by all the rules of fair play and justice in a democratic form of government and which was earned by centuries of toil in the building of this country and on thhe battlefields of all our wars in defending their native land.

The South is alarmed because President handling war contracts because of race, color or creed, is being enforced in some parts of the country and an effort is being made to enforce the order in the South. This alarm is expressed in an increase in lynchings and other methods of intimidation. Mr. McCorvey and others who think like him, would like to have the federal government become a part of a policy of jim-crowism, discrimination and pay differentials which would make our claims of democracy a stock joke with other nations of the world.

The South would like to have the Negro Roosevelt's Executive Order 8802 which prevents discrimination in those plants acquiesce to a double-standard of democracy and would like to keep the whole thing quiet. But the Negro newspapers feel that by keeping the public informed on such matters they are helping to force the government to live up to our constitution, and by so doing they are rendering a public service.

New York Age
N.Y.

Only so long as the Negro Press is able t speak out against the injustice of the South's position in regard to the Negro will there be hope for eventual democracy for us all. When the Press is muzzled, and particularly the Negro Press, democracy will cease to exist for any of us.

OUR SOCIAL STATUS

Nov. 28, 1942

56K

In the hectic flurry of joining the military forces of the nation and buying War Bonds and Stamps with patriotic fervor, Colored Americans are pausing here and there to inquire into their status after the war has ended and the peace has been declared.

One of the most pertinent queries posed by the darker patriots is: "Where will we fit in the economic structure of the nation after the conflict?"

It is well agreed by leading economists that the Government is going to hold a strong hand in the private business of the country for years and years to come. Many predict that a socialistic system of some form is bound to come. Colored Americans are now peering into the future and exhibiting remarkable foresight and rare intelligence. It would no doubt clear up all conflicting opinions and explode many existing vagaries if the colored people presented a clear-cut, comprehensive manifesto at an early date. The Government and the American people would be benefitted by having a realistic picture of our present status and our future desires and ambitions.

If the submerged minority—the darker people of the United States—are to share equitably and justly in the benefits of the peace that will inevitably come, then it follows just as light follows the darkness, that the social status of the Colored American must be changed.

Already alert and ferret-minded whites are sharp enough to inquire whether or not the colored people, in their clamor for war jobs and parity in the Armed Forces, are not also seeking social equality.

It dawns upon those who formerly asserted that the Colored American is only seeking economic and political equality, that there can never be any such realization until the social status has been changed and fixed.

The industrial structure of this nation has been so welded that the role of the black man is doomed to that of a laborer or a menial unless his social status is changed. Big Business in this country continues to be conducted, to a large degree, in the banquet halls, on the golf courses and in the private homes of the financial overlords. If our people are to remain not only as consumers, but also as producers, then the charmed circle must be broken.

White America has systematically barred black people from securing representative positions in consonance with their buying power, because these positions would entail social intermingling of the races. That must be changed if the Government intends to function as a Democracy.

If turban-headed Hindus, swarthy Brazilians, Japanese diplomats, Italian courtiers and German phlegmatists are to be treated as social equals and be permitted to sit "inside the circle," after the peace has been won, we can't be shut out. If this happens, then we will be both damned and doomed without recourse.

Your country is selling bonds. We are buying them to the utmost of our ability. These bonds must be repaid by the taxes of oncoming generations. The Government, with its hand in business, will see that these taxes are paid. The Government, knowing that the "power to tax is the power to destroy" is encompassed with the duty of changing our status.

We are not concerned with intermarriage. People should marry whom they please. But we are concerned with the color bar which deprives us of an opportunity to get out of the labor ghettoes. The manifesto that we shall sooner or later present to the Nation, should and must contain a provision dealing, without deceit or subterfuge, with the social status of the darker people.

THE SURVEY GRAPHIC'S SPECIAL NUMBER ON "Color: Unfinished Business of Democracy" contains many excellent articles, including several on the status of Negroes in the African colonies, and of these none is more timely than a portrait of Felix Eboue, Negro governor of the Chad region, who has kept millions of natives on the side of the Fighting French. A copy of it should be laid on Cordell Hull's desk. Eboue is a great fighter and a statesman of vision; he strikes us as a far more desirable ally than some who have recently been adopted by the United States. As a matter of fact the Survey Graphic's issue as a whole should have the widest possible reading, for it presents an extremely interesting and lively analysis of one of the pressing problems of our time.

PLAYING BOTH ENDS TO THE MIDDLE

Nov. 28, 1942

Informer

56K

The Congressional Record (Nov. 5, 1942) carried at Hon. Sam Hobbs' (Alabama) recommendation a long editorial by columnist Paul Mallon. The editorial does a perfect job of being on all sides as well as right in the middle of proposed legislation on poll tax and lynching. Beginning with the false assumption that no one ever expects an anti-lynch bill to pass; he admits that there is a Negro problem. The problem is due, it is said, purely to the fact that the Negro has not satisfied social, economic and educational requirements. The Negro must earn by his personal attainments the positions to which he is politically and legally entitled. This is double talk if ever there was such a thing. As would be expected in a treatise of this type, the Reconstruction Period and the attendant political advantages which were offered the Negro are cited as proof that the Negro is not ready for his rightful heritage.

Now on the other end is the argument that Negroes should be given more schools and better teachers in order that children may advance themselves and pay their poll taxes. We can hardly believe that the sound reasoning that prompted the writer to point to inequalities in school facilities proceeded from the same brain that argues that the Negro could demand jobs to which he is legally entitled were he qualified. It is widely known that in many areas of the country qualifications are not even investigated when one's racial identity is known. Many Negroes who are familiar with this unfortunate situation make it a point to indicate their racial identity before wasting money and time for interviews.

Nov. 28, 1942

Same Vicious Circle

The familiar circle in which the Negro has been bandied about for lo these many years is the old gag of not hiring Negroes because they are not prepared, not preparing them because there is no demand, and it's seldom stated counterpart; not demanding them because they are Negroes.

Many Negroes and whites may be gullible enough to sanction the studied argument which Mr. Mallon's editorial presents, on the score that he argues for an improvement of educational facilities for Negroes. The Informer has thrown its full strength behind the movement to get equal educational facilities for Negroes, but realizes that one must be extremely mindful of those persons who get on all ends of questions which affect the welfare of the Negro. Persons who play both ends to the mddle not only tend to play out, but fail to get their several axes ground well enough to get them in shape for actual cutting.

Exclusive

Party machinery in Alabama has just informed National Chairman Edward J. Flynn that it will have no part in raising funds for the party.

In a letter to the national committee, Gessner T. McCorvey, Alabama state chairman, declared that the party leaders in Alabama considered it "utterly impossible to raise any substantial sum" in Alabama because of the administration's "handling of the Negro situation." This includes Roosevelt's executive order No. 8802 and the insistence of government war agencies, including the Army and Navy, that war contractors hire, train and promote Negroes without discrimination.

"We will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having the white boys and girls of our section working side by side with Negroes in filling government contracts or any contracts is unthinkable and unworkable," he said. "As you know, printed on our ballots is the emblem of our party in Alabama with the words 'White Supremacy' as our motto. We simply have to maintain white supremacy in the South."

"President Roosevelt and his wife have done more toward upsetting and disturbing the friendly relations heretofore existing between the white people and the Colored people of the South than all of the other Presidents and their wives who have occupied the White House during the time I have been old enough to take notice of such matters," McCorvey said.

POLL TAXERS

An additional reason for refusing funds to the national party, McCorvey said, is the support given by the administration to the move to abolish the poll tax. Defending the poll tax, he said it merely bars the "thriftless, shiftless, worthless type of people" and results in Alabama having "a more intelligent electorate than exists in some states where all kinds of rabble are permitted to vote without question."

The significance of the McCorvey letter can be readily seen in the light of a speech made by Congressman Sam Hobbs at Jacksonville, Alabama, last night. He called for the preservation of states' rights as the "pearl of great price" and declared that such administration-sponsored measures as federalization of social security, the soldiers' vote bill, the anti-poll tax bill, constituted "the blackest page in legislative history." He called for an offensive, "in the political field" against such legislation.

Under the leadership of Governor Dixon, the anti-Roosevelt faction is launching a new offensive throughout the South to disrupt the administration's war program.

The Southern people and their organizations, especially the trade unions, must rally to the support of the war program of the commander-in-chief and must repudiate the back-stabbing tactics of the Dixonites.

Mrs. Luce Raps Prejudice And Racial Hatred

Says Cooperation Is Vital Keynote To Total Victory

56K

Nov. 22, 1942

NEW YORK—(ANP)—Mrs. Clara Booth Luce, Connecticut congresswoman-elect and wife of the publisher of Luce publications, joined the increasing ranks of whites who are demanding now that the colored peoples of the world, including those at home, be given immediate assurances that "they are not fighting for the white man's supremacy anywhere." She was one of the long list of distinguished speakers before the New York Herald Tribune Forum on Current Problems.

Citing racial cooperation as "the keynote of our resistance, as it must be the arch of our victory," Mrs. Luce urged her hearers to further this spirit both at home and abroad "with our loyal colored citizens and allies of different races." She judged that in this way "we will feel better, fight better and have a far better chance to endure."

FIGHT FOR FREEDOM

Mrs. Luce reviewed the resistance to fascism of the Chinese, the Ethiopians, the Indians, Africans and Filipinos. She emphasized that it was the Ethiopians who first undertook the fight against fascism. She answered her question as to what these colored peoples are fighting for. They want to believe, she said, that the white races are waging the war for freedom fo rall, on the "noble proposition that all men are created free and equal."

"If we don't believe it," she added, "if any of us has any sly reservations in his mind on the subjects of racial subjugation, of the white man's supremacy, after this war is over, he is due for an even nastier shock than any that his enemies have to date given him Therefore, I think that it is quite proper, and quite safe today for us in this forum, to ask ourselves honestly and fearlessly: 'Are we Americans really waging a war for the freedom of all men regardless of color?' "

Mrs. Luce expressed awareness that many whites in the United States "have not courageously faced the same issue here at home. We are still guilty of practicing some of the same hard discriminations and perpetuating some of the same cruel oppressions against our own colored citizens while we condemn our axis enemies."

RAPS DISCRIMINATION

She pointed to the Sikeston lynching "before the smoke of Pearl Harbor had cleared away," the discrimination Negro soldiers meet here and abroad, segregation, job denial, assault and the assorted forms of oppression. She even offered statistics to back up her remarks. She dwelt at length on discrimination in war work.

"Every colored worker barred from the factory will in the end, cost the life of some American soldier," she declared. "I repeat, when we discriminate against colored workers in our war effort. in the end we simply discriminate against white soldiers. For the lack of that extra tommy gun or bullet, which some colored workers might have made, your son may tomorrow be lying dead in a nameless grave, from which he will never rise, though he fought well and valiantly in the war for democracy. It is in this tragic way that the chickens of racial prejudice will come home to roost....or rather the vultures of prejudice which are even now picking white the bones of our white sons on the battlefield."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—A nationwide drive to tell the white people of the country what the 13,000,000 Negroes think about discrimination against them will be launched next week by the National Non-Partisan Council on Public Affairs of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

The Sorority, composed of Negro women, is urging its 5000 members in 46 States to conduct an intensive campaign all next week to get their story across. Norma Boyd, of Washington, is national chairman of the drive.

Using the slogan "Listen America," the message the Negro women will try to get across is this:

"We still believe that America is fair-minded. We believe that if America knew how Negroes felt, it would treat them fairly, too. We feel that their story has not been told in full to white America.

"Listen, America! To date we still are losing the war. American Negroes want to win this war, perhaps, more than any other minority group, for we have no other home. We cannot go 'back to the old country,' because for us there is no 'old country' to which we can go. America is our home. We know no other.

"Listen, America! We are not being allowed to put into this war the skills that we have that this Nation needs. We still are being discriminated against in war industries.

"Listen, America! We can fight better in an American army—not a Negro army. We can die with better grace and higher morale in an American army.

"Listen, America! We want to go into an American navy, not a Negro navy.

"Listen, America! We want to go into the American WAVES, not be excluded. We want to go into the American WAACS, not Negro WAACS.

"Listen, America! We want the four freedoms right here in America; then we will have the heart to fight for the four freedoms for the Poles, the Czechs, and the Slovenes.

"Listen, America! We want equality of opportunity. We want what every American wants—no more, no less—only this is democracy.

"Listen, America! We want decent homes.

"Listen, America! We don't want to be lynched, and segregated.

"Listen, America! We are tired of exploitation and disfranchisement, and inferior schools and being politically lynched.

"Listen, America! We are tired of exploitalets intended to make us feel better. They don't. What we want is action, in every Federal department. This, and this alone, will make democracy work at home for all Americans.

"Listen, America! We want representation on all policy-making boards and commissions.

"America, how would you feel if you were in our place?"

'FATHER' RIKER SAYS WAR CHANGED VIEWS

DEC. 11, 1942

Defendant at Sedition Trial Regrets Some Earlier Writings

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 10—"Father" William E. Riker, head of the Holy City religio-economic colony in the Santa Cruz Mountains, voiced regret at his sedition trial today for the language he had used in some of his writings on "race purity." This country's entry into the war altered some of his ideas, he told Federal Judge A. F. St. Sure and a jury of six men and six women.

The 68-year-old defendant testified that he wrote "The White Race Is Supreme," because he was "irritated" at Fathe Divine. The book was banned from the mails some months ago.

DEC. 11, 1942

"Huey Long thought I had the grandest ideas he ever heard and wanted me to come to Louisiana, but I never did," he asserted.

"Father" Riker declared that his patriotism was shown by 2,300 placards he had printed months ago, reading: "We Are Convinced: to Hell With Hitler."

STATE DEMOCRATS RAP PARTY'S RACIAL POLICY

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 10—(AP)—Federal handling "of the Negro situation in the South" has made it impossible for the Democratic party to raise any substantial sum in Alabama, Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, wrote national party officials Tuesday.

McCorvey's letter, written to E. Ray Scott, of the treasurer's office of the Democratic National Committee, also was sent to Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn.

McCorvey, in releasing the letter for publication, said he did not desire to "stir up trouble," but he felt it his duty to inform the party leaders of sentiment in this section.

The letter was written, he said, in response to an appeal from the national committee for organization of a fund raising campaign.

The state chairman said he had talked with numerous party leaders in this state and that "I was met with the statement that it would be utterly impossible to raise any substantial sum from Alabama Democrats until we first had some definite assurance . . . that our party was going to turn over a new leaf in so far as the handling of the Negro situation in the South was concerned."

McCorvey said he was convinced any fund raising campaign was futile until "those in authority at national headquarters stop trying to work out a social revolution during war times."

Turn to Page 2, Column 6

"The Negroes are our problem and we care for them in a way that they are not cared for in any other section of the country," the letter stated.

"However, we will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having the white girls and white boys of our section working side by side with Negroes in factories or elsewhere in filling government contracts or any contracts is just unthinkable and unworkable."

McCorvey added:

"President Roosevelt and his wife have done more towards upsetting and disturbing the friendly relations heretofore existing between the white people and the colored people of the South than all of the other presidents and their wives who have occupied the White House during the time I have been old enough to take notice of such matters."

Race Interference Deplored By Negroes

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 3. (AP)—A group of Demopolis, Ala., Negroes deplored today "outside interference by people of any color who do not or will not understand the spirit of respect and mutual helpfulness" between white and Negro residents of the Alabama Black Belt.

The position was taken in a resolution adopted at a Negro mass meeting held recently to celebrate over-subscription of their quota in the state war chest campaign. Governor Dixon's office disclosed the resolution yesterday in a letter from the Demopolis Chamber of Commerce.

White and Negro workers were called on in the resolution to "cease this sabotage" of striking in war industries.

Appreciation was expressed for "the privilege of being able to carry our share of the burden in this (war chest campaign) and other all-out war efforts." The group said it considered "it a distinct honor to have been given this obligation" and added:

"* * * We are grateful for the fine spirit of mutual respect and mutual confidence which exists now, and has existed for so many years in this part of the Southland between the white and colored races."

Pursuit Of Democracy

BY MARJORIE McKENZIE

MISS McKENZIE BELIEVES SOMETHING SHOULD BE DONE ABOUT SUCH SOUTHERN LIBERALS AS JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES, JONATHAN DANIELS

SOMETHING ought to be done about these venomous little pieces that are emanating from the pens of southern white liberals such as John Temple Graves and Jonathan Daniels. Both have been passing as friends of the black man. Their word supposedly was due for extra weight, since in spite of growing up in the atmosphere of traditional southern racial attitudes, they had "got religion" and could rally converts to our side more skillfully. Recent-cently, they have taken to devoting entire literary efforts, instead of mere humorous references, to their opinions about the Negro in the South.

Miss McKenzie

NO HOPE SEEN

MR. Graves has a frank and unadorned article in the Autumn number of the Virginia Quarterly Review. In it he says, "A fact as sure as science is that the white majorities of the South are unwavering and total in their determination not to have race segregation abolished....but it does not preclude a constant improvement in the Negro's side of Jim Crow." Mr. Daniels, a Southern editor who is now Assistant Director of OCD, talks about "New Patterns for Old" in the November issue of Survey Graphic in a commentary on the newly rich in the wartime South. For example, "In the situation the Negroes and their friends seemed to talk with the most logic. But old prejudice seemed to exert the most power....Not many Southerners see hope for the future in present difficulties. The years behind look better to them....Perhaps the South should divide what it does possess in absolute equality. That is easier to propose when there is enough to go around....Some Negro leaders irritate me to anger, when in the 'Double V' language of two victories or none, they discuss conditions precedent upon which full Negro participation for America in this war depends." There is a great deal of this sort of thing in Mr. Daniels' self-conscious style which contains very little idiomatic English and might have to be read twice for clarity, except by poor saps like me already familiar with it by mistakenly having followed him in The Nation.

AN INCAUTIOUS EXPOSE

WHILE, on one hand, speech may be ambiguous, easily colored by a facial expression, the tone of voice, or a gesture, there is nothing as stark, as unalterable, as definite of intent as the written word. It seems that up to now, Mr. Graves, Mr. Daniels and their ilk have been wooing us in an off-the-record, undocumented campaign, in which they have gained reputations as liberals. However, the militancy of Northern Negro leadership on the war aims of the Negro, at last has driven them to an incautious expose of what they truly think of racial patterns in the South. In subscribing to Mark Ethridge's now famous statement that the combined armies of the world could not make the South give up segregation, they do incalculably more harm to racial progress than the wildest ravings of a bigot like Bilbo. Make no mistake about it, these men are neither inexperienced nor unsophisticated writers. The purpose of all this unsought advice is to make it clear in sweetly reasonable words, written by a "friend of the Negro," that it's no use, the framework is set for all time, and we must learn to work peaceably if hopelessly within it for a bigger and better Jim Crow world.

Dec. 5, 1942

"VIOLENT CIVIL WAR"

IT is of course worth the shock to find them out. It means that in the North we won't have to alter our strategy out of consideration for this kind of Southern white "liberal" any more than we have been altering it for the poll tax filibuster bloc or the so-called Southern Negro leaders who are their dupes. Men like Graves and Daniels have robbed themselves of a chance at immortality and have done the land they love a great injustice by their refusal to point the way out of racial deadlock. Contrary to what they may honestly believe, racial segregation in the South will be eliminated. For proof of the inevitability of such a change, here are three sentences right from Mr. Graves' article, but, in a new juxtaposition. "....there is no hope for him (the Negro) unless he gets along with the white men of the South....segregation is an issue which cannot be forced in the South without hate, fear, violence....The 'Negro proble[illegible] different both in nature and [illegible]gree.... Mississippi where [illegible]groes are 49 per cent of the population." In other words, peace depends upon the survival of the slave psychology, and when it fails there will be a violent civil war between two peoples who are almost equal parts of the population. The slave psychology may dwell in immortality in the hearts of white Southerners, but Negroes are fast beating it out of their own breasts. The remaining logical inferences are clear.

NO TRUST FOR SIMPLE DEMANDS

OUR "liberals" contend that we should confine ourselves to agitation about training for and employment in war industries. Somehow white men don't trust the Negroes' simple demands for political equality and freedom from discrimination in public places. Lurking behind this must be a sinister design to obtain, not citizenship, but social equality. Yet, any Negro who has worked with white people, in office or factory, will tell you that the first invitation for social mixing has not come from him. If there is any area in our lives in which we have no cause for complaint, it is in our social organization. We have a gift for warm, intimate human relationships, a gaiety and humor in our group life, that leave no room for coveting the awkward and distant ways of white folk.

We must not be deceived by what poses as temperate reason in our Southern white "liberals," nor should we despair of their capitulation to fascism. We recognize that there still are white men in the South who understand the basic issues with increasing vision. It cannot be argued with any force whatever, in spite of the "liberals'" vague allusions on this score, that Negroes are not willing to do their part to win the war. Willing is a weak word; we demand the opportunity. We do not see that our position on domestic problems is inconsistent with winning the war, either first or simultaneously. More and more we can see, however, what things go to make up the ingredients of democracy at home and we can see, as well, that we hold the formula for success in our own hands.

Enemies at Home

IN SPITE OF FEDERAL INDICTMENTS for sedition, the publishers of several of the little fascist sheets are still getting out their sabotaging propaganda. John G. Rogers, in The New York Herald Tribune, points out that Court Asher continues to publish X-Ray, in Muncie, Indiana, William Kullgren publishes The Beacon Light at Atascadero, California, and The Broom is still published in San Diego, California, with C. Leon de Aryan among its contributors. De Aryan has retired as publisher since his indictment. Charles B. Hudson's America in Danger still appears in Omaha, Nebraska. Since they have lost their second-class mailing privileges, such periodicals are distributed under first-class postage.

Asher refers to New York as Jew York. Such use of anti-Semitism, as a means of discrediting the United States war effort, is typical of all these magazines. In the September issue of The Cross and the Flag, Gerald L. K. Smith, who has not been indicted, carries a warning to "Christian farmers" and "Christian workers." Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling, who has been indicted, sends out a fund-raising appeal which lauds a "Christian seamstress" who has contributed to her defense fund.

Nov. 23, 1942

The New York Herald Tribune also reveals the emergence of a new fascist organization, Yankee Freemen. Propaganda for this outfit, which comes from Seattle, urges the resignation of President Roosevelt, immediate peace with Germany, Italy and Japan and the annulment of lease-lend laws. "Do you know . . . that all 'hate Hitler' propaganda is inspired by the enemies of mankind [Jews and Freemasons]?" asks a Yankee Freemen leaflet.

Three friends of former Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia have obtained a Georgia charter for a new organization called Vigilantes, Inc., a secret society restricted in membership to male whites. The charter was applied for by Public Safety Commissioner Goodwin, John J. Cummings, whom Talmadge appointed to the Georgia Board of Regents, and Fred Derrick, who held a position on Talmadge's staff. The purpose of the Vigilantes, Inc., is described as "purely eleemosynary, patriotic, social and benevolent."

The Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, of New York City, has brought court action against the Shelter Island Oyster Company, of New York, which in writing rejected an applicant for a position on the ground of religion. The applicant, Isidor Rosenstock, was sent to the company by the United States Employment Service. The New York State Penal Code provides penalties for concerns discriminating against applicants for employment on the basis of race, religion or color.

Efforts are being made to unite die-hard members of America First, and of the Christian Front, in a new organization known as the Society for Constitutional Education. This society is characterized as a duplicate of Joseph Kamp's Constitutional Educational League, which has been cited by the Department of Justice as one of the groups acting to sabotage morale in the United States armed forces. Dr. Edward T. Curran, a manufacturer of hair tonic and legal representative of the anti-Semitic Paul Revere Sentinels, Thomas J. Duffy, Queens County distributor of Social Justice, and Mrs. Ida Cooper, friend of Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling, were among the people who recently met at 10 Park Avenue, Dr. Curran's home address in New York City, to promote this organization.

The Mount Sterling Gazette and Kentucky Courier, a newspaper edited by W. Hoffman Wood and published at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, by Mrs. Hattie L. Wood and Mrs. E. J. Manning, carries a vast amount of anti-Semitic material, geared to the Nazi propaganda line. A typical editorial is headlined: "Jews Are Running and Ruining This One-Time 'Land of the Free and Home of the Brave'—a Change Must Be Made and That Change Should Come Now."

An Evening Thought

(Rev. J. B. Woolums)

The following motto is found in Woodland Christian Church (for Negroes), Kansas City, Mo. (let us make it our own!): "Wake up, sing up, preach up, pray up, pay up, stay up, and never give up, or let up, or back up, or shut up until the cause of Christ in this church and the world is built up!"

This motto is a rather amusing one, but how practical if we would follow its simple rules each day.

Negro Leaders Speak

WE INVITE especial attention to the news story from the Valdosta Times of last Wednesday which is reprinted on this page. It tells of a practical approach to the solution of a problem which affects every Southern community and which has been made acute by the conditions of war.

Leading Negroes of Valdosta got together—"prayerfully," they said—and drew up a memorandum of suggestions which they thought would lead to happier relations between the races and better effort in prosecution of the community's duty in this time of war.

The proposals speak for themselves. The leaders pledge their influence to obtain an all-out effort of the man power of their race in meeting the needs of agriculture and industry. In return, they ask only fair prices for their products, fair wages for their labor.

In addition, these leaders of the race call public and official attention to the civic necessity of handling vigorously and wisely the problems of venereal disease, truancy and housing.

The resolutions, in substance, tone and manner of presentation, call for sympathetic and energetic response from the leading whites of Valdosta. They ask only for fairness in the economics involved and co-operation from the whites in meeting the important problems of health, education and housing.

Incendiaries among the Negroes, vicious elements among the whites are doing all they can to foment strife in the South. The conditions of living together, inherently difficult at best, are being worsened by irresponsible or fanatical representatives of both races.

Negro leaders in Valdosta have taken a wise course of action and, we are sure, they will be met more than halfway. Prayerful and courageous leadership on both sides is needed as never before to solve a problem which is becoming increasingly difficult in every section where the races must live together.

Powell Flays Race Incitement

DEC 16 1942

Magistrate Abner Surpless was vigorously denounced yesterday on the floor of the City Council as "bigoted" and "anti-democratic" for his action last Saturday of prejudging a Negro woman, charged with striking a Brooklyn teacher,

Daily Worker
N.Y., N.Y.

The City Council received and sent to committee yesterday a resolution by Councilman Frederick Schick, Richmond Democrat, calling for an increase of

as a "great disservice to the colored people of this city."

Councilman A. Clayton Powell, lone Negro member of the Council, arose at the end of a regular Council meeting and said:

"This woman (Mrs. Alice Thompson) was not convicted of any crime and is of no disservice to the colored people."

DEC 16 1942

Mrs. Thompson said she had gone to the school after being told Mrs. Zelda Meisels, a teacher, had kicked her stepson, Rudolph, 10, as he stooped over to pick up some chalk. She was charged with assaulting the teacher and Magistrate Surpless held her in $5,000 bail as a "dangerous person."

"I arise to point out the anti-democratic and bigoted attitude of Magistrate Abner Surpless," said Councilman Powell, "and say that anybody who stirs up bigoted race prejudice is not serving the war effort of this country."

He pointed to the "outrageous" bail of $5,000, later reduced by a Supreme Court judge, and said:

"The problem of juvenile delinquency is not a Negro problem but a problem for both Negro and white citizens."

Powell told the Council that the rate of juvenile delinquency had increased more among white children in the recent period than among Negroes.

"No one," he declared, "should drag in race now and make Negroes look like fifth columnists. There is no fifth column among Negroes."

Powell urged that the Council explore all phases of child delinquency at a public hearing next Friday on the Goldberg-Ninfo resolution calling on the Mayor to take proper steps in the matter.

"The hour has struck," said Powell, "to appoint a Negro member to the Board of Education."

Councilman Anthony DiGiovanna, Brooklyn Democrat, was the only Councilman to take issue with Councilman Powell. He stated Magistrate Surpless had no intention to "cast reflection on the Negro race."

Councilwoman Gertrude W. Klein, Bronx Laborite, supported Powell, stating the bail set for Mrs. Thompson was excessive.

She assailed Surpless' insistence that the cops should be given more power by the Mayor to act with nightsticks.

White Soldiers Punching Negroes With Fists For Good Luck

Oct. 17, 1942

56A

I told you so ~~last~~ week. Do you remember? Yes, I said, in this little corner of the USA press, that we need a propaganda bureau to teach American soldiers how to treat the darker races.

Let me put on my spects and quote: "Today, white soldiers are unprepared for the job. As fighters for Democracy, they haven't been taught Democracy at Home."

Before the ink soaked in, the biggest white literary magazine in the world comes out with a loud Amen! Be sure to read the featured article, "The Men Who Make the Future," by Sergeant Eugene P. Healy, in The Saturday Review of Literature. It is a knockout.

I believe Secretary Stimson told Mr. Walter White that no bureau of interracial understanding was needed in our Army and Navy. Oh, yeah? Well, read what is needed in Congress. By the way, where was Congressman "I" Mitchell when Dies called the First Lady of Black America a Red? Oct. 17, 1942

CRACKERS STILL DAMN THE YANKEES

Sergeant Healy tells us that Westerners, Midwesterners and Easterners get along like brothers. But the Crackers hold themselves apart. They are always boasting about the South--a good sign of the inferiority complex.

Sergeant Healy says: "Almost all (Southerners) I have known in the Army believe sincerely that if the North had minded its own damned business the South would be better off today."

I may say here that the only parts of the South developed today have been developed by Northern capital. Oct. 17, 1942 The only Southerns who are worth a damn in Science, Art and Literature are those who have come under the culture of the damned Yankees. Your outstanding Southern writers give the South hell. Read Faulkner, Basso, Caldwell, Stribling. There are some fine Southerners. But they are "radicals." OCT 17 1942

Sergeant Healy says: "Almost all (Southerners) still entertain an attitude toward the Negro and ideas about the Negro's value as a human being which make a Northerner wince." "Washington Tribune"

Now we see why Southerners want to be left alone to solve the Negro problem. When a man is beating up another man, he always wants other men to stand aside. The devil never wants God to interfere in the devil's business. Oct. 17, 1942

The devil says to God: "Now you stay out of this. I know how to handle man." Washington, D.C.

HOW WHITE SOUTHERNERS GET GOOD LUCK

There are many customs in the South and in Canniballand that it is hard to understand. For example, Sergeant Healy tells us that Southerners boast about "punching niggers for good luck." If you want to whip the Japs on Bataan, punch a Negro in Alabama.

Let me quote again Sergeant Healy (white): "Two beered-up white soldiers walked along a dark street side by side. A Negro approached them and as the three neared one another, the two soldiers split and let the Negro go between them. The white men swung as the Negro came abreast them. One of them hit him in the face; the other in the stomach."

56A

My God, how can we fight and win for Democracy with such scandals staring us in the face? Then Secretary Stimson says the Whites and Negroes are getting along fine! OCT 17 1942

What do we need? We need a special propaganda bureau to educate American White soldiers. Too long have we waited for Time to work out the knots in our interracial discord.

Another thing which Sergeant Healy brings to our attention. The White soldiers have little to say about the Italians. Seldom do they speak angrily of the Germans. Oct. 17, 1942

However, Sergeant Healy says: 'But for the Japanese always, every day in every tent there are words of bitter, angry hate . . . "

Why is that? Is not Hitlerism the enemy? Let us look again. Our Soldiers do not see that they are fighting an idea—the idea Fascism, Hitlersim, Naziism. They are still thinking in terms of Race and Color. They need educating.

Urges Race To Be Conscious Of America

Says The Spirit Of Democracy Must Survive

DEC 12 1942

56

SHREVEPORT, La. — Stating that Negroes are playing a "historic role" in being "the constant, unyielding conscience of America," and that "we must see to it that America is never permitted to forget that a Democratic Victory is that for which she is fighting," A. W. Dent, president of Dillard University in New Oreans, spoke in St. Paul Methodist Church, before an opening session of the Louisiana Colored Teachers' Association's statewide convention here.

"There are people," continued Mr. Dent, "here and all over the world, fighting for a Democratic Victory, the victory of the people's cause, which is being opposed by able and ruthless men who are determined to make it something else.

DEC 12 1942

"And in the forefront of these people fighting for Democratic Victory are all Negroes of America, who have most to win from that victory and everything to lose.

UP TO THE RACE

"It is up to us Negroes of America, who appreciate the preciousness of democracy because we have been denied most of it, who have had our souls tried by the tortures of adversity and the qualities of our characters tempered and purified by the fires of it, who are now become in the eyes of the whole world the symbol of the struggle for democracy, that right to live the lives of free men —it is up to us as a race playing this historic role to keep the flame of democracy bring and strong not only in ourselves, but in all America by being the constant, unyielding conscience of America."

DEC 12 1942

In answer to his own posed queries of how each obscure individual was to do his share in the fight for Democratic Victory, Mr. Dent continued:

"The answer lies in one word: Organize. Organize. Organize and keep hammering away for those things you know are yours by virtue of your status as American citizens. We know the constant dripping of water wears away stone; we shall see that similarly the constant hammering in the cause of real democracy will wear away the prejudicial shackles that bind it."

Topics of The Times

11/29/42

Young Bill Smith

Elmer Davis some time ago in a single sentence summed up the role which propaganda should play in America's war effort. He said: "Democracies have a good story to tell, and they ought to tell it." One way to tell the good story of American democracy in the twentieth century is to make it the story of a completely typical American baby named Bill Smith, born of a representative American family in the year 1940.

Let us look at young Bill's prospects as he lay in his mother's arms that important day two years ago. Let us compare things with the kind of world which he would have faced if fate had ordained young Bill's debut on the American scene fifty years earlier, some time before the turn of the century.

11/29/42

His Longer Life

In 1940 young Bill's chances of living out his first year would have been three times as good as the young Bill of fifty years ago.

In 1940 young Bill's chances of attaining the age of 5 would have been four times as good as they would have been fifty years ago.

In 1940 young Bill in his mother's arms could look forward to a total life term of fifty-seven years. This is what the specialists call Life Expectancy. Half a century ago young Bill's life expectancy was between thirty-five and forty years.

* * *

Boy Meets Dad

The family circle which young Bill joined in 1940 had one and a half times as much real wages as a wage-earning family at the beginning of the century. In 1940 young Bill would have had a Milk Expectancy, if we may call it that, at least twice as high as at the beginning of the century.

In 1940 young Bill's opportunities to get really acquainted with his father by daylight were seven times as good as in 1890. Half a century ago this pleasant encounter could happen only on Sunday. The ten-hour workday plus travel to and from the job kept the wage-earner away from home between dark and dark. In 1940 young Bill Smith's father was at home Saturdays and Sundays and before 6 o'clock every weekday.

In 1940 the chances that the new Smith baby would have to go to work before the age of 15 were only one-tenth of the grim prospect confronting the Smith babies at the beginning of the century.

11/29/42

His School Days

In 1940 young Bill's chances of going to high school when he was old enough were at least ten times as good as young Bill's chances half a century ago. And this is to assume that around 1955, when Bill is ready for high school, we have not gone farther than we are today. Actually we may take it that all the babies of 1940 will go to high school. But at the beginning of the century the high school expectancy was only one in fifteen or twenty babies.

In the world—the American world—which Bill Smith entered in 1940 one in every five boys or girls went to college. Half a century ago it was one young man or woman in twenty. Actually, as in the case of the high schools, the campus chances of our 1940 baby are much better than one in five. By the year 1958 a college education will probably be universal—for those who want it.

11/29/42

Knock On Wood?

Is it the proper thing to be telling this good story of young Bill Smith and the American democracy? Elmer Davis would say yes, but there are many other people who still frown on such stories because it only makes us complacent.

Very well. Perhaps this complacency argument is a good argument. Perhaps it is best that normally we shall not have too good an idea of ourselves. Perhaps it is best as a rule to speak only of what remains to be done. It will keep us on our toes.

But when times change radically and tragically? When we are waging war for national survival? When we are anxious to give the American people the best possible incentive for defending their country? Shall we go on being afraid of complacency? Shall we go on minimizing the national record?

Or is it the other way about? Don't we today need all the honest self-satisfaction we can muster? Don't we want the American soldier to have the very best possible opinion of the country in whose behalf he is asked to risk his life? ~~Don't we want the~~ Negro to know that ~~a larger measure of justice~~ and opportunity has been accruing to him? ~~Don't we want the people in the~~ tenements to know that their babies do get twice as much milk as they did at the time of the other World War?

11/29/42

Factory Into School

Don't we want the youth of America to know that today there is one child worker in the factories for every twenty factory children on the eve of the first World War?

The States have not yet got around to ratifying the so-called Child Labor Amendment, but we are pretty close. In that amendment a "child" is 18 years old. Twenty-five years ago the child who applied for working papers was 14 years old. For the people of the tenements isn't it a pretty good country which is on the verge of substituting four whole years of childhood in school for childhood in the mills?

If this is complacency, as Patrick Henry might say——

Nine Groups Are Hated More Than Negroes, Says

Army Heads, Draft Boards, The British, Jews and Labor Among Those Getting "Higher Rating"

Washington, D. C.—The Office of War Information, Elmer Davis, director, lists American Negroes as TENTH among groups against whom "hate-rumors" are being directed during the present war crisis. "Hate rumors" the OWI stated on Monday of this week, express prejudice, animosity, or hostility for groups other than the enemy. These rumors, it is stated originate as symptoms of domestic special and economic problems—especially those problems which war creates or intensifies. Enemy propaganda, it is stated has often picked up these rumors and tried to increase their circulation as an essential part of the strategy of "divide and conquer."

Among the fifteen groups about whom the hate rumors are circulated, the OWI investigation shows the following NINE as drawing more hate than Negroes:

Army Administration, Business, Catholics, Defense workers, Draft Boards, The English, Farmers Jews, Labor.

The FIVE groups for whom there appears to be less hate, according to OWI findings are, Profiteers, Rationing Boards, the Red Cross (because of its blood donor service) Russia and Unions.

The OWI says, toward the conclusion of its article:

"The false information carried by 'hate-rumors' is less important than the hatred which the rumors convey. Factual denials appear to have had little effect in stopping "hate-rumors." As one "hate rumor" is exposed it is replaced by another rumor conveying the same hatred. It seems clear that certain persons feeling certain hatreds will readily believe and respect any rumor which gives expression to that hatred. 'Hate-rumors' obviously must be attacked at the source—by crying, the cause of the hatreds.

"Information can, however, be used effectively to combat 'hate-rumors' insofar as they may be thoughtlessly believed or repeated by persons who would otherwise feel no violent or urgent hatred. Adequate information can serve to make the repetition and progress of 'hate-rumors' more difficult."

SEDITION DENIED BY 'FATHER' RIKER

Leader of Negro Religious Group Tells Pacific Coast Jury He's 'a Real Warrior'

New York Times

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9—"Father" William E. Riker, leader of the Holy City, a Negro religious organization, testified in his sedition trial today he had been "a real warrior," doing all in his power to "demonstrate my Americanism."

"I have a son in the war," he said, "and I wish I could go too."

His statements, as he sought to explain his racial philosophy and his correspondence with Hitler and Mussolini contradicted the government's charge that he had attempted to undermine the morale of the United States armed forces through dissemination of seditious propaganda.

Dec. 10. 1942

He insisted he had not written to Hitler for six years and "never did get an answer from him personally." In a letter read in court he addressed Hitler as a "son speaking to a beloved father" and advised him to "turn over a new leaf."

"I have given out my ideas to every important person in the world," the defendant testified. "I wrote to all the peoples of the world except Russia, Japan and China. Since Pearl Harbor, though, I am convinced Hitler is not a man to be trusted. Neither is Mussolini. I think we should go after Hitler and Mussolini in the most strenuous wa yand then make our peace with the peoples of Germany and Italy."

He said the name "Father" was "pinned on me by my people." He set forth his belief that the human form symbolized mankind, with the Jews as the head, the body as "the white race," the arms as the Orientals and the legs as the Negroes.

Judge St. Sure denied a defense motion for a mistrial as the government completed its case. It was not known whether Father Divine would appear as a witness for the defense.

Negroes Deplore Outside Meddling

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 4 — A group of Demopolis, Ala., Negroes have deplored "outside interference by people of any color who do not or will not understand the spirit of 'respect and mutual helpfulness between" white and Negro residents of the Alabama black belt.

The position was taken in a resolution adopted at a Negro mass meeting held recently to celebrate oversubscription of their quota in the state War Chest campaign. Governor Dixon's office disclosed the resolution Monday in a letter from the Demopolis Chamber of Commerce.

White and Negro workers were called on in the resolution to "cease this sabotage" of strikes in war industries.

Appreciation was expressed for "the privilege of being able to carry our share of the burden in this (War Chest campaign) and other all-out war efforts." The group said it considered "it a distinct honor to have been given this obligation" and added:

". . . We are grateful for the fine spirit of mutual respect and mutual confidence which exists now, and has existed for so many years in this part of the Southland between the white and colored races."—Atlanta Journal.

Parents In Bronx Protest White Teacher's Statement That Negro Pupils Are The Worst Problem

12/5/42

Strong protests to the Board of Education have been made by Negro parents of the Bronx over remarks of a white teacher at Public School 55, St. Paul's place and Washington avenue, that "colored pupils are the worst problem."

The teacher, Miss Edith Strong of 5 Brooklands avenue, Bronxville, made the remark Wednesday after appearing in Bronx Magistrate's Court as complainant against Mrs. Charles Delsworth, 40, of 427 East 170th street.

Mrs. Delsworth said that her son, Alvin, 12, complained that his white teacher had shoved him and knocked him down. Mrs. Delsworth accompanied her child back to school and according to the teacher's complaint, struck her as she was entering her automobile.

Magistrate Raphael R. Murphy held Mrs. Delsworth in $200 bail on assault charges for a Special Sessions hearing. On leaving the court, the white teacher told reporters:

12/5/42

"Conditions are becoming unbearable. I guess I shouldn't talk this way, but I'm willing to be the martyr.

"The colored pupils are the worst problem. They influence white children to fight the teachers. Some teacher is hit almost every day. They don't dare hit me. I have been a teacher for 22 years and am an instructor in physical education and know how to handle myself.

"There should be a teacher in each school to inflict corporal punishment on problem children, and our school certainly is a problem school. A radio car has to be on duty in front of the school all during the school hours."

NEGRO USED AS SCREEN FOR MEN SEEKING POWER

Congressman Rankin Tells House Members That National Unity Has Been Dealt Powerful Blow

Washington, Dec. 1. (AP)—Rep. Rankin (D., Miss.) told the house today that national unity had been dealt a "powerful and dangerous blow" by "those alien influences that have been using the negro as a smoke screen in their drive for power and their scramble for 'social gains'."

The blow was struck yesterday, he said, "when they succeeded in inducing the so-called 'Committee of Fair Employment Practices' to issue its drastic order, forcing the Capital Transit Company (of Washington), a privately owned enterprise, to accept employes for all positions 'without regard to race, creed, color, national origin or citizenship'."

Rankin said "this is a part of a movement to force similar conditions on the people of every state in the Union," and added:

"This matter should be taken up by congress and dealt with immediately. We cannot afford to have race troubles in this country, and especially in this capital, now; and if orders of this kind are permitted to stand, they are as certain to bring on race conflicts as the night follows the day."

The Right And the Wrong.

The scene was an Atlanta street car. It was one of those with long seats at either end, capable of accommodating four passengers per seat.

At the rear a crowd of Negro passengers stood, hanging to posts or straps. On one of the side seats a lone white man sat. The Negroes, properly, refrained from taking seats beside him, with the result that seating capacity for three was unused, though so many stood. A little further forward in the car were two or three empty seats, recently vacated as passengers had left the car. But the white man at the rear was apparently dreaming or thinking of something many miles away and did not notice.

One of the Negroes, a decent, hardworking woman, asked the conductor if he wouldn't ask the white man to move to a vacant seat ahead, so she and three other Negroes could sit down.

The conductor replied:

"The white man can sit wherever he pleases."

That was one attitude.

The white man, however, overheard the conversation. He looked up, surprised, and saw the vacant seats ahead in the car. He stood up to move and turned to the standing Negroes.

"Excuse me," he said, "I hadn't noticed there were other vacant seats."

That was another attitude.

As to your opinion as to which of the two attitudes was right and which wrong, that will determine whether or not you are fit to bear the responsibilities which white supremacy places upon all white persons in the south.

Calls For Fellowship Of Darker Races

DEC 1 2 1942

Declares It Must Be Partnership Or World Chaos

CHICAGO, (ANP)—In the Review of the Julius Rosenwald Fund just issued, President Edwin R. Embree comments as follows on "Color and Democracy."

"The world is too small for the out-numbered white races to live by themselves; it is too large for the white minority to dominate. We must prove that we are willing to live in fellowship with other races or we must live in chaos. This war will be only a prelude to still more bitter and consuming wars until the great masses of now powerful colored peoples of the world are accepted into partnership.

DEC 1 2 1942

TO DEFEND DEMOCRACY

"In the present war to defend democracy we find ourselves allied with people very different from ourselves, some of whom we never thought of before as within the scope of democracy.

Allies—or potential allies if we do not force them into the enemies' camp—are 450 million Chinese; 350 million people of India; 100 million brown peoples of the Philippines, South Asia, and the East India Islands; 120 million Latin Americans, many of whom are proud of their Indian and Negro blood as well as of their European ancestry; 160 million Russians passionately devoted to equality of all classes and all cultures; and such millions from the Near East and Africa as can free themselves for the struggle.

"To those allies—if we are to win either the war or the peace—we must prove that we want democracy for all men, not merely for white men. We have already lost battles because we failed to make allies of millions of brown people who would have joined the fight if they had thought that victory for England or Holland or the United States meant freedom for them.

DEC 1 2 1942

"We have lost the zeal of one tenth of the American people because they can not see any advance in their rights and opportunities even if the United Nations win. This war against totalitarian enemies can be won only by total democracy.

ISOLATIONIST POSITION

"America has given up one isolationist position. Even the stupidest among us know that in the modern close and interdependent world the arms and economics of Europe and Asia are of direct concern to us.

Now we have to learn that there cannot be isolation even in prejudices. We have to learn that freedom for India and the East Indies must be fought for as ardently as Freedom for England or Holland, that democracy in China is all of a piece with democracy in Norway and in Alabama."

Gov. Dixon's New York Speech

The Birmingham News-Age-Herald must express dissent from the general position taken by Gov. Frank Dixon, of Alabama, in his speech before the Southern Society in New York, regarding the relationship between the Democratic party and the South, and, more particularly, between the Roosevelt administration and the South.

It is the strong belief of The News-Age-Herald that the majority of Alabamians, and the majority of the people of the other Southern states, do not share the views of Gov. Dixon regarding the Democratic party of today and regarding the direction which Democracy should take in the future.

It seems to us to be plain enough for everyone to see that Democracy with a big D, meaning the Democratic party, must take the same direction—or rather, keep on in the same direction—as democracy with a little d, meaning the people. And practically all the world knows the way democracy is going.

Gov. Dixon expresses emphatic opposition to the direction which the Democratic party has taken under the New Deal—though, it should be noted, he implies approval of "the great and essential reforms of the New Deal." We must not abandon those reforms, he says; yet he goes on in the next breath to talk about "crackpot" reforms, "political pap-sucking" and "mess-of-pottage" government. Let the federal government provide money, but let the states spend it, he says, offering this as the way to "bring back the essential balance." This, he says, is the way of "crossroads democracy." The governor thinks we must turn back, "as far as present-day society will permit us," to the "crossroads democracy" of which he speaks.

Dec. 13, 1942

Does the governor mean that a "crackpot" reform by the federal government is not "crackpot" if it is done by the states, or through the states? There is much work to be done by the states, of course; but only the nation can do certain jobs in the complex world of today, where time and distance are no longer great barriers to the work and play of mankind, and where human affairs are so interrelated that the life of one place concerns and affects life in many other places.

We have a nation, and not merely 48 states. It is a simple fact of history, through many national administrations, and not just through the New Deal, that the nation has steadily grown stronger, and the states less influential. For decades the "state rights" cry has grown emptier and emptier. It is late in the day, indeed, for Gov. Dixon to be trying to lead a "state rights" crusade inside—or outside—the Democratic party.

In a world in which, in the midst of the greatest war in history, we in this country and people in all the United Nations are thinking and talking about stronger international ties, about a new international order which must come after the war, it is strange to hear a voice raised in behalf of weakening the ties that bind us together as one nation, which is what the divisiveness of increased state control would inevitably amount to.

Dec. 13, 1942

"Crossroads democracy" is a catch-phrase; but we doubt if it catches the fancy of many persons today. It sounds quaint and homespun, but most people know quite well that "crossroads democracy" has long since gone the way of the crossroads store in an era of paved highways and automobiles. We could not go back to it if we wanted to; and most of us, quite frankly, would not want to.

Most of the world today is looking to the future, not the past. Most of the world realizes that there is no such thing as turning back to a bygone era. Especially can there be no turning back after a worldwide war, which, as a matter of fact, was brought on largely by the very circumstance that too many persons in places of power wanted to preserve too much of the status quo.

There was much good, of course, in almost every bygone era; but that good was generally used by succeeding generations as a basis upon which to build, and thus its fruits are largely preserved. If that is not true, then the world has made no progress; and we believe it is self-evident that, on the whole, the world has progressed.

Dec. 13, 1942

It is apparent that much of Gov. Dixon's concern is caused by his fear that race relationships in the South will be disturbed by the consequences of progressive democracy. On that score we should like to offer a word of reassurance, to the governor and to all other persons who may share his fear. It is that there has been no fundamental disturbance of race relationships thus far, and there is not likely to be. On the contrary, it is our firm belief that race relations are steadily improving. After all, race relations are determined, in the final analysis, by human beings, not by laws or governments; and when there is change it comes slowly, and in accordance with the general will of the people as a whole.

* * *

Gov. Dixon's administration has been, in many respects, one of the best in the history of Alabama. The News-Age-Herald has applauded many of the reforms and progressive measures adopted under Gov. Dixon. Through them the governor has accomplished lasting good for his state. It is a pity that after such a record for three and a half years Frank Dixon should have chosen to round out his term by raising issues which are controversial and divisive in Alabama, no less than in the rest of the nation.

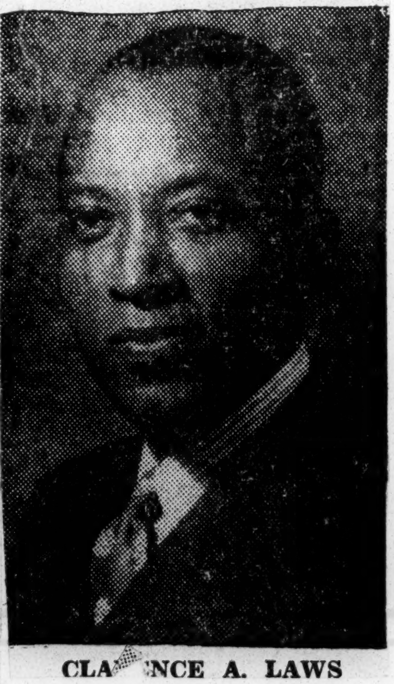
Social Equality A Myth Says Louisiana Urban League Head

Dec 5 1942

NEW ORLEANS, La. — Referring to the question of social equality as a myth which has existence only in the mind, Clarence A. Laws, executive secretary of the New Orleans Urban League, told Tulane University students of the school of social work, that democracy will have to admit a weakness therein.



CLA NCE A. LAWS

"A strong nation's best proof of its good fate toward oppressed and weaker peoples of the world is found in that nation's treatment of its own minority and weaker groups.

"To many Americans of all races there seems a serious doubt that the tragic experiences which followed the last war have given us the wisdom, vision, and courage necessary to shape a worthier and more durable peace after ultimate victory.

ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY

"But our next peace, like this war, is a responsibility of each and every citizen and unless we willingly assume this responsibility; unless we willingly discord some of our selfishness, we only prolong this war and prepare for another, ghastlier and more devastating than any which the world has ever known," he concluded.

White Professor Fined for Eating With Negro Professor

DEC 19 1942

Birmingham sticks in my mind for several reasons. First, the fact that it is the center of the South's campaign for White Supremacy. Second, its big mills are bossed by Big Business, from the North.

.. Then there are other reasons. My boys met the Tuskegee debaters in a memorable clash at a Baptist church, where some hard things were said about the Good White Folk. Angelo Herndon tells some tragic things about the old stronghold of the rebels in his LET ME LIVE. It was there that the Southern Negro Youth Congress had one of its most inspiring meetings.

Perhaps Octavus Roy Çohen has done most to give a false picture of the Negro in Birmingham, with his happy-go-lucky Sambos and Shebas. PM, the New York liberal paper, has done something to correct the impres-n. Birmingham represents the racial fanaticism of the Black Belt—its brutal Hitlerism.

WHITE PROFESSOR—NEGRO PROFESSOR

In the Age of Elizabeth, Francis Bacon, the Father of Inductive Reasoning, said: "I take all knowledge for my province."

DEC 19 1942

That was the Declaration of Independence of the Intellect. Birmingham knows nothing about the freedom of intelligence. It is still in the Dark Ages, in spite of the fact that five centuries have passed. The difference between Birmingham and Berlin is geographiial.

That's the reason a White professor, Dr. Louis Burnham, of Talladega College, was fined for eating in a Negro cafe with a Negro professor. It is interesting to observe that Mrs. Nancy Williams, the proprietor of the cafe, was given a double fine for permitting two educators of two races to eat together in the citadel of White Supremacy. I am sure the Japanese propagandists will use this incident to great advantage in their campaign against our country.

Birmingham has a Jim Crow code that prohibits the two races from eating together in the same cafe. Of course, Black Mammy may eat in the same house with her Anglo-Saxon master. This is Southern etiquette. Black Mammy may mix the dough with black fingers for the Good White Folk; and the Good White Folk don't know where Black Mammy's black fingers were placed before she mixed the dough.

The White professor was fined $25. The Negro proprietor was fined $50. The Negro professor was not fined. I suppose the Negro educator was the innocent victim of the criminality of the White professor. The White professor and the Negro woman were accomplices in the crime.

DEC 19 1942

THE WALL THAT DIVIDES HUMANITY

Hitler and Mussolini and Tojo are trying to build a Babylonian Wall of Race Superiority to shut out the lesser peoples. The South is helping to erect that barrier to the brotherhood of man. White boys die and rot on the sands of Tunisia for Democracy, while their White fathers build the wall of Tyranny. Yet these bigots of the Black Belt are too blind to see their betrayal of their own flesh and blood.

This fining of a White professor for eating with a Negro educator is a symbol of Fascism at work at home. It proves the validity of the VV Campaign. One should kill the rattlesnakes in one's house, before attacking the cobras in his neighbor's house.

Isolation is bad though for any people. A Jim Crow college can never give the well-rounded education and culture of an all-nations college. Bi-racialism creates suspicion, fear, and ignorance. White men have to learn from Negroes, and Negroes have to learn from Whites.

The Jim Crow code of Birmingham is a relic of savagery. The story of America is the story of the melting pot. The Big Boys in Birmingham know that if the Whites and Negroes discuss their problems together, race prejudice will evaporate. Facts free men. Truth about races dispels darkness.

DEC 19 1942

When White soldiers and Negro soldiers from Birmingham meet in the hell-holes of Europe, they will eat together, sleep together, die together, and rot together. In the meantime, the dumb-bell judges of Birmingham will be fining a White professor for eating with a black professor in a black cafe.

Introduction

The Pridgen Articles Wear Their Heart in a Sentence

One sentence to be found in the opening article of Tim Pridgen's series of articles on the Negro question in Charlotte is worth reproducing in this select space.

> "Because Southern Negroes, more than most of them realize, are involved in, and should be involved in, the world-wide surge for the Four Freedoms, the time has come for Southern whites and Southern Negroes to consider the new element and still get along together."

Where Mr. Pridgen's intensive research is going to lead him we don't know; we have read only the first article, and that in proof form. But we would like to say now that we don't know of a better man anywhere to whom this assignment might have been entrusted. Good, deliberate, philosophical, realistic, intelligent, unhurryable, proprietor of a writing style that has won him an author's title, possessor of those twin natural bounties, a keen mind and a calm disposition, Tim may be counted on to present his subject engagingly and honestly.

This observation is made not so much as a plug for the author of the articles which begin in The News today as an earnest request that they be received by white people and Negroes alike in the spirit of getting along together.

Some Plain Talk About Color

From Collier's Magazine Nov. 28, 1942

THE Negro Question, solemnly so-called, is adding to some Americans' worries about the war. Lynchings are on the upcurve. There are disputes and near riots here and there about colored people moving into public housing developments. Now and then, a Jap agent is caught trying to make medicine among our Negroes according to the "Why fight the white man's war?" formula. All these things stir up ancient hates, fears and prejudices, and a serious blowup conceivably could result sometimes.

Here is what we think about it. We expect extremists of all sorts to damn us for these remarks, but we're used to that and we're disappointed when, as sometimes happens, our expectation don't pan out.

56k

We think, for one thing, that all sensible Americans should set their faces sternly against the aforesaid extremists. We refer mainly to (1) the domestic Communists who, while claiming to be all out for an Allied victory, are not above making some home-grown hay for themselves by spreading discontent among all the Negroes they can get at; and (2) the old-fashioned white Negro-haters in both North and South. Nov. 28, 1942

Neither of these extremist groups has the workable answer to the colored question. What both American whites and American Negroes need are those sometimes dreary, usually hard-to-achieve, but always useful virtues of tolerance, good nature, open-mindedness.

Whites need to realize that the American Negro is coming of age—in saying which, we don't want to sound patronizing. The achievements of Marian Anderson, Joe Louis, Paul Robeson and innumerable colored artists, writers, athletes, lawyers, doctors and editors are worthy of anybody's respect and admiration.

Negroes should be helped and encouraged in these activities—and also in the more utilitarian matters of equal breaks for jobs in all parts of the country and a fair show in politics. We should all get firmly fixed in mind the fact that a normal Negro, like a normal white or yellow or red man, is a good citizen in direct proportion to the strength of his belief that the society he lives in is giving him a fair deal. Nov. 28, 1942

The colored people, on the other hand, would be well advised to remember the ancient truth that Rome was not built in a day.

It gets you nowhere to blame your own troubles or shortcomings on the fact that your ancestors—cruelly and unjustly, it is true—were brought to this continent 200 or 300 years ago against their wills. The thing that matters is what you do or don't amount to in your own generation.

The facts about American Negroes in this generation are that they are getting better breaks in our social system all the time; that the Negro has more well-wishers every day among American whites; that the old-fashioned Negro-hater is shrinking swifty in size, influence and public respect. Witness the Georgia white voters' recent scrapping of Governor Eugene Talmadge. Nov. 28, 1942

This happy condition shows signs of continuing and broadening out until the Negro Question is solved to the general satisfaction—if both Whites and Negroes will let matters develop naturally. If either group lets itself be nerve-racked by the war into some sort of extremist hysteria, the consequences can be disastrous all around.

Public Opinion: For And Against

Nov. 28, 1942

IN THIS column we are reprinting an editorial entitled, "Some Plain Talk About Color," from the November 28th issue of Collier's. It is, on the whole, a strong plea for tolerance and fair treatment of Negroes.

56k

In a measure this editorial, which will be read—or which may be read—by approximately 8,000,000 white Americans, may offset some of the injurious effects of the seven-day filibuster which prevented the United States Senate from having an opportunity to vote upon the poll tax measure. Nov. 28, 1942

The Congressional Record, which has a much wider distribution by many million copies than Collier's, was loaded during this filibuster with speeches which purported to argue the unconstitutionality of the proposed law to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in elections for Federal offices, but which actually were intended to create public sentiment against giving Negroes political, civil, and economic rights, privileges or opportunities.

Collier's editorial, as brief as it is, strikes right at the heart of racial intolerance in America. It is one of the things which we have to be thankful for during this Thanksgiving season.

There are just two sentences in Collier's editorial which suggest over-optimism.

Nov. 28, 1942

(1) The colored people, on the other hand, would be well advised to remember the ancient truth that Rome was not built in a day.

That, of course, is to counsel patience; but if it is intended to inspire the hope or to express the faith that those who are in political and social control of the South, will ever—in a thousand years—of their own free will and accord, give Negroes justice, it is a barren hope and a blind faith. Nov. 28, 1942

The filibuster demonstrated that. On the other hand, if there is any hope that passive patience will be rewarded, it lies in counter influence upon Southern public opinion wielded by such widely read and influential publications as Collier's.

Even the so-called Southern liberals have taken to cover in recent months, and are asking the Negroes of the South to be content with their pre-war status; to refrain from asking that the freedom from fear, and the freedom from want, which America is fighting for, be accorded them. That position the Southern liberals have flatly and firmly taken. Nov. 28, 1942

The "scrapping" of Governor Talmadge was a significant political development, it is true. But Mr. Talmadge was not scrapped because of his anti-Negro policies. He dropped his guard and let his anti-Negro venom scrap the accreditment of Georgia's university system. Had his ignorance not led him to make this mistake, he would have been reelected, regardless of how much he hated and oppressed Georgia Negroes. It was only when he misjudged the consequences of a piece of political strategy which affected the educational welfare of Georgia white youths, did the white voters of Georgia put him down.

Alert is Issued to Militia

AUG 15 1942

AUG 15 1942

The State Militia of Georgia has been ordered on the "alert" for racial uprisings, it was made known with the publication of an order issued this week by Col. Lindley W. Camp, head of the state guard.

Washington Tribune
Washington, D.C.

56K

Army Aware

In his order to the guard, Camp, speaking for Governor Eugene Talmadge, declared that the U. S. Army, under which his militia operates, was "fully aware of his action."

AUG 15 1942

The order stated that "there have been reported efforts on the part of Negro men and women to demand certain privileges which are not granted in Georgia and which will never be. These occurrences are believed to be the direct result of the work of white and colored agents."

"White Ladies Assaulted"

AUG 15 1942

Declaring that "the suspected subversive influences were at work in Alabama, South Carolina and other Southern States," Camp's prepare-for-battle alert called attention to what he styled "an unusual number of assault cases and attempts to assault white ladies," and stated that he considered it his duty to warn the guard of the impending danger.

AUG 15 1942

Race trouble in the Southern states have been brewing for some time. Negro soldiers have been shot, arrested, assaulted and otherwise mistreated by Southern whites who resent their being trained in Southern camps.

Negroes' Place

Senator Bankhead, of Alabama, last week urged the War Department to refrain from sending Northern soldiers to South for training, terming them bad influence over the South's Negro population who "know their places," whereas the Northern Negro does not.

AUG 15 1942

Roland Hayes Attacked

A few weeks ago, Georgia police attacked and arrested the international tenor, Roland Hayes, abusing and mistreating his wife, and throwing her in jail with the noted singer.

What happened to Mr. Hayes is happening daily to Negroes, it is said, who are not as prominent as Mr. Hayes, and whose mistreatment therefore, is not publicized.

AUG 15 1942

Washington Warned

Aware of the "impending danger" a group of Southern liberals, union officials and civic leaders came to Washington last week to ask Federal agencies to do something about racial tension which is impairing the war program south of the Mason-Dixon line.

They told of scores of arrests, and beatings of Negroes throughout the South, strikes of white workmen on jobs employing Negroes, threats of assaults on white workmen and other violent efforts toward Negro suppression, including several reported murders.

The Democrat's Stand

The recent Republican gains in Congress gave the Democratic party something to think about and since that election upset, the party bigwigs have been given a little more food for thought by Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee.

In a letter to the chairman and treasurer of the National Democratic Committee, Mr. McCorvey made some blunt statements that have been endorsed by Alabama Democrats who for a long time have wondered if they were Democrats or merely happened to belong to the party.

The "Federal handling of the Negro situation in the South has made it impossible for the Democratic party to raise any substantial sum in Alabama", Mr. McCorvey wrote in response to an appeal from National headquarters for a fund raising campaign.

The Alabama chairman said he had talked with numerous party leaders in the State and was met with the statement that it would be utterly impossible to raise any substantial sum from Alabama Democrats "until we had first had some definite assurance that our party was going to turn over a new leaf insofar as the handling of the Negro situation in the South was concerned.

With refreshing frankness, the chairman added that he was convinced any fund raising campaign was futile "until those in authority at national headquarters stop trying to work out a social revolution during war times. The Negroes are our problem and we care for them in a way that they are not cared for in any other section of the country."

To be certain that he was understood, Mr. McCorvey added.

"We will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having white girls and white boys of our section working side by side with Negroes in factories or elsewhere in filling government contracts or any contracts is just unthinkable and unworkable."

Too long have the party big-wigs taken it for granted that Alabama, and other Southern States, will vote the Democratic ticket according to tradition. The Southern vote has always been "in the bag" and no inducements have ever been offered to get the South in the party column.

Other sections have been brought into the Democratic fold at election time by all sorts of promises, but loyalty on the part of Southern Democrats has been recognized only occasionally, chiefly as a matter of record.

So ingrained is party loyalty in the South that this section probably will continue voting the Democratic ticket, but it doesn't have to raise money for national headquarters and Mr. McCorvey's letter should awaken national party leaders to the fact that Southern Democrats do not intend to keep on being treated as a step-child without at least protesting. Although the South continues its party support at the polls, financial support is something else and headquarters will miss the contributions to the campaign chest.

In speaking out on the attempt of the administration to foster social equality in these perilous times, Mr. McCorvey has served notice that the Democrats of Alabama are not going to pay to have their throats cut. Should these attempts continue regardless of Southern objections, it is possible the Democrats may also have something to say about it at the polls some day.

"TWAS A FALSE ALARM"

(From The Greenville News)

Recently a newspaper in another section of the state threw a few conniption fits over what it interpreted to be instructions of the census bureau as to racial classification of children of mixed racial parentage.

It viewed with the proverbial alarm what it construed to be instructions that the child should be classified as "white", if either parents were white and the other a negro.

But it now appears that this was all a false alarm. The census bureau has taken the trouble to write the paper concerning what it calls a "direct misstatement of fact", and makes it clear that its rules, which have been the same for more than twenty years, are quite the reverse. Specifically, "when parents are white and non-white the race of the non-white parent is coded as the race of the child"; and "if one parent is negro and the other parent is white, the race of the child is coded as negro".

This ought to quiet the minds of any who may have got "het up" over this "sensational exposure".

WALLACE SAYS DEMOCRACY TO INCLUDE ALL

Predicts Equality Of Races And Sexes In New Order

Nov. 21, 1942

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — Vice President Henry A. Wallace who more and more emerges as an evangel of true democracy for America, predicted in an address before the Congress of American-Soviet friendship at Madison Square garden here Saturday night, that in the post war world to come will be found a "political or bill of rights democracy" which will be blended with an economic democracy in which both sexes and all races will have equality of opportunity.

The vice president criticized the sort of democracy which has existed heretofore in the United States.

Nov. 21, 1942

"Some in the United States believe we have overemphasized what might be called political or bill of rights democracy," he said. "Carried to its extreme form, it leads to rugged individualism, exploitation, impractical emphasis upon state's rights and even anarchy.

"This new democracy will be neither Communism of the old fashioned internationalist type, nor democracy of the old fashioned isolationist sort," Mr. Wallace predicted. "The new democracy will contain economic democracy, ethnic democracy, educational democracy and democracy of the sexes. Ethnic democracy means that different races and minority groups will be given equality of economic opportunity."

Racial Barriers Still Up In This City Year After Pearl Harbor Debacle

DEC 1 9 1942

DEC 1 9 1942

PEARL BUCK is on the side which is fighting for freedom and equality of mankind.

Last week she declared before a distinguished audience that "the people of Asia are further away from us than they have ever been. Our own colored people are not closer to us at the end of this year than they were at the beginning."

The great and powerful Philadelphia Inquirer, which says in its platform that it strives "to fight intolerance, to be the friend and defender of those who are persecuted and oppressed," takes issue with Mrs. Buck.

In an editorial on Sunday the 13th of December, 1942, the Inquirer uses this curious reasoning to disprove Mrs. Buck's assertion: "There has never been a time in our own history as a nation when we were so conscious of China's problems and India's problems and so anxious to help solve them in a soundly constructive manner."

DEC 1 9 1942

What does that mean? Who is to determine what is constructive and sound for China and India? Suppose the Chinese and the Indians don't want us to solve their problems any more than we want them to solve ours, what then?

It is always dangerous for any group, race or nation to set itself up as the superior of others and to make the rules to govern other people. It always ends with the fellow who makes the rules taking the biggest piece of pie.

In our individual lives few people like those who are arrogant. Likewise no nation or race likes another nation or race which is arrogant.

DEC 1

But suppose we bring the matter closer to home, keeping in mind always the high-sounding platform of The Inquirer. The Inquirer in its criminal news stories identifies by race only Negroes. Why? That was its policy prior to Pearl Harbor and it continues one year after. The Inquirer is not the only paper in Philadelphia guilty of this despicable practice. The Evening Bulletin and the Daily News are also purveyors of racial ill will, deliberately destroying the unity so necessary for victory for our side.

What do the colored peoples of the world think when they observe this practice against our own colored citizens? To assume that they do not observe it is to assume that they are very stupid people.

DEC 1 9 1942

What do our Chihese allies think when they read the "help wanted columns" of our metropolitan newspapers? Here are a few gems which appeared Sunday:

"Auto washers. Good pay. Good working conditions offered by Yellow Cab Co. to COLORED auto washers, etc." They can wash the cabs, but can't drive them!

"Boy, WHITE, 16 to 18, etc."

And this, "Handy man, white ir colored, for maintenance work, etc." Appears to be fair, but why is it necessary to so advertise in the United States of America? Here is another which has appeared for many weeks: "Girls, women, WHITE, to learn cigar making etc."

There are dozens of them. "PM" calls them "hate ads" and that is just what they are. These are the straws in the wind which show that the racial barriers tre still up and much hard work must be done before man to man will brothers be.

ONE WORD MORE

DEC 19 1942 By RALPH McGILL. DEC 19 1942

NEGRO CHARTER It will be most unfortunate if the south does not discuss calmly and intelligently the basis for interracial co-operation advanced recently by a group of southern Negroes.

It was something which has been needed for a long time: a declaration of policy by southern Negroes representing 70 per cent of all the nation's Negroes, in a section which has 25 per cent of all the nation's native-born whites, and the least economic resources for meeting problems involving both.

I would have liked for the proposal to have indicated, or affirmed, a definite disagreement with certain Negro leaders and elements of the Negro press in the east, but to have done so would have subjected the proposal to a violent attack from the powers-that-be in Negro politics and economics.

It is an ironic fact that just as most of the resources of the south are owned, or controlled, by eastern capital, with freight, interest rates and tariffs to assist that control, that the financial support for 70 per cent of the Negroes, and, heretofore, their only vocal expression, also is in the east.

When it is considered that this recent expression, of last Monday, to be exact, is the very first vocal expression by a united front of the southern Negro leadership, it may be understood that it is important and significant.

Not until last Monday could it be said that the southern Negro leadership was a united vocal leadership. Until then the only articulate voices had been those of the politically ambitious, and, to an amazing degree, ruthless voice of a certain element of the Negro press and individuals who apparently want all they ask now and, failing to get it now, are willing to pull the house down. Many of their demands are, in the abstract, just. In reality, many are utterly impossible at this time, as they very well know.

Their prejudice and intolerance is every bit as dangerous and as violent as that which they protest against.

They are the only vocal group aiding and abetting a Fascist tendency which will engulf them.

They very well know that many of their demands are not proper and would not be at all desirable from their own viewpoint.

Yet, with prejudiced zeal, they thump the tubs for them all.

They are not honest and their patriotism is as bad as that about which they complain.

That is why I regard this announcement by the southern Negroes as important. If southern leaders fail to discuss it, they will have failed at an important time.

DEC 19 1942

TIME FOR THOUGHT No thoughtful southerner believes that what the Negro leadership wants is social equality. Those who use the Negro problem as a vehicle to promote their own interests would have us believe so.

I thought this statement of policy expressed it well.

It deplored the fact that "simple efforts to correct social and economic injustices" are interpreted by many as "the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life."

DEC 19 1942

The statement opposed, on principle, the practice of compulsory segregation, but wisely said " . . . we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may co-operate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework."

No person of good will or with concern about the present and future can find anything objectionable in that statement. It is something to seize upon for use.

In the abstract, segregation is not just a principle, but we deal in realities. Segregation will be retained. Indeed, while Negro leaders in the south cannot, and do not, indorse it as a compulsory fact, they know it will be retained for a long time to come.

Therefore, they address themselves to the current problems and to a search for ways in which they may co-operate in a program aimed at the "sound improvement of race relations."

The facts are, of course, that segregation never meant what it has come to mean. It means merely a separation.

It has come to mean, as every person of even average powers of observation knows, "nigger shacks," no pavement, no playgrounds, no conveniences, and other instances of exploitation and mistreatment.

Those things should be, must be, corrected if any city is to improve its financial and its political status.

Those several Negro leaders in the east, who are not aware of the problem of the 70 per cent who wish to use, for their own ends, the "Negro problem," know very well no problem has ever been "solved." You just don't "solve" problems and put the result in neat, final packages.

But, the thoughtful persons of both races can get together and plan and accomplish on a basis of reality and not on an abstract basis.

DEC 19 1942

The Negro, looking back 75 years ago, and measuring his present with that period, with the one of 50 years ago, of 25 years ago knows he is moving toward his rights faster than that of any other minority in the world.

If the southern Negro leaders, asking for the co-operation of the majority race, do not receive encouragement, then the south will have failed the first effort by southern Negro leadership along realistic lines.

No Uncle Tom Peace

DEC 19 1942

The Federal Government should deal firmly with Southern perpetuators of race hatred, who are threatening to destroy in advance all that the United Nations are fighting for.

DEC 19 1942

Recent addresses by some Southern Governors, together with statements which have been issued to the press from time to time by irresponsible white demagogues, have given aid and comfort to the enemy, and are being used by them to demonstrate to their subjects that it is the United Nations who are practicing deception—not Hitler; not Mussolini; not Hirohito.

Among the Four Freedoms which constitute the bulwark of the Atlantic Charter is Freedom From Fear. This particular freedom appeals to the American Negro probably more than any of the others. for below the Mason-Dixon line, the Negro has lived in constant fear all his life. He is more fearful now than ever before, as he see his brothers called to defend democracy, while those who are left behind are being lynched, shot, imprisoned, and abused in such manner and by such methods that make the Hitler tactics pale into insignificance.

While part of America is bent on making democracy a living thing for all human beings, that part of America situated below the Mason-Dixon line is lining up with the Axis powers, who are fighting to smother democracy, and for the perpetuation of dictatorship and all of its filthy and treacherous counterparts.

There are those lunatic Southern whites who are pulling for an Axis victory, as they view with alarm the prospects of an Allied victory that will spell the doom of the white man's civilization as the Southern states have practiced it.

In Durham, North Carolina, recently, a group of Negroes from ten Southern states met to outline a way by which racial tension in the South would subside. In Atlanta, Georgia, this week, they released their program "for better racial cooperation." In most of its articles we could smell the stench of Uncle Tom—omnipresent and omnifarious, wherever "Southern Negro leaders" gather. The very fact that the document was conceived in Durham and announced in Atlanta is indicative of its weakness and its mildness.

The only good factor, however, is that what that conference concocted will not be seriously considered by Negroes North or South, as the conferees were not representative of the Negro masses, and the Negro masses are not looking for any pacifistic road to cooperation. The Southern whites are militant in their methods of "keeping the Negro in his place," and it will take militant methods on the part of the Negro to combat this white element.

DEC 19 1942

In this endeavor, inasmuch as our cause is right and just; because the things the new Negro is fighting for are all imbedded in the Four Freedoms of the Atlantic Charter, we are justified in expecting and demanding that our Government lend its weight of influence to bring our battles to a victorious climax, even as we are giving of our very lives to bring the battle of our government to a victorious and speedy climax.

We are not in this war to fight for the preservation of white supremacy. White supremacy is not among the ideals listed in the Atlantic Charter.

This is a people's war. It is very essential, therefore, that all elements of the people who are fighting this war with the allies, should have a voice in dictating a people's peace.

Conferences and star chamber sessions on the part of Southern Negroes are not going to solve the problem, nor throw any water on the fire of the militancy of the new Negro.

SOME PLAIN TALK ABOUT COLOR

DEC 17 1942

The Negro Question, solemnly so-called, is adding to some Americans' worries about the war. Lynchings are on the upcurve. There are disputes and near riots here and there about colored people moving into public housing developments. Now and then, a Jap agent is caught trying to make medicine among our Negroes according to the "Why fight the white man's war?" formular. All these things stir up ancient hates, fears and prejudices, and a serious blowup conceivably could result sometimes.

Here is what we think about it. We expect extremists of all sorts to damn us for these remarks, but we're used to that and we're disappointed when, as sometimes happens, our expectations don't pan out.

We think, for one thing, that all sensible Americans should set their faces sternly against the aforesaid extremists. We refer mainly to (1) the domestic Communists who, while claiming to be all out for an Allied victory, are not above making some home-grown hay for themselves by spreading discontent among all the Negroes they can get at; and (2) the old-fashioned white Negro-haters in both North and South.

Neither of these extremist groups has the workable answer to the colored question. What both American whites and American Negroes need are those sometimes dreary, usually hard-to-achieve, but always useful virtues of tolerance, good nature, open-mindedness.

Whites need to realize that the American Negro is coming of age—in saying which, we don't want to sound patronizing. The achievements of Marian Anderson, Joe Louis, Paul Robeson and innumerable colored artists, writers, athletes, lawyers, doctors and editors are worthy of anybody's respect and admiration.

DEC 17 1942

Negroes should be helped and encouraged in these activities—and also in the more utilitarian matters of equal breaks for jobs in all parts of the country and a fair show in politics. We should all get firmly fixed in mind the fact that a normal Negro, like a normal white or yellow or red man, is a citizen in direct proportion to the strength of his belief that the society he lives in is giving him a fair deal.

The colored people, on the other hand, would be well advised to remember the ancient truth that Rome was not built in a day.

It gets you nowhere to blame your own troubles or shortcomings on the fact that your ancestors—cruelly and unjustly, it is true—were brought to this continent 200 or 300 years ago against their wills. The thing that matters is what you do or don't amount to in your own generation.

The facts about American Negroes in this generation are that they are getting better breaks in our social system all the time; that the Negro has more well-wishers every day among American whites; that the old-fashioned Negro-hater is shrinking swiftly in size, influence and public respect. Witness the Georgia white voters' recent scrapping of Governor Eugene Talmadge.

DEC 17 1942

This happy condition shows signs of continuing and broadening out until the Negro Question is solved to the general satisfaction— if both Whites and Negroes will let matters develop naturally. If either group lets itself be nerve-racked by the war into some sort of extremist hysteria, the consequences can be disastrous all around.—Collier's.

Amsterdam Star-News
New York, N. Y.

America's Most Important Group

THE MOST IMPORTANT INDIVIDUAL or minority in America today is the Negro. Make no mistake about it. All levels of white society are frankly concerned, even worried about the American Negro. All classes of Americans are deeply concerned as to where the Negro stands on the war question, what he thinks about white people, and what he will do in a grave crisis that might confront the entire nation.

The war has had much to do with accentuating the importance of the Negro in the eyes of the white majority. Before Hitler's rise to power, the Negro got a lift out of Communist attention paid him when the Party got a haircut and shave, put away the bombs and concentrated its attention to manufacturing national and international issues in cases involving underprivileged minorities.

Before Scottsboro and certain other incidents in which the Negro was part and parcel, the number of white Americans who really knew or cared about what was happening to the Negro, what he was doing, and what he was thinking in relation to the national pattern and scheme of things was very small. They thought of him, if at all, as the sub-human who was occasionally lynched for fancied insults to white women in the South, or for daring to challenge the color line which restricted and strangled him. To them he was the man with the broom and the bobbing head and grinning face; the son or offspring of "dear ole mammy o' mine;" and the "nigger" of bedtime stories told their children.

But the war and Hitler's challenge to the world that a civilization is to be built on the false foundation of humanity separated by man-made edicts into superior and inferior groups have brought about a radical change in the popular conception of subjugated races, not alone in America, but the world over. The class struggle of the Communists; the centuries-old quarrel between political divisions in Europe; the religious differences that have been the root of wars since the days of the Pharaohs have gone through a sharp, radical change of complexion through the machinations of Hitler and his "Mein Kampf" and the long-avoided warfare on differences in races has come about. That is why the American white man is so worried about his largest minority, the Negro. That explains the sudden scramble by our highest officials down to the lowly bootblack to find out what the Negro is doing, what he is thinking and what he wants.

Evidences of this concern are seen on every side. Clare Boothe Luce decried violence in one of her first public utterances since she became Congresswoman from Connecticut. Wendell Willkie's arm is about the black man's shoulder as he voices constant demands for justice for him on a basis of equality. Mrs. Roosevelt invariably defends the Negro. President Roosevelt issued his now famous Executive Order 8802 in the Negro's behalf so that he won't be discriminated against in obtaining his rightful share of employment. Pearl Buck has written long essays about the injustices the Negro suffers under democracy, and is in the forefront of those demanding a change in popular attitude toward the Negro. Edwin R. Embree of the Rosenwald Fund has drawn up what he calls his Eight Points for real liberation of the Negro in the United States.

DEC 26 1942

Magazines and other periodicals—Survey Graphic, Fortune, Life, Atlantic Monthly, Colliers, Harper's, the Jewish Survey, Look, Good Housekeeping, among the many, have all carried long, analytical articles, the result of painstaking research, pictures and stories about or concerning the American Negro. His plight as the "submerged tenth" is being dramatized. His abilities and importance in the American picture have been highlighted by famous writers, editors, thinkers and educators. Some have thrown past policies of conservatism to the winds in going overboard for the Negro in presenting him in the "new light" he has so long been denied. A few of the daily newspapers—PM, the Daily Worker, the Chicago Sun, The Times and The N. Y. Post have written extensively of what the Negro is doing in labor, education, music, art, sports, the theatre, crime, economics and so forth.

Then there are the loudmouths of the opposition to the Negro, whose concern about him, while of the Hitlerite variety, nonetheless, stamps them as being among those who at least have the Negro constantly in mind. They include the Rankins, the Bilbos, the Connallys, the Georges, the O'Daniels in the Senate and the House of Representatives; the Talmadges, the Frank Dixons in gubernatorial posts, and the exponents of white supremacy whose ranks are constantly being fed by candidates from the various "front" organizations. There are also the magazines and newspapers which have made it a policy to present the Negro in a bad light—in the role of thief, mugger, rapist, ne'er-do-well and ignoramus.

In whatever way he is discussed, written about, and thought of, the Negro is today the most important person in America. In spite of contrary belief, he is first on the list for attention by housing authorities; by those who administer public health measures and facilities; the Federal Bureau of Investigation; those who have charge of public education; those who handle the public dole; he is given increasing consideration on every hand. The confused American white man, an ever-growing minority, is over-zealous today in breaking down the barriers and restrictions he, himself, has erected and maintained against the Negro minority. In fact, he is in a life and death struggle with his own on the issue of race equality.

JERSEY JUSTICE

THE TYPE OF JUSTICE which Negroes get in the Frank Hague-controlled sections of the state of Jersey is well known to anyone conversant with current affairs.. But most shocking in the midst of a global war whose purpose is the establishment of the Four Freedoms everywhere, is the case of the nine Negro women residents of Bayonne, who have been held incommunicado for six months even though they are booked on no charge.

DEC 26 1942

These women were incarcerated without due process of law because Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, finding that Mayor James Donovan of Bayonne could not be made a puppet of iron rule, decided to "get" Donovan one way or another. The way turned out to be the method of staging a series of "vice" raids in Bayonne, arresting the owners of taverns and bars and grills and indicting Mayor Donovan and four other high officials of his administration on charges of countenancing vice conditions.

Now, we hold no brief for Mayor Donovan if there is vice in Bayonne and he knows it and refuses to act.

56k

Neither would we support Negroes who are punished for an action when they are found guilty.

But because this is a democracy and because it operates under a constitutional form of government, we hold it is the right of the filthiest, most despicable murderer, thief or rapist to be arrested through the legal processes of law, to be given a fair trial and his hearing in court and to avail himself of counsel.

DEC 26 1942

Those rights, under our governmental setup, are supposed to be guaranteed—we repeat—to the most despicable criminal.

But in this instance what do we find?

We find nine Negro women arrested for standing on the sidewalks of Bayonne taverns; taken to prison and thrown into cells, and yet, up until the time of this writing no charge has been made against them, no bail set by which their release might be secured, no entry made in the record books of the clerks, no counsel allowed to confer with them and no one allowed to see or communicate with them—not friend, nor relative.

And the County of Hudson, tongue in cheek, asserts that they are held as "material witnesses."

DEC 26 1942

What is immaterial to the County of Hudson is that this type of Jersey Justice was recently dubbed "Gestapo-like" by a reliable fact-finding agency commissioned by the Governor of the State to probe the confinements.

You haven't yet heard the worst.

On Friday of last week, the County of Hudson, moved by widespread protest against this travesty on democracy, freed a group of the defendants and then rearrested them on warrants as "disorderly persons."

Herr Goebels must be indeed knocking frantically upon the door of Adolph Hitler's ivory tower to tell the Feuhrer that the Nazi fever of racial superiority, of inhumane brutality, of downright indecency, has spread like a searing, destroying flame over the state of Jersey.

DEC 26 1942

Hirohito must be conferring with his Ministers of Propaganda so that the short wave may carry to the darker races of the world the message that in the very nerve center of democracy there is internecine sabotage.

Mayor Hague and his puppet government had abdicated from the Union. They have trampled the American flag and burned the American Constitution. They have betrayed the American people.

This is the man who ranks high in the councils of the National Democratic Committee. This is the man who holds a grip on fantastic political patronage.

Wake up, America, the hour is late.

Southern Democrats Becoming "Fed Up" With The New Deal

1 7 194

For several years this publication has consistently opposed radical "reforms" of the so-called New Deal, which were designed to substitute a half-baked form of state socialism for democracy. A large and growing proportion of Southern Democrats are in open revolt with the New Deal, because of the latter's evident determination to force racial equality upon the South.

The South simply refuses to accept social equality as the New Deal's payment for its seduction of the negro vote from the Republicans. The South refuses to haul down its venerable Democratic motto of "White Supremacy" as a New Deal bribe for Northern negro votes.

7 194

Governor Frank Dixon, in a recent speech in New York, gave warning that Southern Democrats would not permit racial equality between white and negro residents to be made compulsory through New Deal legislation. His address is published on this page.

56k

This publication has long been fed up with the New Deal's political brotherhood with the Kelly, the Hague and other rotten political machines, while it piously cried out for honesty and high ideals in government.

We believe that the New Deal has attempted to influence mass votes thru use of funds of the federal treasury. We vigorously oppose this method of securing votes upon the part of any party or any clique.

JAN 17 194

The New Deal has attempted to crush the very keystone of the Democratic Party—states' rights.

New Deal bureaucrats attempt to rule by decree and show not the slightest intention of giving all parties and economic groups equal justice.

Finally the New Deal is sabotaging the war effort by bringing up controversial issues, and is attempting to force so-called reforms under plea of furthering the war effort, when in fact, such meddling has just the opposite effect.

There is bound to be a break between Southern Democrats and Northern New Dealers. They have very little in common beyond the fact that they are both for the time being under the Democratic banner. Never were there stranger political bedfellows. The so-called New Deal stands for experimental state socialism. It has ignored and repudiated the old historic principles of the Democratic party one by one. Southerners look in anguish upon the wreckage of the Democratic Party left by the wild-eyed New Deal reforming. They simply will not swallow much more of the New Deals unsavory nostrums. A show-down is in the making.

Southern White Liberals And National Negro League In Verbal Scrap Over Negro

By EMORY JACKSON

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)— The war has produced three important forums of thought on the Negro. One has to do with national white magazines presenting the case of the Negro during the war as presented by informed Negro writers. The second has to do with Negroes trying to pool their brain power irrespective of creed, organization or social standing for bettering the black man's condition in this nation. The third has to do with the "brain battle" between "white liberals" and Negro leaders over the handling of the Negro question.

56k

The "cautioning" of the Negro by "southern white liberals" or the "white friends of the Negro" during the war has provoked stimulating discussion of these 'liberals" by the heavy writers of the national Negro press.

5 194

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), who has been the butt of much violent criticism, claims that the "Dixie liberals" in "their frenzy, preach a sectional, racial and economic dogma which can only bring perpetuation of the South's ills, if it does not bring disaster." He thinks they are doing "infinite harm" to the South they are defending by blaming all the South's "misfortunes on Negroes."

1 5 194

Brilliant, free-swinging, thought-thrusting Marjorie McKenzie, in her December 5 column in the Pittsburgh Courier, calls to account "these venomous little pieces that are emanting from the pens of southern white liberals" their "capitulation to fascism."

She claims that "these men are neither inexperienced nor unsophisticated writers. The purpose of all this unsought advice is to make it clear in sweetly reasonable words by a 'friend of the Negro' that it it no use, the framework is set for all time, and we must learn to work peacably if hopelessly within if for a bigger and better Jim Crow world."

1 5 194

Miss McKenzie goes on to say that "Our 'liberals' contend that we should confine ourselves to agitation about training for and employment in war industries. Somehow white men don't trust the Negroes' simple demands for political equality and freedom from discrimination in public places. Lurking behind this must be a sinister deisgn to obtain, not citizenhip, but social equality. Yet any Negro who has worked with white people in an office or factory will tell you that the first invitation for social mixing has not come from him. If there is any area in our lives in which we have no cause for complaint, it is in our social organization. We have a gift for warm, intimate human relationship, a gaiety and humor in our group life that leaves no room for covtting the awkard and distant ways of white folk."

UNCLE SAM'S NEGLECTED CITIZENS.

OCT

By GEORGE PADMORE.

THIRTEEN MILLION NEGROES—America's neglected citizens are on the offensive. They are making demands for equality of treatment in the war industries and in Uncle Sam's fighting forces; they are clamouring for the abolition of the colour bar, and for the introduction and enforcement of anti-lynching laws which will protect them against mob rule. Since the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbour, several blacks have been lynched in the Southern States.

OCT 3 - 194

Inspired by the heroic struggle of the Chinese people and spurred by India's demand for self-determination, 25,000 Harlem Negroes recently jammed the seating capacity at Madison Square Gardens. New York's largest auditorium, calling upon President Roosevelt to extend the four freedoms to the people's of African descent.

There is no doubt that liberals and progressives in the United States are realising that American democracy is divided unless it extends the rights of citizenship to the thirteen million Negroes who are now "without the pale." Many have publicly delivered themselves of these views. Pearl Buck, the well-known writer, in a letter to the New York Times appealed to white Americans to revise their attitude towards the Negro and accord to him those fundamentals of democracy for which they claim to be fighting.

"These Negro people weren't asking the white ruling class for their rights. They were telling the white bosses that they'd better not kick the Negroes round any more," reports the New York Militant. "They weren't begging, they were demanding. They were willing to listen to words—the more militant the better but they were ready for and wanted action."

The meeting was convened by the March-to-Washington Movement, under the leadership of A. Philip Randolph, left-wing president of the Pullman Car Porter's Union, the largest coloured trade union in America. This meeting was the greatest demonstration of coloured workers ever witnessed in peace-time or war-time United States. "The new Negro in America who is loyal to the Government and determined to give every effort toward winning the war for the democracies, is still determined and insistent upon gaining the same rights and liberties accorded to other citizens of the country," declared Frank Crosswaith, Socialist chairman of the Negro Labour Committee of Great New York. Injecting an international note, Walter White, the distinguished Negro author and Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, the largest organisation of the Negro People in the Western hemisphere, voiced the sentiments and aspirations of the coloured Peoples throughout the world. "Prove to us, United Nations, and prove to the coloured peoples of Asia, Africa and the Carribbean that you are not hypocrites when you say this is a war for freedom," he demanded. "Prove it to us and we will show you that we can and will fight like fury for that freedom. But we want and we intend to have our share of that freedom."

COMMENTS ON MEN AND THINGS

By SPECTATOR

DEC 17 1942

DEC 17 1942

And so the Government will do something—just a bit more, for the farmer? You haven't read anywhere that the Government will pay a farmer $500 a month, have you? No, but some advertisements for carpenters recently offered that and it was discussed in Congress.

I know a farmer who usually sells $1,000 to $1,500 of corn. This year he was persuaded to plant Crotalaria. The recent storm blew it down. Fifty acres—gone!! Does any other man suffer that experience? If an employee of an enterprise with 15 workers gets hurt, he is paid by order of the Industrial Commission—out of insurance carried by his employer. If a man loses his job; or even deliberately quits the job, he is paid by the Unemployment Compensation Commission; if a merchant loses his shipment, the Rail Road or trucker pays for it; if he suffers from fire, his loss is largely covered; but when my friend saw his 50 acres of Crotalaria destroyed—well, he lost it; that's all.

Why do we submit to the Northern Democrats?

"The State" of December 4th carried an Associated Press story from New Orleans which quotes Governor Jones of Louisiana as recommending that Southern Democrats break with Northern Democrats. Governor Jones' outburst was due to his resentment over the preference given Northern States in War contracts. Said the Governor: "I can't see why we should continue to give adherence to a party which has treated us worse than the Republican party has ever treated us on these issues (allocation of war contracts). I can't see why we should adhere to the Democratic Party if we are going to be a stepchild. I don't see why we shouldn't form our own Democratic party and join with the people of the Middle West.

55K

"They (Northern Democrats) call us the nation's economic problem No. 1, but they seem more interested in solving the economic problems of some foreign nations than those here.

"I am convinced the only way to get results is to fight like hell and I propose that we do just that," he said."

Dec 17 1942

A distinguished South Carolinian urged a break months ago, but for much higher reasons than war contracts. Mr. C. Norwood Hastie of Charleston published a letter in a dozen great Southern dailies in which he pointed out that the New Deal rests on Northern Democrats and other elements which have broken faith with the Democrats of the South. Mr. Hastie urged that the South retain its own Democracy, that of our fathers, and that the South save its civilization by throwing its weight to whichever group might offer most to the South. Mr. Hastie was not counting spoils or the mess of pottage; he was concerned about principles of government and fundamental considerations. Under his plan the South would not merely be "in the bag," but would have to be reckoned with.

Why should we seek to [illegible] the "SOLID SOUTH" when [illegible] Smith was a candidate for the [illegible]dency, the "SOLID SOUTH" [illegible] to splinters. Virginia, Texas, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina — and others—left the Democratic fold. Well, it could be done again.

We are Democrats. We are, in fact, the Democrats who have kept the Party alive. Now we don't count. Strangers we are in our father's house. The Party of our fathers seeks to entrench itself in power by using our votes, while slapping us and our mode of living and holding us to scorn. Let us look at the truth: Why were you a Democrat ten years ago? Well, why are you a Democrat today? When Hoover and Coolidge were president we thought Deomcratic Wake up, Democrats! Well, why are we Democrats under the New Deal? Is the New Deal Democratic Wake up, Democrats! Let us cherish the Democracy of Wade Hampton and his Red Shirts; the Democracy of Ben Tillman; the Democracy of Woodrow Wilson; but what of this so-called arrangement today which coddles Labor leaders and Negro politicians?

Are you ready for the Eleanor Clubs and all the other innovations? If you are--well, then you are happy; but if you are a real Southerner, "look unto the rock whence ye are hewn!"

DEC 17 1942

Let no man be lulled into a sense of security or well-being because we hear of no manifestations. The truth is that Northern Negroes are making every effort to organize Southern Negroes; and Northern Negro organizations are sending their leaders to tell the President what they want. Let them; but the power of the Northern Democrats is built on Southern Democratic support. If we have sense enough to act as our interest—and the National interest—dictates we shall wtihdraw that support and let them and their associate mischief-makers crash to th round.

NULLIFICATION IN 1942

Gov. Frank M. Dixon of Alabama is the most blatant "nullificationist" that has bobbed up in any of the backward states since President Roosevelt issued his famed executive order, outlawing racial discrimination by firms holding government contracts and receiving government pay for doing work for the government.

The Alabama governor has sounded off in a big way of his intention to refuse to allow inmates of Alabama prisons to manufacture an order of goods for Uncle Sam because the government contract contains a workers' non-discriminatory clause. It is noted, however, that he does not have the moral courage to crack down on the person responsible for the clause being in government contracts. He "rides" the Fair Employment Practice Committee, indicating that this body of men is solely responsible for seeking to outrage the "social system" of Alabama prisons.

5-6K

Dixon knows, of course, that he has no quarrel with the FEPC. His quarrel is with no less a personage than Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States—including Alabama—and commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. By action of a unanimous Congress—including the solons from Alabama—on last December 8, Mr. Roosevelt was directed to manage the American team in its battle against the Axis, the appointment carrying with it the authority to mobilize the entire nation for the greatest struggle in its history. There was not even the slightest hint in the order, calling Mr. Roosevelt to manage our side, that inferred he would be expected to have due regard for the ideas of Alabama as to how he should go about performing the Herculean task given him by his nation.

The President assumed that the people of the United States relied upon his judgment to mobilize for victory, and were well aware of the fact that it was just as necessary to have SPIRITUAL preparedness as to have MILITARY preparedness.

Presiden Roosevelt, early in his all-out program for winning the war, concluded that he dare not,

> "attempt the Future's portals,
> With the Past's blood-rusted key."

The President learned early that it was bad business to be proclaiming himself leader of forces fighting for human freedom and the equality of human beings, everywhere in the world, while maintaining, under government sanction, arrangements that belied our profession of loyalty to democratic principles.

The President was faced with the fact that discrimination against minority groups, including Catholics, Jews, Negroes and persons with foreign born parents, was being brazenly practiced by industrialists all over the United States. He issued his executive order, outlawing this discrimination in all war industries. He then appointed a committee to make investigations and report to him all cases where "disloyalists" were ignoring his executive order.

Unfortunately for the President, he made the mistake of appointing Mississippi-born Mark Etheridge of Louisville as a member of this important committee. Etheridge, as a result of his intemperate speech in Birmingham recently, precipitated the wave of windy statements from anti-Roosevelt demagogues, including Govs. Dixon and Talmadge, announcing that these demagogues would resist the attempt to enforce the President's executive order in their states.

We do not know whether Mr. Roosevelt will force Uncle Sam to do obeisance to Dixon and Talmadge or not. These men speak the sentiments of the entire delegations in Congress from their states and they can play havoc with Presidential measures, they think, if the President does not show regard for their "brass and brass buttons." It is true the President is a firm believer in majority opinion of this country, which holds that the Federal Government is the supreme authority in this nation. But he has never before, as now, realized how much kick there still is in the corpse of "States' Rights." A vigorously kicking corpse may frighten even a panopolied President of the United States in dark days and nights such as this nation is now having.

However, we have heard it said that President Roosevelt has a great admiration for the courage and resourcefulness of the immortal Andrew Jackson. The President may find out what was Old Hickory's formula for treating an outbreak of "nullification" and use it on Gov. Dixon of Alabama, Gov. Talmadge of Georgia and all the other disciples of Mark Etheridge of Mississippi.

At least, we hope so.

White Supremacy Or White Cowardice?

"The Courier Journal"

War can inspire sublime human heroism and sacrifice, but war frightens people, too, and sometimes evokes the worst instead of the best in them. A sad example has been afforded this week in what we may be sure are ordinarily the pleasant and secure surroundings of the Kiwanis Club of Bessemer, Ala. There a speaker described by The Associated Press as "long prominent in Alabama legal and political circles" gave tongue to his war-born emotions in a way that paraded not courage and magnanimity but the very opposite—the spirit, whether he realized it or not, of the complete bully.

What he proposed, with great ado, was a League to Maintain White Supremacy. White supremacy? Negroes compose less than a tenth of the population of the United States, just a third of the population of the South. In Alabama they are outnumbered three to one; even in Mississippi, where they are about equal to the whites in population, their proportion is, as elsewhere in the South and in the Nation as a whole, declining. And everywhere their general poverty is as conspicuous as their general good nature and easygoing way. They hold far less than a tenth of the wealth of the Nation, far, far less than a third of the wealth of the South. The spectacle of a white man with a cowering urge to take steps to enforce a further "white supremacy" in these political and economic circumstances is, as we have just said, the spectacle of a bully.

56K

The Alabaman has been disturbed by the current tactics of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Other white men have been disturbed by those tactics, too, and so have some Negroes. But the concern of these white men has not been for their own safety or for the continued safety of the white race. Their concern has been that when you inflame the white or the black race against the other, you brutalize both and leave the black at hopeless disadvantage. Their concern has been that a Negro leadership having little touch with the mass of Negroes might subject that innocent mass to such livid, unreasoning, hysterically terrified retaliation as the Bessemer speaker has given us a hint of. Louisville, Ky.

He proposes that his League to Maintain White Supremacy proceed under the Constitution. But the Constitution says that its first purpose is to insure justice, tranquility, defense, welfare and liberty to all the people of the United States. No, you can't make Ku Kluxism legal and, we profoundly hope, you can't make cowardice respectable.

EXAMPLE FOR INDIA

In her new book, published this month, Mrs. Pearl S. Buck argued that the South must erase the color line and grant full economic and political, and a greater degree of social equality to Negroes in order to win India to the side of the United Nations. She contended that so long as the slightest racial discrimination remains in America we cannot offer the Four Freedoms to other oppressed peoples with clean hands and that our proffer will be regarded with suspicion of bad faith by the yellow, brown and black peoples of the world.

56K

There is a vast difference between racial discrimination in the South and in the India which so greatly concerns Mrs. Buck. India is the land of the caste system that condemns unborn generations to the occupation and to the social status of their fathers. Sons of the Brahmans become priests, regardless of spiritual or intellectual qualifications; sons of the Lohars must follow the crude iron-working trade of their fathers, no matter what their individual preferences or their qualifications may be; sons of the Bhangis must spent their lives as sweepers and cess pool cleaners, regardless of ambition within their heads and hearts; sons of Mohammedan Faqirs must devote their life to menial service, enlivened only by the privilege of beating a ceremonial drum on special occasions. Below all these are those God-forsaken peoples, the Untouchables, who know an oppression nothing in American history equals.

India might well look to the American Negro in the South and grant her oppressed classes, which include four-fifths of the nearly half-billion humans, a measure of the freedom enjoyed by these citizens who less than a century ago were in slavery. Against India's discrimination by race, faith and occupation, the United States, including the South, offers a GEORGE CARVER opportunity to rise from slavery to universal honor as a scientist second in achievement only to his friend THOMAS A. EDISON. Here sons of Negro sharecroppers can and do become physicians, lawyers, teachers and college presidents; while even more of them become skilled craftsmen, business men and landlords who contract with sharecroppers for the tillage of acres they cannot cultivate.

The United States, including the South, is the land of opportunity for the Negro as is no other spot on earth.

When the most lowly of India's Untouchables achieves economic, political and social equality in that sub-continent comparable to the opportunities of American Negroes, then the Four Freedoms will not only have been carried to the Indian peoples but they will have achieved a revolutionary way of life for millions now bound by the oppressive weight accumulated during centuries of traditional discrimination.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

The CIO organizations in New York have dispatched a telegram to President Roosevelt declaring that certain "agents" have been fostering racial disturbances in this country and that the movement is against national unity.

The Daily agrees with both those contentions.

"Agents" have been fostering racial prejudices.

Such agitation IS against national unity.

The inference of the CIO that such agitation was initiated in the South or came from Southern people, white or black, The Daily stoutly denies.

This agitation was born of influence entirely outside the South and has been fostered by people who know nothing of either the problems of the white race or the Negro race in the South.

In this connection The Dothan eagle recently said:

"It has not been at the instigation of the South that racial relations have become a prime topic of discussion. Sane, level-headed Southerners, both whites and Negroes, are alarmed lest the hot-heads and the radicals create dissension where, for so long, there has been none. These are perilous times when the fate of the nation is at stake. It is not a time for hatreds and intolerances to divide us.

"That this is recognized by the true leaders and friends of the Negro is amply demonstrated in a letter to the editor which appears on this page today. It is from Dr. D. V. Jemison, Jr., a Negro dentist who has practiced in Dothan for several years and who has won the respect and admiration of whites as well as the members of his own race.

"Dr. Jemison's is a strong plea for harmony between the races. It will be sympathetically read by those who know how important it is for the white man and the Negro man to work together in peace and understanding.

"While Dr. Jemison may be correct in stating that the thinking Negro does not seek social equality and would find it uncomfortable, there is a preponderance of evidence to indicate that many members of his race do have such a goal in mind. Without exception the Negro press has advocated social equality and the removal of all segregation laws and has encouraged its readers to use the war emergency to give force to their demands. These newspapers, encouraged by social-minded radicals who are ignorant of the consequences, are fanning the flames which are sure to consume those who play with them."

Believing that the letter of the Dothan Negro dentist will be of interest, as shedding considerable light on the attitude of the thinking Negroes of the South, as compared with the unthinking agitators of BOTH races in the North, The Daily reprints his letter in full below:

Editor, The Eagle:

This letter is written solely in the interest of harmony, and to clear up some misunderstanding. I also want to set forth the viewpoint of the thinking Negro, who has lived here and gotten along with the people for years.

In the first place no Negro wants social equality. He would feel out of place and uncomfortable with it. When this particular thing is made an outstanding issue, we feel that someone is wasting a lot of breath on an imaginary evil. The desire for social equality just does not exist, and I know my people.

The underpaid, humble Negro has built the wealth of the South with his labor. Even in Dothan the Negroes do not have one decent school house in wihch to educate their children. Throughout the years there has never been a traitor or spy among the people of our race. Our loyalty has never been questioned. Today out of their meager earnings Negroes are investing in Defense Bonds to help America defeat the Axis. All they are asking in return is a little justice and fair play. The Negro doesn't want to see himself always used as the scapegoat for some politician to ride to glory.

We would like to have the cooperation of the best white people in helping us shape our destiny. We need sympathetic cooperation from the far-sighted, fair-minded white people in helping us to solve our problems.

Let us all work together in a spirit of harmony. This harmonious relationship has existed and must continue to exist. The things that have been talked about lately, and that are having a disturbing influence are non-existent so far as we are concerned. We look forward with hope for a better South for the white man and the Negro, In the meantime let us all work together to defeat our common enemy.

I am, respectfully yours,

DR. D. V. JEMISON, Jr.

Georgia's Next Governor

(Rome (Ga.) News-Tribune)

Should Mr. Ellis Arnall, who is to become the next Governor of Georgia, display the same ability as an executive that he displayed as a vote-getter, he will make an enviable record during the four years of his incumbency. His triumph was certainly decisive.

Mr. Arnall is a young man, scarcely in middle life, and no doubt he will be profoundly impressed by the magnificent vote of confidence that was given him. And impressed in this wise, he has an extraordinary opportunity for rendering to the State of Georgia a type of service that will be of great value.

Yet if his services are to attain a value comparable to the opportunities and within the range of one of his ability, he must face certain issues that he found it unnecessary to face in his campaign. He must face the issue of racial equality, which is being pressed from Washington with a vigor that equals the vigor being thrown behind the war effort, and must join with other Southern Governors in saying "No" to all this horde of race-mad zealots. This he no doubt will do.

Mr. Arnall, with his legal training and his ability to discern between the shadow and the substance when issues are presented, probably will have no difficulty in seeing the line of demarkation existing between the tens of thousands of patriotic and wholly unselfish Georgians who supported him because of their belief in his ability and sincerity, and the political opportunists who attached themselves to his bandwagon, and will serve the former while forgetting the latter.

By thus utilizing his powers of discernment and attaching himself ever closer to the best and most unselfish elements in the State, Mr. Arnall, with so much of his life before him, should be able to carve out a political destiny of marked distinction. The News-Tribune congratulates him upon his great victory and wishes him a measure of success in full keeping with the confidence the people repose in him.

We Aid the Enemy By Spreading And Believing Hate-Breeding Tales

"The Courier Journal" Louisville, Ky.

By David H. Bradford

SEP 1 1942

IN TIMES of crisis such as now it is easy to be led astray by the wildest and most inane rumors. Because we are now disturbed by uncertainties of all kinds, we allow ourselves to give credence to tales the absurdities of which would be obvious at once in more normal times. As critical as our condition undoubtedly is, we must not make the mistake of putting too much emphasis upon the present, or permitting it to blind us to the past. Great as are the changes that have come about in our world in recent days and weeks, many things remain essentially unchanged. We do the cause of democracy little good when we fall into the error of suspecting the worst of those whom we have known to be our friends in the past. The war does not necessitate a blackout of tolerance; on the contrary, it makes the need for tolerance greater than ever before.

All sorts of fantastic rumors about Negroes organizing into secret conspirators' clubs have been current for some time. Upon investigation, these rumors have been found to be absolutely without foundation. There are no secret Negro clubs watching for favorable opportunities to give aid to the enemy. Instead our enemies receive aid from rumor mongers in their efforts to divide and defeat us. Those who pass on wild and baseless rumors are as good agents as our enemies could wish. Such Americans are Axis stooges. They are all the more dangerous when they believe themselves to be acting to preserve themselves and their children from a fate they believe to be worse than death. To them, theirs is a holy crusade. That they are puppets in the hands of expert propagandists never occurs to them.

•

BESIDES those who speak in innocence, there are those who willfully and deliberately prey upon the known prejudices of the people in order to advance their own selfish ends. These political guerillas are democracy's worse enemies. In their blind efforts to retain or secure a place at the public trough, they endanger not only their own security but that of their country as well. Seeking to keep Negroes in the place to which they have been arbitrarily assigned, they may succeed in losing their own places. If the Axis wins, there will be no place for any of us, black or white, in an order that will be completely opposed to all our ideals.

If a white family finds it impossible to employ a Negro maid for the same wage that was so anxiously accepted in 1939, there are other explanations than organized clubs of Negro domestics. Let it be repeated that there are no such clubs. The law of supply and demand operates in the kitchen as elsewhere. Many Negro maids and cooks formerly in private service are now finding better jobs in restaurants and other public places left vacant by white employes now engaged in war industries. Far from spending their time and efforts in hatching dire plots and plans to wreck the homes of their former employers, these Negro women are busily trying to make good in their new jobs. These new jobs give them a sense of being needed in the war effort. They derive a sense of patriotism from their new places, and it is not conspiracy to accept a higher wage.

•

WE ARE so concerned with the present that we forget the past. Negroes and whites have lived together before in times of stress and strain. Such times best reveal the virtues of a people. Adversity does not make men frail; it shows of what they are made. In the midst of our Civil War, when every opportunity was present for the Negro to play havoc with Southern institutions, he remained true to the trust placed in him. This is a fact we too often forget. Now, in our haste to believe every idle rumor we might profitably remember that trust and faith can do more to hold a people than threats. In our anxiety to believe the worst about each other, let us not forget the best. Let us not increase the plight of our country by adding to and passing on unsubstantiated rumors.

The liberal white man who recognized the injustices under which the Negro was forced to live before the war is no less a friend to the cause of the Negro when he now advocates the primacy of victory above all else. The Negro who insisted upon equality of opportunity before the outbreak of the war is no less loyal now when he insists upon the same thing. The insistence on the Negro's part has been and still is out in the open. There is nothing secret about it. It is well known at Washington. It can be found in all the Negro newspapers. It can be heard everywhere Negroes assemble. Beyond these public efforts to secure a more democratic way of life, the Negro has not gone. To believe otherwise is to play into the hands of those insidious forces that seek the destruction of our national unity and morale.

New Masses
New York, N. Y.

SEP 8 1942

Pattern of Defeatism

LAST week NEW MASSES commented on Harlem's 1942 "Scottsboro case." Since then four of the ten boys charged with "rape and robbery" have been freed: the authorities found no cause for indictment. Fair trial must be assured the six held, but justice cannot be guaranteed so long as the commercial press—most notoriously Roy Howard's World-Telegram and Captain Patterson's Daily News—continues its Negro-baiting "crusades." That campaign continues. It is obvious in what is published, and as events showed last week, in what is omitted. Most significant was the fact that not one of the "crime-smearing" newspapers carried an item about the rape of a nine-year-old Negro child by a white man, John Gunyan, of Brooklyn, last week. Evidently these papers saw no purpose in mentioning the latter crime since it would not fit into the pattern of their "crusade."

Meanwhile at least four Negro youths have been killed and one wounded in the past fortnight by quick-trigger policemen in Harlem on the pretext of hunting down "muggers"—robbers. But guns and nightsticks will never suffice: at bottom, in such cases—when they are genuine—is the whole vile system of Jim Crow with its denial of jobs, its rent-gouging, its degrading poverty. It is this that must be ended, and at once, before the country suffers irreparable harm in this period of its greatest peril.

Nor is this only a New York phenomenon. It is characteristic of the evil confronting our whole nation: the efforts of pro-Hitler groups to split the Negro from the white, to encourage race hatred and outbursts. Is it mere accident that Captain Patterson's campaign in New York jibes—in time and intent—with that of the southern bourbon press and the plotting of the Ku Kluxer Horace Wilkinson, organizer of the "White Supremacy League"? This is the pattern of defeatism, the way Hitler would like things to work out in America. How long will the people—and the Department of Justice—tolerate it?

SOUTHERN NEGROES TOO WISE TO FALL FOR IT

From authentic reports, effort by Axis representatives is being made throughout this nation to sabotage the negro population of the United States.

Some progress, it appears, has been made in the North, but we candidly believe our Southern negroes too wise to fall for the promises that have lured Northern negroes into the Axis trap.

For Southern negroes know too well that if such a thing as Axis success were possible—and there positively isn't any chance for that—they would be the very first to suffer at the hands of the Germans and the Japanese. Their's is a race hatred proposition, and our negroes in America would fall victims just as have the poor Jews in Germany.

The Germans and the Japs don't like other races. That is one reason they are waging this war, which, by the way, will be their very last. They would, if opportunity afforded, treat our negroes more cruelly than they have the Jews.

And yet, a large number of Northern negroes have walked into the Axis trap.

Uses District 50 to Disrupt Vital War Industry in South

By SENDER GARLIN

26K

John L. Lewis and his District 50 agents are active collaborators in the current Copperhead conspiracy in the South—a conspiracy fomented by the appeasers and defeatists and aimed at crippling America's war production by barring Negroes from vital industrial plants.

Lewis men are secretly supporting Horace Wilkinson's "League for White Supremacy" movement. At least two of his organizers, Beard and Youngblood, are known to have promised Jim Crow locals under the jurisdiction of District 50.

In brief, John L. Lewis' agents in the South are sponsoring an anti-Negro jim crow labor movement. This activity dovetails snugly into the present Bourbon plot to hamper production by open defiance of the President's Executive Order 8802 barring anti-Negro discrimination in war industries.

KLAN-MINDED

AUG 17 1942

At about the time of the FEPC hearings at the end of May, the Mine, Mill and Smetler Workers Union asked the Raimund Mines (Republic Steel) to open up some motormen jobs for Negroes in the mines. The company agreed that of 26 jobs four would go to Negroes ultimately. Some time in June the first man quit and the company filled the job with a Negro. As soon as he was placed on the job a group of Klan-minded, non-union motormen, incited by District 50 officials, threatened to strike the mine in protest against the hiring of Negroes. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union (CIO) had to throw in all their forces to prevent the strike.

About a month ago rocks were thrown at Negro motormen working in the mine. Threats were made to kill Lewis Tarrant, Negro vice-president of Local 121, and John Butler, white president. The non-union white motormen were led by a repudiated union committeeman named Virgil Powell. Powell had been defeated as local president, having received the lowest vote of the three candidates.

The vital fact is that the union had instructed him to take up certain grievances involving Negroes and he had refused. This resulted in his defeat. This is the type that is now playing around with the District 50 crowd.

RED-BAITER DEFEATED

W. C. Gunnin, former president of the Muscoda Red Ore local of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, who was defeated three to one in the local elections because of his red-baiting, Negro-baiting and pro-company actions, immediately resigned from the union and became a District 50 agent. He now promises that Lewis' District 50 will never permit a situation such as exists in the CIO where Negro vice-presidents preside over a union meeting when the white president is absent.

Although not in the category of war production industries, the Lewis Bakery in Birmingham offers an illuminating example of District 50 anti-Negro activities.

This bakery, the only one in Birmingham with an all-Negro production crew, was organized originally by the Birmingham Bakery Workers Joint Board of the United Retail and Wholesale Employes which had organized all the major bakeries of the city. This bakery has been under contract with the CIO for more than a year.

LOCAL RAIDED

AUG 17 1942

In the midst of negotiations by the CIO union for a ten-cent an hour wage increase, Lewis' District 50 raided the local and signed an agreement with the employers for a two and one-half cents an hour increase, lower than the entire city-wide scale of Birmingham bakery workers.

District 50 refused to permit the workers to vote on the agreement and sought to ram it down their throats.

When the workers, rebelling against District 50 dictatorship tried to return to the CIO and continued their strike, District 50 replaced them with white scabs and imported a squad of goons to smash the strike. As a result the CIO has been forced to call off the strike Thus, this bakery, which previously had an all-Negro production crew, now does not employ a single Negro.

John L. Lewis' defeatist program is thoroughly acceptable to the Southern bourbons, and it is not at all surprising that District 50's "union" activities more and more frequently coincide with the anti-Negro and anti-administration program of the "White Supremacy" forces personified by the Birmingham ex-klan leader, Horace C. Wilkinson.

Southerners Rap Racial Hatreds

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)—Comment on the full page advertisement carried on August 16 in the Birmingham Age Herald sponsored by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare has proven favorable, so much so that a number of persons in this area have signed the pledge to the President and asked their friends to do the same.

SEP 1942

Full text of the advertisement follows:

"To Our Commander in Chief Franklin D. Roosevelt:

"We believe we speak for all southerners when we say that the South is profoundly patriotic. The South has made great sacrifices and is willing to make greater sacrifices to win this war for freedom and national survival. At this time when every patriotic southerner's efforts are concentrated on winning the war, there has been artifically created in the South grave racial tension.

26K

INCITE RACE HATRED

"Violent speeches filled with Nazi ideas and phrases are inciting race hatred and conflict. Small incidents are blown up to mammoth size by wild rumors. A widely advertised campaign to revive the KKK is preparing the South for organized racial violince

"With grave concern responsible Southerners are watching the subversive efforts of irresponsible politicians who for selfish purposes are endangering the nation's war effort. Deliberately inflamed race hatred is slowing down the war production and weakening the war unity of the South. These politicians are aiding Hitler by their efforts to provoke racial strife.

"Respensible southereners are not willing to jeopardize the nation's war effort, here and abroad by participating in racial strife. They do not consent to slow down production by denying decent living and working conditions to any group of southern citizens.

PLEDGE SUPPORT

SEP 6 1942

"In this grave [illegible] of our war effort, loyal southerners pledge to you, our commander-in-chief, full and unqaulified support for every war agency and measure. We pledge to preserve southern unity, free from race conflict, behind our war effort."

The advertisement concludes with the catch line, "Don't Be Provoked! Anyone who starts trouble is an Axis Agent."

SEP 6 1942

Accompanying the folder is a strong letter setting forth the many heinous deeds perpetrated against Negroes in the South recently, beginning with the infamous address of Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham, lawyer ex-leader of the Ku Kulx Klan, who spoke before the Kawanis club of Birmingham. Included is Governor (Mitule Leopard Spots") Dixon's rejection of a war contract for 1,750,000 yards of tenting material because of the presence of a non-discriminatory clause, Bankhead's attitude on Negro troops; Roland Hayes attack; Governor Talmadge's attitude; Negroes beaten in Texas; Negro soldier killed in Arizona; Negro miner shot and killed by a bus driver. all ore recounted in the letter.

Tolerance for All Must Be Made Respectable

Courier-Journal AUG 18 1942 Louisville, Ky.

By David H. Bradford

MUCH disagreement exists over what will be the ultimate outcome of the current widespread agitation for immediate improvement of the status of the Negro, now being conducted in the press and from the platform. Not a few believe that the result will be detrimental to the Negro's cause. They argue that when the war is over, far from paving the way for improved relations, the memory of the present efforts to improve the lot of the Negro and the part that the Negro is playing in the effort, will serve to indicate to those in authority in the South the danger to the status quo inherent in extension of educational, political and economic opportunities to Negroes.

The chief fallacy in this argument is that it presupposes that the status quo will remain forever unchanged. It is predicated on the notion that after the war we will take up our lives where we left them on December 7, 1941.

The Negro is straining to prove worthy of country and heritage.

But life is not like that. It cannot be separated into neat little compartments to suit our heart's desire. It cannot be wrapped in attractive bundles and put on a shelf to be taken down again at our pleasure. Life is a continuous stream; it flows on and on, day after day. Each today is largely the result of each yesterday, and each tomorrow contains much of today. When victory finally rests upon our arms, we cannot destroy the memory of the activities of the war days as easily as we might beat our arms into plowshares.

SO LONG as there are minds to have thoughts and memories, the past will remain with us. Part of those memories and some of the thoughts of that future day will be the result of thought-patterns now being formulated. In the post-war world, America cannot completely forget the lessons taught by the war. One of the most important of these has been the old truth retaught: human dignity is built upon respect for individuals. It is to establish this truth securely that we are now fighting. The preservation of this respect is going to be too expensive to abandon it once the war is won. No, we shall never go back to 1941.

While working now for those things that are legally his rights, the Negro is again straining every nerve to prove worthy of his country, its heritage, and, most of all, to be true to himself. He fully realizes that not to insist that his country live up to its own principles where he is concerned is for him to be less than an American and to allow his country to sell its own principles short.

However slowly, one thing is emerging from the talk and writing now going the rounds about Negroes. America is beginning to realize, as never before, that it has not played fairly with itself in denying opportunities to its Negro citizens. The truth is gradually coming home to all that the Nation can permanently enjoy its privileges and rights only in so far as it is willing to extend them to all. Any effort to reserve them for some and deny them to others will lose them for all. However painfully, we are learning that America can never be what we want it to be, until all are given a chance to work. Toleration for all must be made respectable.

NOTHING so disturbs an individual as the consciousness of being wrong. Nothing so irritates and infuriates him as the realization that what he does is done in the sight of those who know the act to be done willfully, in full knowledge that it is not justified by facts. The ultimate procurement of those things the Negro wants will come out of this feeling. Greatly outnumbered, the Negro, if he plays his cards wisely, will emerge from his present limited status largely as a result of the white American's stricken conscience and enlightened mind.

This is a slow, humiliating, and often painful process. But it is none the less sure. Groups, like individuals, dislike to wrestle continuously with what is known to be wrong. This is the real significance of the present increased tempo of the Negro's struggle for his rights. It is serving to bring to the attention of all the fact that Negroes are fully conscious of the mistreatment they receive. Those who in the past have said that the Negro was contented with his lot, if for no other reason than that he did not have the imagination or knowledge to want any other, must now see how mistaken they have been. The old ignorance is bliss philosophy is outmoded. Negroes are not ignorant, and they are not happy with their lot in this great arsenal of freedom.

Because America must live with itself, it must some day end its consciousness of wrong-doing toward its Negro citizens.

A Second Front On The Home Front

AUG 2 1942

While we still carry on the "Double Victory Campaign," waging a relentless war for full democracy for all citizens, regardless of race or color, it does seem the part of gratitude and Christian tolerance that we should open a "Second Front" for the expression of faith and confidence in our friends among white people in the American nation, both North and South. For it occurs to us that a little simple gratitude and sense of fair play would deter us from some of the wholesale condemnations, in which we are wont so frequently to indulge ourselves.

AUG 2 1942

We are quite aware that there is plenty to condemn and there are those who have put themselves outside the pale of patience and tolerance, but someone has said: "Speak well of your friends, of your enemies say nothing." And when we see a Southerner, a white man or woman, working his or her heart out to establish better conditions for Negroes, in the face of the bitterest criticism from his or her own people, we feel like grasping them by the hand and saying: "That's a fine job you're doing, and we want you to know that we appreciate it, and we are praying for your success."

Our enemies are far more vociferous than our friends, but for every Gene Talmadge of Georgia and Rankin of Mississippi we have hundreds of Christians in the South who are seeking to find a solution to the vexing problems which confront us. Men like Dr. Frank Graham, of North Carolina, may be duplicated in Georgia, Mississippi and Texas. And we need to give them the discriminating encouragement which they deserve and need to win the fight.

We confess we are as guilty as any of the secular papers, but much of our clamor against Talmadge and Rankin is not only so much free advertisement for these politicians, but it is decidely unfair to our friends to label the people of a whole state as supporting demagogues, when less than one-fourth of the people vote, or have any voice in the election of the kind of government they shall have.

Just a few days ago we heard a very prominent Negro clergyman say: "That is characteristic of the white man," speaking of some so-called pattern, which he had observed. Well, we wanted to tell him that nothing is characteristic of white men or black men. Some things are characteristic of some men, white and black. And those of us who want white Americans to judge the race by the best of us, as we have a right to do, for the best is in the vast majority, should be willing to judge the white people by the best, for they also are in the majority, even though it may not seem so at times.

AUG 2 1942

We, therefore, call upon all Negro newspapers in America, both secular and religious to try just for one month to find stories of noble endeavor by white people in the field of fairness and decent attitudes toward Negroes, and to give these stories the proper publicity and preference, as we want white newspapers to do, when they publish news about Negroes, and we have the feeling, if we carry out this noble experiment, we will never go back to indiscriminate vilification and wholesome charges of hypocrisy against all white people. We believe it is worthy trying and will pay large dividends in better feeling between the races and steadier progress toward our goals.

Judge Blease Charges Threat For "White Supremacy" Talk

Blames Mythical Organization Of 'Black Dragons' for Letter

56K

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(SNS)—Former Supreme Court Justice Eugene S. Blease told an audience at Camden Monday night that because of his recent campaign talks in the interest of "white supremacy" at Spartanburg and other cities upstate he has received two threatening letters from the "Black Dragon Society" which have been turned over to Spartanburg county's solicitor for investigation. Tuesday, Negro leaders in Columbia were launching frantic hunts to find the mythical organization. "If there is such an organization, dedicated to removing from our state such ideas as those already pronounced by Mr. Blease, I certainly want to join it," one of them said.

MAY BE NAACP

State NAACP head, James M. Hinton, hinted that the organization to which the candidate referred may have been the NAACP, although it would not send a threatening letter to anybody. Mr. Hinton disclosed that a few days ago he sent Mr. Blease a NAACP monthly Bulletin for enlightenment. Mr. Blease referred to the Bulletin as a "magazine" in his Camden speech but did not say how he received it nor did he refer to the NAACP.

AUG 14 1942

Key place for Negroes, as outlined by the former Justice, is on the farm; he complained because of the present shortage in farm labor for harvesting cotton and other crops.

AUG 14 1942

Some sources indicated that the "Black Dragons" was "an invention" of Mr. Blease as no such organization is known to exist in the state, or the work of some white or colored person, opposed to his campaign tactics.

THE NEGRO. Amid other vital problems here is something that the South is going to have to start thinking about seriously---we are speaking of the so-called "Negro problem." Now if the South could be left alone it would solve in the best way what needs to be solved regarding the colored man. But the South isn't going to be left alone. After the war is over when certain types of fanatics get around to it they are gong to start working on the South about the Negro. It almost got started in Congress several years ago with the "Anti-lynching bill" but the war sidetracked it. The main trouble is going to be that pressure groups from New England, or perhaps the Steppes of Russia, who know about as much about the Negro as a flying squirrel does about the Air Corps is going to tell the South what to do and vice versa about the Negro. The world will be so small after the war that so-called "Reformers" from as far away as Head Hunters Town, New Guinea, will point their little finger at Georgia and shout "You have just won a war that spells "Equality for all" so you are going to have to cut out those white primaries. You are going to have to quit having separate coaches and hotels for different races." It is true that many practices with respect to the treatment of the Negro in the South need correction, and there must be some adjustment of the problem to new conditions that this war will create but these changes, whatever they are, must be made by the Southern States themselves and not by a racial commission that might be set up in Moscow. The South is going to contribute its full share of what it takes to beat Hitler and the Japs; news dispatches from all over the world show that this is being the case as this column is written, but one thing that the South must gird itself for after this war is to see that its right to local self-government is maintained. We believe that what is wrong about the South should and will be corrected by Southern people. There is enough intelligence and enough integrity down here to see that all minority groups get a square deal.

Heard and Overheard

How the Axis Lies About Negroes

SEP 4 1942

PM New York N.Y.

By Jerry Franken

Rex Stout the Lie Detective of WABC's Our Secret Weapon.

A further report from Our Secret Weapon, the CBS program which debunks Axis propaganda and which was discussed here Tuesday. It starts with a quote from the Rome radio, broadcast Aug. 21:

"Mr. Roosevelt has got his country into such a mess that he now is compelled to turn for help to the despised and ostracized Negro population. Mr. Roosevelt is encouraging the formation of Negro regiments and Mr. Knox is pushing Negroes into the Navy. . . . The way Americans look at it, Negroes make excellent cannon fodder and they should be proud to die in American uniforms, for that is all they are fit for."

5CK

This hypocritical expression of spmpathy for the American Negro brought a two-fold answer from Rex Stout, Our Secret Weapon's "Lie Detective."

First, Stout reminded listeners of Italy's own Negro policy, as expressed by Mussolini's son, who told what sport it was to bomb Ethiopian villagers. Then, he gave Germany's Negro policy, as recorded by Adolf Hitler in Mein Kampf:

"As for the Negro, it does not dawn upon the depraved bourgeois world of America that it is a criminal absurdity to train a half-born ape until it is supposed a lawyer or doctor has been made of him; that it is a sin to let . . . talented men degenerate while Hottentots and Zulus are trained for intellectual vocations."

SEP 4 1942

Stout also made this comment:

"We are quite aware of the Negro problem's difficult and ugly aspects, but we also know that in this close association of the black and white races here we are carrying on one of the most interesting and valuable experiments in the development of human society.

"There are, certainly, extremists among us; at one end, those who regard Negroes as subhuman beings; at the other, those who demand that all the Negro's handicaps, social, political and economic, must be abolished by tomorrow noon. But the great majority of us, both Negro and white, accept the problem for what it is, face it realistically and are determined that whatever changes time and patience and intelligence will bring shall be for the common welfare, steps forward in a better and a happier world."

A Poet Talks Of Negroes

By CARL SANDBURG

THE human dignity of the American Negro comes easier to look at now than at any time since white men bought, stole and kidnapped the first black folk brought from Africa to this country.

And it might be asked, without getting unfair or indecent with anybody, whether the dignity of the white man ever sunk lower than it did when for a century and a half he took his sailing ships to African shores, loading them with naked Negroes fitted by the hundreds in "spoon fashion" so no cargo space would be wasted, shipping this human livestock across tropic seas at a high death rate, with a sanitation so vile and odors of such reek that sailors said when the wind was right you could smell a slave ship five miles away.

And when a man begins talking along this line there is a certain minority of American citizens north and south—a minority growing smaller as time goes by—and they have a standard question they ask as though you are floored and out of breath with nothing to say when this question hits you in the face.

* * *

THIS question—and there are those who think it is an unanswerable looloo runs like this: "Would you want to marry a nigger? Would you like to have one of your daughters marry a nigger?"

This is supposed to choke off any discussion you might want to start around the question of whether the Negro soldier in this war has as much a right as the white soldier to any or all of the Four Freedoms.

* * *

WHY should some of us find it deeply moving that an eminent spokesman, Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, founder-director of the Catholic Youth organization, spoke this week his fear and anxiety as to the "Christian ghettoes" of the Negro race and of how "in the case of these twelve million Americans . . . a disproportionate number have translated a deep inner frustration into an external attitude that is completely anti-social"?

The bishop sees danger signals. Working with Catholic youths of all sorts and conditions it has come clear to him that again because of hate and discrimination handed the Negro there may be grapes of wrath trampled in a vintage not so good to look at. "These people are no longer satisfied with weasel words and insincere promises. Their demands are most reasonable. The opportunity to progress, to better themselves economically, to share in the industrial, social, political and cultural life of America — these are the things that the American Negro seeks—and he can no longer be denied them. If the Negro is worthy to die with the white man, then he is worthy to live with him on terms of honest, objective equality."

* * *

WHAT are the demands? And what the realities the Negro hopes to fight for? "Liberty to speak, think, and worship as their conscience dictates, economic security free from the specter of unemployment and enforced poverty, the opportunity for education, for the normal fulfillment of these normal human desires which spell human happiness."

He could have named the poll-tax. The bishop knows about the poll-tax and about Christ's poor and how "too much respect for the local banker, industrialist, or politician has caused them to be silent when the teachings of Christ should have been literally shouted from the house-tops."

Party's Negro Policy Scored By McCorvey

NOV 11 1942

He Tells Leaders It Is Useless To Ask For Funds In Alabama

MOBILE, ALA., Nov. 10.—(AP)—Federal handling "of the negro situation in the South" has made it impossible for the Democratic Party to raise any substantial sum in Alabama, Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, wrote national party officials today.

McCorvey's letter, written to E. Ray Scott of the treasurer's office of the Democratic National Committee, also was sent to Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn.

NOV 11 1942

McCorvey, in releasing the letter for publication, said he did not desire to "stir up trouble" but he felt it his duty to inform the party leaders of sentiment in this section.

The letter was written, he said, in response to an appeal from the national committee for organization of a fund raising campaign.

The State Chairman said he had talked with numerous party leaders in this State and that "I was met with the statement that it would be utterly impossible to raise any substantial sum from Alabama Democrats until we first had some definite assurance . . . that our party was going to turn over a new leaf insofar as the handling of the negro situation in the South was concerned."

McCorvey said he was convinced any fund raising campaign was futile until "those in authority at national headquarters stop trying to work out a social revolution during wartimes."

"The negroes are our problem and we care for them in a way that they are not cared for in any other section of the country," the letter said.

NOV 11 1942

"However, we will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality and such a thing as having the white boys of our sections working side by side with negroes in factories or elsewhere in filling government contracts or any contracts is just unthinkable and unworkable."

McCorvey added:

"President Roosevelt and his wife have done more towards upsetting and disturbing the friendly relations heretofore existing between the white people and the colored people of the South than all of the other presidents and their wives who have occupied the White House during the time I have been old enough to take notice of such matters."

A RACE OF BEGGARS?

A white man who had done a good deal for Negroes was once heard to say that they were "a race of beggars." The statement was resented by Negroes who heard it or heard of it. But was he so far wrong? The only thing that Negroes have been willing to spend their money for has been to build church structures and fraternal benefit societies.

NOV 7 - 1942

A little while ago in Houston there was a campaign to raise funds for the Y. M. C. A. Despite the fact that there are a great number of Negroes who make more than $5000.00 a year, it is reported that only four gave as much as $1000.00 [illegible] one more than $1000.00. In the campaign for the War Chest this year, where a million and a half dollars ($1,500,000.00) was raised, Negroes by their separate efforts raised the munificent sum of $3000.00. Negroes will not support nurseries for the indigent children in their communities, they think that they are entitled to have somebody give them everything they need.

It might have been true in the past, immediately after Emancipation, that Negroes could not do anything for themselves. But today Negroes could do a great deal more for themselves than they are willing to do. Somebody needs to impress upon Negroes the fact that it is still true that those who give and serve are the biggest and the greatest in the community. The corollary is still true that those who selfishly grasp and refuse to give are the smallest and the littlest in their group.

NOV 7 - 1942

There is little doubt but that a great deal of our failure to make headway is due to our unwillingness to invest either our time, our money or our thoughts in the things that mean the most of us. We have let a beggar psychology envelope us, and as a race we seem to have no self ?reliance when it comes to getting things for ourselves. Oh, yes, we'll raise the devil to get somebody else to do something for us, but we will not spend any energy in helping ourselves. It is not intended here to imply that we should not insist upon being given our rights from others, but it intended to emphatically say that we must learn to give ourselves, not only for our own benefit but for the benefit of others, too. We will never climb above the rank of inferiors until we become givers and are real benefactors of the community in which we live.

Negro Speaker at Drake U. Tells of 'Non-Violent' Plan

NOV 5 - 1942

Bayard Rustin, 26-year-old field representative of the Fellowship or Reconciliation, New York City, found an eager audience largely composed of white and a few Negro Drake university students as he addressed them Tuesday afternoon at Carnegie hall on the "most vital problem—the position of the darker races in the world today and their relation to the American Negro."

NOV 5 - 1942

The students—many of whom expressed their unawareness of many of the racial problems that the Negro faced, were eager during the forum to do something about a solution—to try the speaker's plan of "non-violence" in blotting out racial discrimination.

Mr. Rustin, a Quaker, spoke of the Negro in America as a "split personality during the war—torn between what ought to be and the life he lives."

NOV 5 - 1942

He pointed out that the Negro is forced to come to the conclusions that "America is fundamentally dedicated to color," because he is refused jobs, denied freedom to eat, get equal education, live and go where he likes—because of the color of his skin.

"The church, the state and the school are the enumerator on the black common denominator."

"I am here to tell you fact—to tell you truths. I know that the basis of violence is to purport to have unity where unity cannot exist," Mr. Rustin spoke as he told of groups being organized in the north for the purpose of creating violence—the Ku Klux Klan, working in a modern fashion without the fiery cross, and being responsible for instances of the rioting of soldiers at Ft. Dix, the Detroit Housing riots, Negro soldiers being denied transportation on busses in the south.

"The Uncle Tom Negro—who bows and scrapes, and takes the whistbroom to brush off the dust, no longer exists, the young speaker declared, and added "if he does it is just to make money, and within a few years he will no longer exist."

A tremendous period of racial tension is coming in America, Mr. Rustin said and held the war as one of the forces responsible for it. "The necessity of developing race hatred during the war can be very easily directed to a member of the minority group in America."

NOV 5 - 1942

He informed that the March on Washington movement has recentlly voted to exclude white people in its constituency and leadership "because they say it is the middle class white people who are the proverbial tea drinkers, whose basis of racial equality is tea-sipping, talking and doing nothing. I am not saying that is good or bad," the speaker commented.

NOV 5 - 1942

Little Respect

"The world has little respect for talk," he continued and declared that "the only way to put in a consistent moral front is by action, by extending democracy where it should be."

In the non-violent method of solving racial problems Mr. Rustin said "it is necessary for me to behave in that high moral fashion, to follow the basic social teachings of Jesus Christ that every man admits of his Creator, that every man has some of God in him.

He told of "meditating" upon a hamburger for three and three-fourth hours in a white restaurant in a small Ohio town where he was at first refused service because he was a Negro. He told of the steps of his "behavior" stressing the truth in what he said; how his behavior moved the white customers in the restaurant so that they wanted the "truth to be respected"; and in the end how he secured his hamburger, and "from that time on the white restaurant owner is still serving colored people in that town."

"We are all concerned with getting the aims instead of getting the ends" he declared, and urged the stressing of the "process" as a means to the desired end.

In the non violent struggle, "one must constantly tell the truth, admit your own guilt" he explained. "It is necessary for a person to offer a creative plan—a plan of action that has an alternative. It is not a take it or leave it situation.

"One's screaming or yelling, striking back, one's fears and lies have been removed from the situation—the forces that support violence have been removed.

NOV 5 - 1942

"This plan calls for tremendous discipline," he declared as he stated that the "great responsibility rests upon Negroes who want freedom and "freedom," he assured "does not drop from the sky nor is it given upon a silver platter."

Rogers Says:-

BY J. A. ROGERS

AMERICA CANNOT WIN THE WAR AND APPEASE THE SOUTH

NOV 7 - 1942

CAN the United States win the war and continue to appease the cracker element in the South? Waldo Frank, foremost white American writer on Latin America, author of "Hispana America," and the noted novel on lynching, "Holiday," says flatly it can't be done, and that American hypocrisy in this respect sticks out like a sore thumb in South America, where the great bulk of the population is colored.

Mr. Frank, pointing out how the United States continues to appease 'Axis-enslaved and Axis-convinced Vichy," adds: "Even that is not the worst. We're still appeasing the anti-democratic forces at home. I'll give you one example: our treatment of our Negroes.

MAY LOSE BRAZIL AS AN ALLY

NOV 7 - 1942

"Brazil, whose colored population is beginning to flower with all its sensitive genius, is with us in this war. But Brazil will not be with us long if we go on appeasing our own race discriminators; so long as we fail to make clear what we want done with such colonies as Trinidad and Jamaica, where the Negro and East Indian are degraded and enslaved by our British allies."

Mr. Rogers

MR. FRANK adds: "While we go on appeasing our own anti-democratic forces, we just won't get very far against what the Japanese and the Germans and the Latin-Americans themselves are saying in a million humble huts from Mexico to Chile . . . The only word that is going to convince them is the clear word, the pure word of our dead . . . the word of consistent democratic action."

AXIS PROPAGANDA IS EFFECTIVE

Mr. Frank is quite right. Propaganda is one of the greatest forces in this war, and the treatment of the Negro in America, in particular, is a weapon ready made by us for Hitler and the Japanese. Several times a day, the Berlin radio broadcasts to South and Central America, telling the vast colored population there how colored people are treated in the United States and what they may expect if ever the United States come out on top.

The last four lynchings in the South were an especially fine morsel for Hitler. Tokio, of course, does the same to the people of the East. Their accounts of what is happening in the United States sound just as horrible as what we, on our side, tell of what is happening in the conquered lands.

MUCH of this Axis propaganda in South America sticks, because very few Latin-Americans like the United States at heart. The antagonism goes too far back and lies too deeply. Fine words will pass between diplomats, but the feeling is something like that between Catholic and Protestant. No matter how many get-together meetings are held, the old feeling still lies at the bottom and can be stirred by a single wrong word. Latin America has never liked Anglo-Saxon America, and with abundant justification.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS JIM CROW

This Axis propaganda to Latin America can have terrific consequences, if not during this war, after it. I am looking for a resurgence of all the old rivalries after this war, for the simple reason that although the so-called democratic nations are fighting for their very existence, they are just as eagerly holding on to their old injustices — those injustices which, when committed by Hitler and the Japanese, are painted to us in such a horrible light. I expect no better world after this war because the same type of men, and often the same men, themselves who, through their conduct, helped to bring on this war, are still in power and are going to dictate the peace, if ever there is one.

NOV 7 - 1942

IN the meantime the South continues to go out of the way to insult Negroes. The latest is that in Atlanta, the taxicab that carries a Negro cannot also carry a white person, and that all cabs in that city must carry jim-crow signs . . must say whether they carry white or colored. This gem of democratic justice and common sense, mark you, has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme court, which is supposed to exist for the dispensing of colorless justice.

STRONG EXPLOITERS ARE TO BLAME

Another glaring injustice of the week is the sentencing of 25 Moslem cultists in Chicago to three years each in prison for draft evasion and the same to Lewis Jones of New York City for refusing to serve in a jim-crow army. Now I am not saying that these individuals are entirely right, but I do feel that if they deserved three years, those who created the conditions against which these individuals rebelled deserved nine years.

THERE can be no peace on this earth as long as the perpetrators of an injustice, because they are powerful, are allowed to go scot free, while their victims must suffer still more, simply because they are doing what their conscience tells them is the only way out of an intolerable situation these strong exploiters have built up about them. The parties most guilty in this case are not the 25 cultists and Lewis Jones, but the jim-crow rulers of the American Army and Navy. Remove the latter and I wager you'll find no Negro refusing military service.

THE CONSTITUTION OPPOSES JIM CROW

Moreover, what these defendants have done is entirely in accord with the traditions of the Founding Fathers. It is precisely the spirit that has always been applauded in those who fought for American independence—the spirit of "give me equality and justice... or give me death!"

BUT we don't need to go as far back as 1776. If what these defendants have done had been done by Poles or French or Bulgarians or Greeks against Hitler, the American papers would be ringing with their applause. However, the most elementary reasoning tells me that if you send a man to prison for opposing jim-crow, you justify jim-crow, which is only Hitlerism under another name. Moreover, the United States Constitution opposes jim-crow.

FOUR CURRENT TOPICS TASK FOR GREAT MINDS

The Weekly Review

Birmingham, Ala

OCT 31 1942

56K

Willkie

Like millions of others, we feel that Wendell Willkie in his report last Monday night gave the people of the United States, the type of report they havev wanted for a long time. And it is our opinion that the majority of healthy minded Americans agree with Mr. Willkie's conclusions. Put the report of Mr. Willkie and the memorable speech of Vice President Wallace on "the Common Man" together and you have the writing on the wall as it relates to our winning the war and peace. Failure to heed these two master-pieces — the two best— uttered so far on the present world conflict, means the one shot in a million of saving what we have built up in America beginning with the fall of Chrispus Attucks on Boston Common.

Poll Tax

Voteless people are defenseless people. We do not believe in taxiation without representation and we believe all sane people should never be denied the right to participate in the honest election of public servants We believe there should be some qualifying rules as governing those who register to vote, but we do not belive that should be measured in terms of exhorbitant cumulative poll tax. We feel that individuals who have proven themselves good citizens in the constructive sense of the word should be encouraged to vote. Any man who is good enough to shoulder arms for this And the Negro, of today, is far different from the Negro of 76 years ago. He would no more sell his vote today than the white man of today. Those of both groups who could qualify on an deucational basis are needde as voters in order that those of us who believe in free enterprise versus communism, may have enough voting strength to say to the politicians who have gotten us into the mess in which we find ourselves today—regimented, distrusted and hangerons to certain undemocratic practices, which are very definitely deviding us into a host of minorties, classes, clans and cliques—a house devided against itself cannot stand nor can a nation stand half slave and half free.

Lynching

Lynching galore followed the other world war. They thrive wherever you have ignorance, superstitious and undernourished people. Lynching annot be done away with by law, because the law, in those communities where lynching occur most frequently is administered by lynchers or those who depend upon them for bread. Real education is the only hope. Beautiful shool houses, well paid teachers and long terms, do not always spell educational opportunity for those exposed to this sort of set-up. The important thing is what is taught in the school. Lynchers are taught to lyuch. Haters are taught to hate. The prejudiced are taught to be prejudiced. This is carried over into even some of our daily newspapers who while they write very good editorials against lynching, at the same time print untruths on the real reasons back of almost all lynching in the news columns. And far more people who read are guided by the news columns than by the editorial page. Study each lynching case and you will be convinced that lynchers are our most ignorant, undernourished and semi-mentally deranged citizens. And their prey is usually one of their own kind except for color. The lynching evil as it is manifested in the real thing, or other streamlined forms is going to wreck our democratic society, if we do not deal with it as we should with any other type of cold blooded murder. And there is no difference between a lyncher and Adolph Hitler, Hirohito at Pearl Harbor or Mussolini's murdering hordes in Ethiopia at the begining of the Hitler crusade to lynch the free people of the world. We do not condone violation of any woman, but lynchers taking the law into their own hands when truly democratic courts are quite able to take are of the execution of the law, commit a crime whih is no less henious.

Mallon

Paul Mallon, has expressed himself on the Negro problem, quite vigerously during the past two weeks in his widely syndicated column. Being a Negro, the writer feels that he is a better authority on the Negro problem than Mr. Mallon, a white man, could ever be. All or at least most of the bellyaching Negro leaders are doing on this so-called Negro problem, adds up to just this: The Negro is not trying to force himself into the society of whites who do not want him in their society. He feels that most of the allegations lodged agains the race, is like unto the m who grabbed a man on the stre —dragged him into a dark all —stripped him of his shirt—fo ed him at the end of a revolver into the street and yelled for the police and had the man arrested and convicted for indecent exposure. Another picture which describes the thing they hate and rave about is the way that so many unsocial-minded people stand along their pathway, and wait until they get moving swiftly in a progressive direction, and then stick their legs out and trip the race down on its face. Mr. Mallon, like most white Negro problem specialists goes far afield when he suggest that the Negro can lift himself by his bootstraps. That is a feat which only the supernatural could scarely perform under the most favorable circumstances. The right solution of the Negro problem is the white man's responsibility. O fcourse that responsibility begins with the Negro's effort to do the best he can for himself ,but it extends far beyond that point because, the white man has much to gain by a proper solution of the problem while the Negro ha so little to lose by the whit man's failure to discharge h duty. And when we speak of the white man doing his duty, we feel that he will be doing his duty when he desists from intervening in the Negro's effort to enjoy a full measure of and to make a contribution to the betterment of society as a man and a human being. He ought voluntarily and realistically face the task of dealing with this problem on the basis of truth. Mr. Mallon must never forget that the Negro's problem is the unsocialminded white man. And that changing his mind by whatever method this may be accomplished, will solve the Negro problem. As we said before, on many occasions, and as Mr. Mallon says in his latest article— bitterness ought be dropped on both sides and we ought move forward on a basis of fair and straight thinking. It is not for any one to give the Negro that which belongs to him. It is rather for all to cut out with holding from the Negro the opportunity to develop himself as a full-fledged American citizen, untrampled by political and economic instruments of oppression, terrorism, barring him from intergration on a vertical basis, into free participation and administration in all that has to do with the welfare of all the people.

OCT 31 1942

There are a lot of white people who will agree with us on the above, but too many of them are not free and courageous enough to take a stand for these right and just things. The solution of this very problem may never be realized because the enslavement of so many supposedly free white people right here, in what we call a free country. More men and women are enslaved today by the unsocial-minded thinking people among us than is represented by the four million Abraham Lincoln set free politically. And this it another indication of the fact the slavery does more harm to the slavers than the slaves.

Good work has been done in the collection of scrap, but there must be no relaxation of effort. The drive must continue! There is a shortage in the production of certain basic materials, but there is abundance of scrap, and for once our prodigal habits will stand us in good stead.

Once again, and somewhat unexpectedly, the State of South Carolina's finances are in excellent shape, a matter for most sincere congratulation! What is the next step? All are probably agreed that there's going to be a big let-down after the war, whenever that is to be, and a neat surplus then would help mightily. The Legislature has two ways open, to act cautiously and prepare for the rainy day that is most assuredly coming, or spend prodigally in the hope that good times will never cease.

* * * *

Mr. Byrnes is tackling the hardest job of his career, including that day when as a little lad of fourteen he dropped out of school to undertake the job of making his way in the world. Mr. Byrnes has ability, he has personality, he has a way with people and gets them on his side. But he's up against intrenched greed in the person of organized labor leaders, who wield tremendous authority by virtue of the vote they control, and up to this time have succeeded in thwarting the desire of the remainder of us for a ceiling that will really hold down prices for labor as well as for everybody else. From the looks of things Mr. Byrnes is going to have this crowd on his hands, and the fight, if there is one, will not be at long range, but of the knock-down and drag-out variety. Luck to him, as the lives and fortunes of all of us and the future of our country are involved.

* * * *

Edgar G. Brown, of Illinois, director of the National Negro Council and for the past twenty years the recognized spokesman of the negro race, has turned the colored vote of the country over to the Republicans, according to Jesse S. Cottrell, Washington political writer. This is where the colored vote used to be, and where it belongs, and there is no special cause for excitement, so far as real Democrats are concerned. Brown and his crowd have played clever politics, and the move Mr. Cottrell predicts is another move in the same direction. If everything Brown and his cohorts demand is granted, we very much prefer, so far as we are concerned, that it be at the hands of the Republicans.

The News and Courier sings the praises of Governor Dixon, of Alabama, another chief executive who made good. Mr. Dixon went into office with the Alabama treasury depleted. Before assuming office he called in eminent men of the State as advisers, and they decided on economies. When he took office, he promptly got busy, took counsel with the Legislature, and certain reforms were effected, bureaus and commissions were abolished or combined with others, and the State put on a sound, financial footing. The News and Courier sees no hope of anything on this order in South Carolina when we begin a new year in January, but let's hope our men go to Columbia resolved to prepare for the evil day that is most likely just ahead.

Democracy Goes Up a Notch: Pepper and Willkie

California Eagle
Los Angeles, Cal
OCT 29 1942

Fundamental pronouncements of Administration policy, statements of vast international significance, came this week from Senator Claude Pepper of Florida and former Republican presidential nominee Wendell Willkie. OCT 29 1942

As the city of Los Angeles mobilized in its mighty effort to aid in the anti-poll tax battle with a mass meeting of 3,000, with a petition drive netting 15 thousand signatures in one day, and an unprecedented flood of telegrams to the Senate Judiciary Committee and Senator Hiram Johnson, — as all these things happened, the No. 1 man of President Franklin Roosevelt's Administration, Senator Claude Pepper, told that audience of 3,000 gathered at Second Baptist in East Los Angeles: "A great surge of democracy has gone through the earth. Millions have begun to suffer and die, — not for wealth, not for possessions, but for people, yellow white, black. When that spirit surged through the House, the petition to draw the Geyer Anti-Poll Tax bill from committee, was successful, and the bill passed the House overwhelmingly. It is that surging democratic spirit which will pass Anti-Poll Tax legislation in the Senate.

OCT 29 1942

"As never before," the Senator said, "the world is one, physically, geographically, spiritually. We have dedicated ourselves to the high task of securing freedom for all continents, all nations, and all colors . . .

"If this is just another war for empire; if this is just another contest for the right to exploit, we are as bad as those we defeat and American blood will have been shed in vain."

Continuing, he pointed out, "We have many problems here in this nation, problems of breaking down prejudice and recognizing the dignity of men, — all men. A lot has gone before, scars, misunderstanding. But the question we must answer is: are we going to liberate the masses of people from privilege and wealth? I see America as a partnership. NOT AS A NATION FOR MASTER AND SERVANT."

Senator Pepper, as recognized spokesman for the Administration, is not in a position to speak for the purposes of expelling wind. What he says is of basic importance to the struggle of Negro America and of our whole nation in winning this war.

The present Democratic party rests, first, upon the power of President Franklin Roosevelt and the progressive, anti-fascist elements in American life, and, second, upon that of the poll-tax South. This poll-tax South exists because it disfranchises 10 million Southern people, white and black. It represents a brutal and corrupt domination of vast sections of America through force and violence. It further represents the forefront of native Fascism, replete with Hitler's theory of race superiority as an excuse and basis for what Wendell Willkie has called "the imperialism within our country." OCT 29 1942

What does it mean, then, when at long last the progressive wing of the Democratic party comes to blows in direct, devastating political warfare with the fascist poll-tax South? It means, that the fight of Negro America has been joined by the MOST POTENT POLITICAL POWER OF OUR TIME: THE PROGRESSIVE, WIN-THE-WAR, ROOSEVELT WING OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY! Such a coalition means victory!

The Pepper speech was a declaration of unity between the anti-fascist Administration and the battle for Negro rights as opposed to the defeatest poll-tax South. It is of profound importance. Our role is clear — we must purge from us every vestige of defeatism. We must FIGHT LIKE HELL TO SECURE THE VICTORY WITHIN SIGHT. A local application of that fight, is the effort to defeat anti-Roosevelt, Hoover-Fascist Earl Warren as governor of California. OCT 29 1942

The defeat of Warren is as important in the anti-poll tax fight as pressure upon Hiram Johnson. Under the revolting reams of "non-partisan" propaganda spread by Warrenites is the glaring truth that Warren and his henchmen represent vicious opposition to the Administration and its win-the-war polices. Prominent among these win-the-war policies is the President's executive Order 8802, whose full implementation has to date been prevented through the existence of Warren's cohorts in this State and his poll-tax comrades of the South.

Racial Ideology And The War.

NOV 1 - 1942

WALTER WHITE, the executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told an audience at the Greater Bethesda Baptist church Sunday that the question of race is an important factor which will affect the course of the war and influence its outcome. Said he:

> "It becomes clearer every day that, unless the United States and the United Nations meet the issue of race courageously, the Axis will win the war. India's seething millions see little difference between white masters or yellow ones, even as did the people of Burma and Malay. In answer to their plea for freedom, the Indians received the cynical answer from Churchill that everything is all right in India and that 'only five hundred Indians have been killed.' NOV 1 - 1942
>
> "The Indians in India, Negroes in the United States, the Carribean and Africa, and other colored peoples of the world today ask the so-called white nations, 'Why is it noble and heroic for white people to fight for their freedom and treasonable for colored people to fight for theirs?' "

When we hear of the sordid spectacle of America's defense industries hiring skilled Negroes in custodial positions when their skills are needed in more important ones; the American Federation of Labor demanding that defense workers in skilled positions be demoted simply because they are black; the pattern of racial discrimination and segregation by the armed forces of the nation and its resulting effect upon the morale of Negroes; the lynchings of colored people in the South and the diabolical conditions under which they live in that area coupled with the effective use of the treatment of such news by axis nations for propaganda purposes for the consumption of the millions of colored people who are fighting on the allied side rather strikes us that the statement of militant Walter White carries with it a significance that approaches a prophecy.

NOV 1 - 1942

There will be no all-out effort for victory of the United Nations unless and until the luxury of racial segregation and discrimination is abolished. The white people of the South are holding the nation's war efforts back in that respect and are sending their attitudes northward, eastward, and westward to contaminate the latent convictions and ideas of the people North of the Mason and Dixon line.

America should drop the color line. The armed forces should dissolve the racial demarcation lines. Industrialists, defense and non-defense, should invite all workers to produce the nation's goods, wares and merchandise regardless of race or religion or creed. The everyday citiwzen should dismiss his petty prejudices and view this World's Civil war as a struggle whereby the destiny of mankind will be determined, not by the color of a person's skin but, by the ideals of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

Rumor Roots In Minds Of Whites, Memphians Say

OCT 17 1942

The Informer
Houston, Tex.

By Staff Correspondence

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(Special)—Despite the denial of local newspapers, Joe Boyle, police commissioner, Percy Wyly, special agent in charge of the Memphis office of the FBI, and the radio station WMC, this city is still in the grip of rumors of racial unrest.

Last week it reached it's height when there were constant rumors about trouble brewing between whites and Negroes

The FBI say this is a trick of the Axis to give the impression of an organized program of disloyalty to the government by Negroes. Propaganda has been spread, said Mr. Wyly, to harm civilian morale.

OCT 17 1942

Negroes here attribute the propaganda to the series of police brutalities on members of their race, and underhand methods used to deprive Negroes of employment in defense industries, not only here but all over the South. There are many examples of qualified Negroes being turned down for jobs which need men, but which are restricted to whites only.

Negroes Rounded-up

Negroes have been rounded up on frivilous charges of vagrancy, having no visible means of support, being dangerous and suspicious characters, and numerous others, and now this is reacting against the government

Negroes express the view that the trouble with Memphis is too much of Commissioner Joe Boyle's arrogant bungling of police affairs, and Nazi propaganda could easily spread with methods used to handle Negroes.

OCT 17 1942

Most Memphis officials think Negroes should be picking cotton, and this is another sore spot in the side of Negroes who are constantly harrassed by police, informed sources say.

Negroes recall very vividly the trouble that Commissioner Boyle and the police department caused late in 1940 and early 1941, when unprecedented tactics of "picketing" the South Memphis Drug Store on Florida Street, owned and operated by Dr. J. B. Martin, president of the Negro American League, and Elmer Atkisson's Stag Billiard Parlor on Beale street, immediately following the presidential election in 1940.

Dr. Martin, who had lived in Memphis for more than a quarter of a century before, was a Wendell Willkie for president supporter. Atkinson was, also, and openly campaigned for his election over the wishes of Mr. "Holy Joe" Boyle and the Edward Hull Crump regime.

The result of this episode forced these men and their immediate families to take up residence elsewhere. Dr. Martin moved to Chicago where he is a leading figure in Republican politics, and civic affairs. Atkinson and his family sold their newly purchased home and went North also.

City Seethed

Memphis seethed under this injustice. The daily papers decried the tactics, published pictures of policemen standing in front of these men's businesses stopping and in some cases searching little children, grown-ups and in one case a Catholic priest was molested as he left Atkisson's place of business. (The Atkissones, are Catholics and Mrs. Atkisson sang in the choir at the church.)

All this and much more has served to increase unrest in the hearts and minds of white people locally.

They know of these miscarriages of justice, and it is only natural to assume that with this fertility any rumor would take root among them and cause a scare.

White Daily To Front

"Its all in their minds and the result of their misgivings," said one Memphian who preferred that his name not be used in print because of the stern reprisals invoked by the Crump machine against those who dare tell the bald truth and place the onus where it belongs.

The Commercial Appeal, powerful daily, which owns the WMC radio station ordered two broadcasts in its efforts to assuage the situation which said in part:

" Ladies and gentlemen.

Here is a news item of special importance. Long before Pearl Harbor the cry was sent up against spreading rumors—how rumormongers helped Hitler and Hirohito. Time and time again we've been told not to listen to rumors. This cannot be emphasized too strongly. Don't listen to rumors.

"For a specific case of what rumors can do, let's come right to our own doorstep—right here at home—in Memphis.

"For several days now rumors have been going the rounds of impending racial disturbances. They were nothing but rumors.

"These rumors have been thoroughly investigated, according to Percy Wyly, special agent in charge of the local FBI office. and there is no racial trouble in Memphis. Let me repeat. These rumors are groundless and there is no racial trouble in Memphis. The next time you hear a person say there is, ask him where he found out. Pin down the rumor-monger! Make them tell you the facts. And you'll discover that what they are spreading are complete falsehoods.

"You know, this business of rumors is a well known propaganda trick of a fellow by the name of Hitler—and his cohorts, Hirohito and Mussolini. These aggressors want to spread rumor—for by doing so they make it easier to conquer a country.

"So, stop spreading rumors! Every time you listen to a rumor and repeat it, you're playing on Hitler's ball team and you're helping him to beat your boy at the front.

In an editorial appearing in Wednesday's Commercial Appeal, under the caption "A Rumor-monger Is A Fool," the powerful organ stated.

"For some time Memphis and the Mid-South have been flooded with rumors—most delated to our war undertakings.

"All of these rumors are foolish. Some have reached proportions where they have become downright dangerous.

They have created a feeling of uncertainty, doubt and anxiety among our people. If permitted to spread they can do us. as a people, as a section, as a Nation, irreparable harm.

"None of the rumors—and The Commercial Appeal has heard all—have any foundation in fact.

"All of us are living under great emotional, social and economic stress, for global warfare imposes strains more severe than any ever before experienced. It is only natural, therefore, that some of us should become easy victims of gossship and our anxieties.

"Probing into the genesis of rumors will serve no good purpose They are conceived in the minds of foolish people, and foolish people listen to them and spread them.

"There comes a time, of course when rumors spread beyond the bounds of tolerance and patience.

"That time has been reached. It has been reached by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and by all agencies charged with the internal security of this country.

"The spreading of unfounded rumors," said Percy Wyly, special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Memphis, "is a matter in which the FBI has an especial interest.

"The chief task of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is to preserve the internal integrity of the United States, and that, of course, the FBI intends to do to the best of its ability.

"There are laws under which rumor-mongers and rumor spreaders may be prosecuted in the United States courts, and it is my intention to seek out and accuse those responsible for the spreading of rumors in the area under my control."

"The Commercial Appeal feels that this admonition from the FBI should be sufficient to deter any person from spreading the gossip which is going the rounds.

"It asks all of its readers, when they hear stories which are alarming, to ask the person reporting them, and to examine into the reasons for their spreading.

"Having done that, The Commercial Appeal asks that they report their findings to Mr. Wyly.

"These rumors are doing none of us any good. A great deal of evil may be done if they are not stopped. The FBI is determined that they will stop."

OCT 31 1942

Advises Race To Join Unions, Move Out Of South

CHICAGO, Ill.—(ANP)—A definite program to be followed by whites and another to be obesrved by Negroes is suggested by Dr Edwin R. Embree, president of the Julius Rosenwald fund, in an article appearing in the November issue of the Survey Graphic magazine.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

This article entitled, "Color — The Unfinished Business of Democracy," said in part:

"The very purpose of the present world struggle demands that we give to all men at home that liberty and opportunity that we art fighting to preserve throughout the world.

OCT 31 1942

"I list a few suggestions . . definite next steps. Recognizing that social changes must be gradual if they are to be lasting, I recommend only these changes that seem to me both basic and feasible.

"1. Cease racial discrimination in the armed forces. Open the training facilities and the opportunities for promotion clear up to the highest rank to every American in the army, the navy, and the air forces. Let separate contigents of whites and Negroes continue where this will conserve custom and morale, but organize mixed troops wherever democratic tradition permits — which is among more than three fourths of the American people.

PROTECT TROOPS

"2. Protect Negro troops from insult and abuse by stern insistence on respect for the American uniform. That soldiers in uniform have been allowed to be driven from their seats in public conveyances, attacked by hoodlums, and even killed, is an amazing reflection on Army discipline and respect for the flag.

INSIST ON JOBS

OCT 31 1942

"3. Continue to insist that in all war production, employment be given without discrimination as to race, creed, or color. Employment practices set now will in part persist into peace-time industry.

4. Equalize schools and other public facilities, as is strictly ordered in the constitution of these United States.

"While the southern states will probably wish to keep segregation of public facilities for many years to come, all these must be made equal for both races.

"5. Abolish the poll tax. Full rights will come to any group only if it has that voice in government that in a democracy comes through the ballot.

FOR NEGROES

"The few basic steps toward democracy that I have indicated above require action by the controlling authorities, chiefly white. Meanwhile there are some steps I recommend Negroes be taking for themselves.

OCT 31 1942

"1. Join labor unions, Insist on the right to join unions wherever there is any question. Join farmers' organizations and tenant unions. In every way identify yourselves with the great tidal movements of the common man.

"2. Take advantage of training facilities in industry so that you will be ready to step into higher and higher skills as these are opened. Openings undreamed of a few-years ago are coming every day. Get ready for them and demand them.

PATRONIZE OWN

"3. Patronize your own stores, your own insurance companies, your own doctors and lawyers, your own writers, musicians, and artists. I know that this is in itself a kind of segregation. This is another of these pragmatic compromises.

"4. Take pride in your distinctiveness. Negroes have made notable gifts to American life, especially in music, dance and folklore, in literature and drama. A few colored snobs — only a few, thank God — seem ashamed of anything that is distinctively Negro. Keep on laughing, singing, dancing, making jokes. Make fun of the white ofays if you want to, but anyway, keep making fun. Keep on eating good food and wearing gay clothes, and enjoying life. Keep swinging.

MOVE OUT OF SOUTH

"5. Keep moving out of the south. There is no decent life for you in the southern rurals so far as the mind of man can see. You will have a hard time even in the north and west, but at least you'll have some freedom, you'll once in a while be treated as human beings.

OCT 31 1942

And as you leave the south you will relieve your fellows of that pressure which is always heaviest where the colored masses are denset. At least another million Negroes should move out of the south during this decade."

California Town Bars Negroes After Sundown

OCT 1 6 1942

OCT 1 6 1942

By WENDELL GREEN

LOS ANGELES. — (ANP) — Signs have been posted in Taft, Cal., ordering Negro soldiers out of town at sundown. Taft a small oil town located 25 miles from Bakersfield, has long been notorious for its anti-Negro attitude and has often been referred to as the spot of Mississippi in California.

It has always boasted that it doesn't allow Negroes in the town after dark and has posted signs to that effect. Oliver Goins, former baseball player with Jim Hunt's L. A. Giants, recalled how that in 1928 when they had a five-game series with a Taft nine they had to stay in Bakersfield overnight between games.

OCT 1 6 1942

Just outside the city as they entered it was a huge sign which said, "Niggers, don't let the sun go down on you here."

Other teams who have played there since have reported similar such signs. Goins also stated that at that time there was one colored family living in the town, a man and his wife. He swept the streets and she took in washing.

Taft has been the butt of many jokes among Negroes and some of them without a doubt are true, but this situation is no longer a joking matter. Taft was way out of the beaten path and the only Negroes that visited there were members of baseball teams that played Taft teams.

OCT 1 6 1942

Now the situation is changed and calls for serious action. Negro soldiers are stationed near Taft to protect the valuable oil fields in the vicinity. The Los Angeles Sentinel is requesting the FBI to investigate the matter of these signs and to file charges of treason against those responsible for such signs.

No Racial Unrest In Memphis, FBI And Leaders Say

Leading Citizens Issue Statement Denying Report

MEMPHIS—(ANP) — The lie has been put to mounting rumors of racial unrest and agitation here according to findings contained in a report by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Negro leaders, Mayor Chandler and the local police force.

OCT 1 2 1942

Percy Wyly, special agent in charge of the Memphis office of the FBI, said his probe has revealed no indications of organized sabotage among Negro citizens.

He added that repetition of rumors is an old axis trick to create confusion and inspire disloyalty. Repeating of rumors therefore is harmful to civilian morale and hinders the war effort he said.

Negro leaders were emphatic in their denial of foreign underground activities among their constituency. Persons guilty of spreading such rumors, they declared, would be regarded as traitors. They issued a statement in which they said:

GROSSLY UNTRUE

OCT 1 2 1942

"Reports have come to our attention that unrest exists among the Negroes of Memphis.

"Such reports are grossly untrue.

"The Negroes of Memphis are patriotic and law-abiding. They are loyal and faithful to the democratic principles and idealism of the United States.

"Their first interest is in helping to the limit of their ability, the winning of the war which endangers all—white and colored. They realize and understand that should the enemy be victorious that they, as a race, would be among the first to feel the sting of the totalitarian whiplash.

"They realize that there may be persons who will seek to create a breach between them and their fellow white citizens.

"They realize that there are persons who would—if they could—destroy the happy and constructive relationships which have so long existed between the white and colored citizens of Memphis.

"For these reasons they wish to assure the people of Memphis that they will do their very utmost to sustain this happy relationship. To that end they will cooperate to the very limit with the government of Memphis, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

NO GRIEVANCE

OCT 1 2 1942

"The Negro has no grievance against the white people of Memphis and will regard anyone, white or Negro, who spreads rumors to the effect that they have such grievance and are planning trouble, as a traitor."

The statement bore the signatures of:

J. A. Beauchamp, executive secretary of the Negro Chamber of Commerce; A. A. Latting, attorney, Negro Chamber of Commerce; Dr. R. Q. Vinson, executive committeeman Autress Russell Post 27, American Legion; L. C. Sharpe, principal of Douglass school; Dr. J. B. F. Shaw, pastor of Centenary Methodist church, and W. Alonzo Locke, Hotelmen's Improvement club.

Mayor Chandler was quick to concur with Negro leaders and issued a companion statement which said in part:

OCT 1 2 1942

"It is unfortunate that good citizens, when excited, sometimes spread rumors which, on even casual investigation, would have been found absolutely groundless.

"The persistent rumors that government agencies here were apprehensive of sabotage or other trouble evidently arose from the fact of increases in the personnel at the Memphis Municipal airport for the purpose of guarding valuable property moving in and out of the port. It is only common sense that, in proportion to the value of war equipment, material, and supplies on hand, increased protection be given against any possible damage or loss.

"Therefore, the city commission hopes that those who have received and passed on the unfounded rumors will correct the erroneous reports, and will disabuse their own minds of any supposed unrest among the people of our city.

"We have a loyal and patriotic citizenry which must not be swept off its feet in any crisis; especially by false propaganda at a time like the present, when we need every ounce of strength and nervous energy for the fight against the axis enemies."

Joe Boyle, commissioner of public safety, said:

OCT 1 2 1942

"This talk is the result of a lot of irresponsible people playing around with gossip."

"CLARENCE DARROW FOR THE DEFENSE"

IRVING STONE has written an excellent biography of Clarence Darrow, which although published last year, has just come to our attention. It is called "Clarence Darrow For The Defense" and recites in detail the many internationally famous cases he defended. These included the Sweet Case of Detroit in which Dr. Osian Sweet, Negro physician, and his younger brother were successfully defended on a murder charge which grew out of an attempt on the part of prejudiced whites to run the Negro family from their newly purchased home.

The late Mr. Darrow, over a period of nearly sixty years, fought the battles of the poor and made a specialty of espousing unpopular causes. He defended the strikers against a conspiracy charge in the Pullman strike of the early 1890's and was counsel for the McNamara brothers in the Los Angeles Times bombing case, out ~~of which~~ grew a bribery charge against the defense attorney

He is perhaps remembeerd for his legal battle with the late William Jenings Bryan in the famous Scope case wherein the State of Tennessee tried to prevent the teaching of evolution in the public and high schools of that state. He also defended Naval Lt. Massie for the slaying of a Hawaiian athlete following an alleged criminal assault on his wife, and was successful in preventing the State of Illinois from enacting the death penalty against Leopold and Loeb for the brutal murder of Bobbie Franks.

In the eearly days of the New Deal, he was responsible, perhaps more than any other individual, in knocking out the NRA, which was fast becoming a tool of big business against the small business establishment of the country.

Throughout his lifetime he was color-blind in respect to the Negro and was outspoken against jim-crowism and all forms of discrimination based on race. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was one of the few organizations he joined and took an active part in its program during his lifetime.

In the last war he raised his voice and used his legal skill to help the foreign-born minorities and to defend the right of the Communist party to organize and protest against the reaction of the post-war period.

Unfortunately, Mr. Darrow is no longer with us, but his example of tolerance is a high mark toward which present national leaders should strive to emulate.

These reflections were occasioned by the recent statement of Mark Ethridge, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal and member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. At a recent hearing of this committee in Birmingham, Ala., Mr. Ethridge said:

> "Negroes must recognize that there is no power in the world—not even in all the mechanized armies of the earth, allies and axis—which could force the southern white people to the abandonment of the principle of social segregation."

Instead of preaching tolerance to the white South and urge that they put in practice the democracy they are preaching, he is catering to this southern prejudice. This attitude has definitely destroyed Mr. Ethridge's usefulness as a member of the F. E. P. C.

The attitude of the white South in their determination to keep the Negro in the place of second-class citizen certainly cannot help to promote a feeling of unity among America's largest minority group, and anyone supporting this attitude is cetrainly not in sympathy with the letter or spirit of the President's proclamation which brought about the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Our government and the Allied nations are sadly in need of a leader with the catholicity of spirit and humanitarian instincts of a Clarence Darrow.".

The Old South Versus New Negro

By LESTER E. BROWN

The old South, steeped in its "culture" of Negrophobia, poll taxes and caste-feudalism, is now fighting desperately to preserve its traditions. The pity is that a man like Mark Ethridge, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, hopelessly laments for us in the South with the dire prophecy: "The southern Negro must recognize that there is no power in the world which can force the southern white man to abandon social segregation." We shall not now pass judgment on Ethridge here. We only hope that he has not come to feel that all of the great work that he has attempted in improving the Negro-white relations in the South has come to naught.

We hope that Mr. Ethridge and his brilliant colleague, Herbert Agar, will keep up their valient fight and know that we who have followed their activities appreciate what they have done.

We here want to take exception to the prophecy of Mr. Ethridge and want to serve notice positively on Messrs. Rankin of Mississippi, Vinson of Georgia and Ed Smith of South Carolina and all their ilk—that a New Negro is going to fashion not only a better South but a better nation for human beings to live in.

Never has America seen a more realistic segment of patriots. Heretofore the Negro has been blind in his patriotism, now he is evincing patriotism with light. The New Negro sees as clearly in this day as Lincoln did in his, that this world cannot be a progressive, cooperative world attaining its maximum creativity with half of it free and half of it slaves. The Negro has therefore been eager to throw his weight of opinion on the side of the clear seeing forces of our times who really want to get at the roots of world discord, injustice and segregation and extirpate them.

The New Negro has a reassuring asset, and that is courage. We mean not that courage found in few leaders but among the average. Men of the other group have noted this and commented. A young white liberal in Cleveland related how pleased he is to see how Negroes of today will stand up and hold their ground for principles they believe to be right. In his earlier years, Mr. Kennedy observed, we would easily cringe, leave our leaders stranded when the going got tough.

When we have prophecies such as ". . . no power in the world which can force the southern white man to abandon social segregation . . ." we think remorsefully of the poor French who thought that 5,000,000 men behind the Maginot Line were impregnable against any power. May we remind those who share this prophecy that there is a power in this world which can force the southern white man to abandon social segregation. They thought that the century-old caste system in England would forever keep the diverse social and economic elements of the population neatly divided. But a rude jolt liquified this millenium of nonsense when a thousand planes began to rain death and destruction. They huddled together like sand fleas at Coney Island. Why? Because the urge for survival, in one sudden terrorizing moment, liquidated all of the conscious barriers which these men permitted for long cruel centuries because they were thought to be social necessities.

No responsible man in Washington today fails to see the folly of trying to propagandize this war as one of principle unless he does something concrete in making the tenets of the constitution—freedom and justice—become operative at home. The real exponents of democracy are glad to see the New Negro under the leadership of A. Philip Randolph and the NAACP, take up the cudgels in behalf of insuring a victory for justice in the South as well as the North for all citizens.

The late Kelly Miller used to admonish: "He who feels the pain should utter the groan and lead the way in relieving it." We today heartily agree. When the New Negro leads the way for his own betterment he gives courage to the millions of right thinking people in this country who will applaud, encourage and support his fight. We do not now expect the white liberal to give us advice, lead us and take the rap. We will now lead and endure for full justice and of course appreciate his aid in our ranks.

The New Negro keenly perceives that the moment has arrived when he must assume a more important role in life than that of a political social and economic lackey for others solely because his skin is dark. The Negro now more than ever realizes that this world is dominated by thought reduced to dynamic ideas.

Regardless of all prophecies to the contrary, a people who begin to germinate leading ideas will ultimately melt into insignificance the static ideas about their "place" in the scheme of things.

Frank Crosswaith Keynotes March on Washington Rally

(BY J. ROBERT SMITH)

Visualizing the dawning of a new day in the history of the American Negro, Frank R. Crosswaith, chairman of the Negro Labor Committee, and Star-News columnist, speaking before more than 20,000 Negroes in Madison Square Garden, Tuesday night, told his vast protesting audience that "this is the first funeral I ever attended in Madison Square Garden.

"This is a funeral because, like every other black man, woman and child here tonight, I am here to bury in the grave of forgetfulness the type of black man that America too long has known."

Blasts "Uncle Toms"

Striking vehemently at the "Uncle Toms" and "tie-heads" of the race, Crosswaith, one of the main speakers at the March-on-Washington Movement rally to protest discrimination in the armed forces of the United States and in industry, the labor leader stated that the meeting marked the fact that there was a new Negro in America.

"The new Negro in America, who is loyal to the government and determined to give every effort toward winning the war for the democracies, is still determined and insistent upon gaining the same rights and liberties accorded to other citizens of the country," he said.

Touching on the perpetual loyalty of the Negro, Crosswaith told the crowded house that while others had come to this country to seek liberty, "my father and mother, like yours, came here to lose their liberty."

Mass of Utter Silence

The most impressive, peaceful and yet adamantly determined audience that applauded each and every time a speaker mentioned that the time had come that Negroes should fight for their rights, was reduced to a mass of utter silence and pathos when Crosswaith dramatically described that he saw his son in the armed forces, somewhere in Europe hoping that some day there will be liberty here in America for Negroes.

With outstretched arms and head looking heavenward, the speaker said, "My own son is now in the armed forces on the continent of Europe ready to die for the Stars and Stripes.

"I cannot hear him, but I can see into his very heart that he has a hope that some day the flag for which he is willing to die will fly as freely over his race as it does over the heads of those who found liberty here."

Depends on Labor

In closing he exhorted his listeners who patiently sat for five hours to hear how the Negro was being mistreated in the armed forces and was expected to give his life for democracy, to let nothing blind them to the fact that their fate and the fate of their children rests in the lap of the working class.

"I know there are men who are so blind, so stupid and so asinine as to fail to recognize their kindredness with you," he declared.

At the gathering which was the largest aggregation of Negroes in America for a protest program and not a baseball game, Crosswaith accepted Mayor LaGuardia's appointment by telegram on the New York Housing Authority.

Adam Powell for Congress

Councilman Adam Powell, Jr., also embraced the opportunity to announce his intentions to become a candidate for Congress in the Fall. The young preacher brought the resentful throng of Negroes who gave evidence of being tired of the "kicking around" given by white people, to its feet, when in using the words "damn" and "hell" he urged them that "now is the time to fight like hell for their rights."

Speaking in the same militant tone as others on the program, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, director of Negro Affairs, NYA, struck a receptive chord when she said, "You who are here tonight are a new experience to America. You have been regarded as the patient, submissive minority. You had no rights, the Supreme Court held you were chattels like any horse, or plow or iron pot.

"He Is You!"

"But, today, a new Negro has arisen in America. He is here in Madison Square Garden tonight. He is you. You are neither young nor old, you are just new. You have awakened as has the world. You are seeking full freedom, justice, respect and opportunity. You are militant in spirit. You are unwilling to accept less than the Constitution guarantees to you as citizens of the world's greatest democracy."

Mrs. Bethune in encouraging the Negro to keep on fighting for his rightful place in the life of America said, "Thank God you have the qualities of militancy and insistence. You know how important it is that this surging spirit be kept within the bounds of law and order.

"You know how necessary it is that your militancy be non-violent. But you must at the same time keep it persistent, keep it courageous, make it intelligently articulate."

Daily Jim Crow

Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP called upon the United Nations to prove their sincerity to the colored people of the world by asking, "How can a Negro believe wholeheartedly that the cause he is asked to die for is worth dying for when daily he is confronted by insult, discrimination and segregation?"

"Prove to us, United Nations, and prove to the colored peoples of Asia, Africa and the Caribbean that you are not hypocrites when you say this is a war for freedom. Prove it to us and we will show you that we can and will fight like fury for that freedom. But we want, and we intend to have our share of that freedom," he said.

In line with White's viewpoint, Arthur Reid, labor organizer, told his hearers that the black man should and must participate in the peace conference after victory is won, otherwise the peace that will be attained will be short-lived. Lester Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, urged Negroes to fight their own battles and do not depend upon advice from the "right, centre, left or further left."

In presenting Mrs. Annie Waller, mother of Odell Waller, who is expected to be electrocuted in Virginia next week, A. Philip Randolph, director of the movement who had to curtail his speech due to lack of time, called upon Negroes all over the country to take a hand in the stand for their liberation.

Other speakers were Dr. Lawrence Mance Ervin, chairman; the Revs. Thomas S. Harten, O. Clay Maxwell, S. T. Eldridge, John La Farge, W. O. Carrington, Dr. Channing H. Tobias and Milton P. Webster. A play was presented by Blanche Thomas' Choral Group and written by Dick Campbell.

The Georgia Situation

Down in Georgia Eugene Talmadge, governor of the state, tried to scare the people by making the race issue a leading feature of his campaign and calling on the state guard to be on the lookout for a race upheaval. But the people did not get scared. On the other hand, from all parts of the state came protests against the governor's attitude and positive denials that there was any danger of a clash of the races. Ninety per cent of the newspapers in Georgia have challenged the governor's statement.

"For the past week, all sorts of wild rumors have been brought to this office about race trouble in Atlanta and neighboring cities.

"So far as we have been able to ascertain, there is not the slightest ground for these rumors, either as to Atlanta or neighboring cities.

"I would like to remind those who start these rumors that there are federal war-time laws covering the spread of rumors intended to excite or upset the morale of the people during the war effort. It is a poor way to back up our boys at the front and Hitler would like nothing better.

"I can assure the people of Atlanta that there is at present no race trouble in Atlanta, and so far as we can ascertain, none in neighboring cities, but nobody can guarantee peaceful race relations if irresponsible agitators are allowed to continue their work.

"Let us remember that it was the circulation of wild rumors which contributed to the downfall of France and that this is a part of the technique of sabotage and Fifth Column work.

"I think the time has come when level-headed citizens should aid us in putting a stop to these wild tales."

When one of Governor Eugene Talmadge's minions, head of the state guard, said that similar conditions existed in South Carolina and that precautions were being taken to control them, The Spartanburg Herald immediately branded the statement as false. It has regretted that one of the candidates for the United States Senate unwisely invoked the race question in order to win votes. It has expressed its regrets as earnestly as it could. It felt that Mr. Blease was using the issue as the little boy at Hallowe'en uses a lighted pumpkin to frighten his companions. That continues to be the opinion of this newspaper.

The Defeatist Socialist Call Insults the Negro People

JUN 16 1942

By Ben Davis, Jr.

The hand of the defeatist Socialist Call—official organ of the Socialist Party which opposes our nation's war effort and which is an enemy of the Negro people—weighs heavily in the sponsorship of the Madison Square Garden rally scheduled to take place tonight.

That much is clear from the latest issue of this disloyal sheet which just came out.

For purposes inimical to the war against Hitler and dangerous to the cause of Negro rights, the Socialist Party intends to exploit the just grievances of the Negro people in the same way that Goebbels or Hitler would exploit them.

How is it that the issue of the Call—which was published several days BEFORE the Garden rally tonight—comes out with the cut and dried program which is to be ammed through meeting?

Is it possible that A. Philip Randolph, himself a Socialist and a political bed-fellow of the disgraceful appeaser Norman Thomas, has been working with the Socialist Party to exploit the just demands of the Negro people against the war and against the best interests of the Negroes?

If A. Philip Randolph supports our nation's war against Hitler—which involves the future of the Negro as well as that of white Americans—why has he repudiated the treasonable statement of the Socialist Party against the war?

If the leaders and sponsor of the Garden rally intend that it should support the war, why does the so-called 8-point program published in the Call omit all reference to the war—to say nothing of winning it?

How does the Socialist Call print the so-called 8-point program to be presented at the meeting before it is even released to the Negro people who are supposed to adopt it?

It is not an accident that the Socialist Call in the same issue demands that the "struggle for Negro rights be directed along Socialist lines." What are these "lines"? The lines of disloyalty, defeatism and aid to the enemy by opposing the just war of the American people—black and white?

Furthermore, the Call asks why "American Negroes should fight" in the war. This is a direct incitation to disloyalty which is alien to the traditions of the Negro people.

This newspaper pointed out last Sunday that Randolph's associations with defeatists in connection with this meeting raised graved with this meeting raised grave acter of the Garden meeting. Now those connections are clear. Randolph is working with a political faction which actually opposed the war and is therefore detrimental to the cause of Negroes.

That the Socialist Party, with its disloyal doctrines, should be so closely associated with this meeting is an insult to the dignity of the Negro people.

Negro Americans want above all to defeat Hitler. They are determined that no defeatists should take advantage of their just grievances to spread disunity and to stab our nation in the back.

The Negro people backed by labor and white democratic citizens, today fight against discrimination, because more than ever discrimination hampers our war effort and is a disgrace to our country.

Negro Americans will look with suspicion upon any so-called movement for Negro rights, in which such a defeatist, disloyal clique as Norman Thomas and the Socialist party are grinding their axes.

Background of Persecution

THIS FOLLOWS ON THE heels of Ralph Ingersoll's excellent piece in PM last week on the "Persecution of Liberals in Washington." It departs, however, from the line of discussion pursued by the PM editor, in that our subjects are those white liberals who are being sacrificed on the altar of prejudice because of their interest in Negroes and their desire that Negroes get a fair deal.

We have long suspected that the motive behind Westbrook Pegler's consistent belaboring of Mrs. Roosevelt, Harold L. Ickes and others, is more sinister than a mere attempt to indicate that these persons are motivated by the Communist Party Line in America. That Mrs. Roosevelt, Vice President Wallace, Archibald McLeish, Justice Hugo Black and others belong to, sympathize with or are influenced by the Communist Party is ridiculous and downright stupid.

The entire program to vilify and remove from a place of influence persons such as Mrs. Roosevelt, Ickes, McLeish, and the other liberals is based partly on their outspoken attitude on the Negro question in America and the increasing pressure of Southern Fascists to have them eliminated from the picture.

Mrs. Roosevelt, in particular, with her almost unbelievable sense of fair play and justice, and her demands for equal rights for all people, regardless of race, color or creed, has been made the target of abuse from all sides—especially from those reactionaries who would rather lose the war than see true democracy prevail in this land. That such a noble woman must continually be assailed from all sides by followers of the Ku Klux Klan, the Silver Shirts, the Christian Front and the various American Bunds we tolerate must present a strange picture of the popular conception of the ideals on which our form of government is based. Like John Brown, like Wendell Phillips, like William Lloyd Garrison, the Truth goes marching on, expounded in our generation by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, whom the forces of evil would destroy.

The Race Issue

We had hoped that our race troubles were all behind us. The Negroes and the whites had been getting along well in Georgia for a number of years. The Negroes have been given some additional opportunities with which they have apparently been satisfied. No Georgian can claim that the Negro has all of the opportunities here that he has in some northern states. It will probably be a great while yet before this comes to pass. The wisest of the Negro leaders in Georgia realize this. They understand it and accept it without complaint, being comforted by the realization that the tendency is towards better understanding between the races and a broadening of the field of opportunity for the Negroes.

Two things threaten the peaceful relationship between the whites and the blacks. One of these is the practice of the war department in sending Negroes from northern states to southern camps. There has been some threatenings of rioting involving Negro soldiers around a number of these military camps. Senator Bankhead of Alabama has urged the war department to refrain as much as possible from stationing the Negro regiments that originate in the north in southern camps. If the war department is guided by wisdom and discretion they will follow the suggestion of the Alabama senator. The second thing that threatens is politics. Candidates for office, seeking to stir up smouldering race prejudice in order to get votes. It is most unfortunate that any Georgian should feel that his chances of being elected to office rest upon his being able to stir up ill feeling between the Negroes and whites of the state. Once race prejudice is fannd into a flame even those who start the flame are unable to stop it. It certainly is not for the best interests of Georgia that the state should be thrown back forty years in the matter of race prejudice. The Negroes and the whites will have to continue to live together in Georgia for a long time. It is to the advantage of both races that they should understand each other and live together peaceably.

Talmadge Takes Magazine To Task For Fair Racial Article

AUG 9 1942

Layout On Noted Hinkson Family Scored By Gene

In his regular Friday evening's radio diatribe last night, Governor Eugene Talmadge roundly lashed and help up to scorn, the powerful Ladies Home JOURNAL, widely read 50 year-old magazine, for its tribute to the distinguished Hinkson family of Philadelphia, whose head, Dr. De Haven Hinkson, is a major in the Army Medical Corps, stationed at Tuskegee, Alabama.

The magazine, in its August number, carries a full-feature layout of several pages showing Dr. Hinkson, his wife, Cordelia, and their two pretty daughters, Cordelia Elizabeth and Mary DeHaven, together with other views of the famous family and their interests and activities.

FEARS SOCIALITY EQUALITY

Tying up the incident with his harangues on the Negro question in Georgia Talmadge invited his listeners to get the magazine and read it for themselves. "That is what this race mixing will come to," he says, and 'that is what Gov. Dixon and myself know will happen here in the south."

Paying especially recognition to the Hinkson family the Ladies Home Journal states: "leading normal, useful and successful lives, the arbitrary fact of having darker skins than those of most Americans has been a warping menace all their lives, and will be till the days of their death. Prosperous, educated, well rooted in a community out of reach of the special pressures South of the Mason and Dixon's line, the Hinksons are better off than ninety-nine out of a hundred American colored people."

PRAISES FINE RECORD

Describing the stifling effects of prejudice, the magazine then holds up the fine record of Dr. Hinkson: "even in war. As head of the Army hospital unit at the training field for colored flying cadets near Tuskegee, Major Hinkson is under strain. Not because Army life is new to him: he was a first World War Lieutenant with the 365th Field Artillery in France, and had ample experience with what sharpnel and gas can do when his outfit's career culminated in the Argonne."

RED CROSS IGNORES MRS. HINKSON

Scoring the Red Cross' vaunted boast of answering each letter coming to its office, the magazine has this to say: "Last December the major wrote the Philadelphia Red Cross, asking information how his left behind wife could be useful. But no answer came to that or subsequent letters to Washington headquarters. . . . The conclusion reached by most Philadelphia Negroes—that the Red Cross had too much Jim Crow in its cosmos—was already so wide-spread that Mrs. Hinkson was not surprised when these letters went unanswered. The Red Cross maintains that they religiously answer all mail and this snubbing was an accidental slip. Little as Mrs. Hinkson likes to talk about it, it makes her a trifle sick and sorry."

Both Philadelphia born, Dr. Hinkson and his wife, came of long established Northern colored stocks. Hinkson's Philadelphia-born grandfather carried a gun all through the Civil War in a Pennsylvania Negro regiment. "When the mother and girls' the Journal states, "all three with the kind of extoic prettiness that Polynesian beauties are supposed to have—but seldom do—visit the major in the South, they can afford Pullman to solve their Jim Crow car problem."

19-year old "Betty" views color-prejudice philosophically.

"It will take a hundred years to clear it up," says pretty Cordelia Elizabeth, 19 year student at Cornell University.

Other views shown in the magazine include various poses of Mary DeHaven and Cordelia Elizabeth at play on Tuskegee's air-field, and Mrs. Henson being greeted by her major husband upon her arrival upon the base.

In addition to the Ladies Home Journal, a number of other magazines have, at one time or another, given strong support to Negroes' efforts to share more equitably in American democracy.

The list follows:

APRIL.

American Negroes and the War, by Earl Brown in Harpers. Negroes in a Fight Democracy, by Roy Wilkins, Social Questions. Racial Bars to Defense Jobs, anonymous in the Interracial Review.

MAY.

Found, A Million Manpower, anonymous in Modren Industry. The Negro, by Charles S. Johnson in American Journal of Sociology. Race, Religion and Prejudice, by Eleanor Roosevelt, New Republic.

JUNE.

With The Negro's Help, by Robert Weaver, Atlantic Monthly. War Brings New Status for America's Negroes, U. S. News. The Negro's War, Fortune. Negro at War. Life. Negroes and Defense, by Beulah Amiden, Survey Graphic.

JULY

How the Negro Fights for Freedom, Stanley High, Reader's Digest, Minorities. Their Problems and Yours, Employment Section Review.

AUGUST.

I Got Wings, Charles DeBow, American. Meet the Hinksons of Philadelphia, Ladies Home Journal.

Terror in South Brought Before White House

By Adam Lapin

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

AUG 7 1942

5-6-K

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—President Roosevelt was said today to be personally concerned over the serious threat to [illegible] production and national unity which is developing from a "White Supremacy" movement initiated by prominent Negro-baiters in the south.

This was reported to a delegation of leaders by Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information.

Who's Behind the Jim Crow "Revolt?"
See story on page 5.

Southern liberals and trade unionists had come to Washington to call the attention of federal officials the dangers of the anti-Negro drive in the south.

Members of the delegation said that Davis had told them that the President had been informed of these facts, was gravely concerned over the situation and was keeping in touch with it.

Other officials who were asked to take steps to investigate and crack down on the "white supremacy" disrupters of the war effort were Charles Fahy, Solicitor-General of the Department of Justice; Lawrence Kramer, executive secretary of the Fair Employment Practices Committee; Abe Fortas, Undersecretary of the Interior, and Wendell Lund, director of the War Production Board's Labor Production Division.

Southern leaders who conferred with federal officials said in a statement that this anti-Negro movement is a "copperhead conspiracy" which organizes open revolt against the war policies of the government."

They said that "a group of high placed public officials have developed widespread propaganda in the south which tends to alienate southern people from the Roosevelt Administration, to interfere with production, to incite violence against Negro soldiers and civilians."

A virtual reign of terror against the Negro people, they said, exists in Memphis, Tennessee; Beaumont, Texas; Columbus, Georgia, and elsewhere where scores of Negroes have been beaten for attempting to secure transportation on public buses.

The Southern leaders called attention to the close links between the Ku Klux Klan and prominent participants in this conspiracy.

Horace C. Wilkinson, Birmingham machine politician and lawyer who started the "white supremacy" movement was a Grand Kleagle of the Ku Klux Klan, they said.

Governor Frank Dixon, of Alabama, who backed up Wilkinson with a vicious anti-Negro speech was revealed to be the nephew of Thomas Dixon, author of "The Klansman," which was a notorious exposition of the Klan point of view.

Wilkinson brought the "white supremacy" movement out into the open on July 22 in a speech to the Kiwanis Club of Bessemer, Alabama, composed of industrial leaders of this important iron, coal and steel center. This speech was a direct incitement to violence against the Negro people.

In the last few days Wilkinson has received invitations to go into Georgia and South Carolina to start similar "white supremacy" movements.

Fearful of the effects of this whole anti-Negro drive on war production, trade union leaders in the South have written to the President asking for immediate federal action against this dangerous movement.

Members of the delegation of Southern leaders who pressed this demand for federal investigation and action included:

Van D. Jones, international board member of the International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Bernard Borah, southern director of the National Council of Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers; Howard Mooney, president and Leo Kendrick, secretary of the Red Ore Council of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Professor Alva Taylor of Nashville, James Ely of the Southern Negro outh Congress, James Dombrowski, secretary of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare and John P. Davis, secretary of the National Negro Congress.

Wise Negro Leaders

Many influential Negro ministers, physicians, educators and business men are congratulating Governor Frank M. Dixon, of Alabama, as he follows Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, in forthright opposition to those misguided persons in Washington who would use the war as an occasion for stirring up strife between the white and colored races in the South.

This action springs from the knowledge that the white and colored peoples of the South can best settle their own issues among themselves without the interference of persons from the North who know nothing of the situation and care less.

Negro leaders in the South know as a rule that this agitation springs largely from sources that actually are antagonistic to the Southern Negro. Most of what is being done is at the instance of the "brown brain trust" in Washington which is dominated by snooty elements that hold the decent, law-abiding, industrious and honest Negroes of the South in contempt and who do not give a hoot what happens to the Negroes of the South so long as they themselves are made secure in their jobs at the public trough.

Many informed Negroes also know that these snooty elements in Washington, with their contempt for the run-of-mine Negroes, are working right in harmony with Hitler, whose agents are trying to stir up strife between whites and blacks in the South.

Under the circumstances it is proper that the voices of these Negroes should be raised in approval of the steps taken by Governor Dixon to check racial movements in the South which make for division and which, in their general effect, serve the purposes of Hitler and Hirohito.

FIGHTING THE CIVIL WAR

Editor, The Journal: Governor Eugene Talmadge has a mind that should be interesting to any psychopathist. He seems to be thinking of the problems of 82 years ago. From his speeches one gets the impression that he is fighting the Civil War.

I have listened to his speeches over the radio and if he knows that there is a great second World War going on you don't hear anything about it from him. His fight seems ot be against Yankees and Negroes and not the Axis. He does not seem to be bothered about Hitler and "The Son of Heaven."

If a stranger to this planet should suddenly land here he would surely get the impression that Governor Talmadge is striving to lead Georgia to secede from the Union and send an army of gray-clad men to the Mason-Dixon Line.

In his speech last night Talmadge asked people of other states to join him in his fight, so by the same token they are invited to fight against him if they choose.

Governor Raises Issue Of Negro

tive editor of the Atlanta Constitution

Discussing Ralph McGill, executution, for his Rosenwald Foundation award, the Governor said, "Listen, you textile people, while I'm Governor I'll never stand for a Negro foreman forcing a white girl around."

"Negroes and whites won't go to school together, either, as long as I am Governor. The Negroes and whites in the South know how to get along together. They just want to be let alone."

MINISTER TRICKS SINGERS ON JIM CROW

GADSEN, Ala.—Gov. Frank M. Dixon's Negro support evaporated this week after the local branch NAACP investigating committee found that a telegram sent to Dixon [illegible] 25, allegedly by twelve colored leaders endorsing his racial views, was not signed by at least 11 of the so-called signers.

Only Negro believed to have known of the telegram's content before its dispatch is Rev. E. M. Wilson, pastor of Friendship Baptist church.

The telegram read in part: "Our past and present relations with our white people are satisfactory and we do not want any strife to mar our pleasant relations."

Those accused of having sent the telegram are the Revs. Joel C. Carson, W. J. Colvin, both Methodists, and the Revs. R. B. Martin, W. M. Mallory, E. M. Wilson, and S. N. Reid all Baptists.

Other alleged signators were Drs. E. F. Barnes, J. B. Towns, L. M[illegible]al, and Mack Cummins, G. L. Kent and Thomas H. Rhines, businessmen.

Governor Dixon said recently in a letter to Ralph R. Williams New York agent for the Defense Supplies corporation that he would refuse to accept a war contract that contained a non-discriminatory clause on the ground that "federal agencies are attempting to force social equality upon the South." The telegram in question was designed to support that view.

After making its investigation the NAACP committee reported that the local chamber of commerce originated the telegram along with one of its own and sent both to the governor at the chamber's expense.

Reverend Wilson charged with having telephoned the leaders involved from the chamber office, and when each one answered turned the telephone over to the chamber secretary to do the talking.

The secretary is said to have then asked the leaders to endorse a statement to Governor Dixon in an effort to avert a race riot he said was imminent. When some of the men expressed reluctance to approve the telegram the secretary it is charged, threatened them with "plenty of trouble."

According to the NAACP investigators the telegram the 12 leaders endorsed was never sent the governor, but another sent in its stead.

Georgia Editors Say:

TALMADGE FEARFUL

(From The Early County News.)

With the state gubernatorial election only two months away and the issue boiled down to Talmadge versus Arnall, politics will now come to a sudden boiling point and by the day of election will be running a fever heat. It is very encouraging to followers and supporters of Ellis Arnall to see the numbers of people who have joined the forces of the attorney general. And some of these people are those who only a few days ago didn't give Arnall an outside chance. Even Talmadge's staunch supporters are predicting a hot and close race. We've always been one to take our politics on an even keel. And we don't fall out with those who are friends of present governor, because some of our best friends are Talmadge supporters. But this year we are taking more than just an idle interest in the race. The Governor has injected some of the worst and meanest issues in the race in an effort to save his political hide. He has brought up the mythical "nigger" question which tore our great nation asunder several decades ago. Any really informed person knows that no one in Georgia has advocated teaching Negroes in the same school with white boys and girls of Georgia. Don't you know that if this had been advocated by professors at the University that the students who are there every day would have found it out long before our great and virtuous Governor and would have done something about it? Doesn't this seem reasonable? Certainly it does. When such a low and mean question as this is injected into a race for governor, you may know that this candidate has just run out of an issue and is emulating the drowning man who grabs at the match.

RACIAL INFLATION

(By Gordon Hancock)

Jul 3 1942

56K

I am always a little dubious about the extravagant encomiums which our white friends are wont to lavish upon us, when they say we have "made the most wonderful progress of any race in the history of mankind, etc." This sounds good and we take it with a great glee and applause. But the fact remains the Negro has not had a half chance, and to pretend that he can do so much with a half chance is to predispose the powers that be to give only the half chance to Negroes who can make so much of it, and save the whole chance for the white man.

My contention has been, is now, and will forever be that if it takes a whole chance for the white man it takes a whole chance for the Negro. It may inflate our racial ego to have it otherwise but we compromise our case thereby. These encomiums would not be dangerous if there were not a possibility that Negroes would take them seriously and thereby achieve a certain complacency that could have deleterious effects on our future.

Within the last few years we have had several Negro "expositions" here and there about the nation and all were for the "Progress" of the Negro race. It would be exceedingly unfortunate to underestimate Negro progress, but it would be tragic to inflate it. We are boosting ourselves from pulpit and platform, through press and over the radio daily. By now the country should have an inkling of Negro possibilities. . . . . .

What we need most of all are ways and means of realizing some of these possibilities. Whether we admit it or not, the Negro is playing the under-dog role in the American racial drama and what we need most of all is to develop the under-dog spirit that so often overcomes overwhelming odds. It is not without good warrant that football coaches throughout the nation try to instill into their various squads the under-dog spirit. It has come about that there is no greater danger in athletics than over-confidence. How many greater teams have lost to mediocre teams because of over-confidence! Racial inflation is proving a bad thing for the white race and it is not going to be less dangerous for Negroes. An inflated pride without the willingness to pay the price has tragic potentialities. Paying the price is the thing!

The Safest Plan

Small pressure groups from within—from without—are steadily trying to force on the people of this region something that would be harmful here, and most assuredly would have a bad reaction on our nation at this critical time. There are the white leftists who would keep the Negro in a continued state of slavery. There are the Negro leftists who would force their so-called rights on the white people.

Fair-minded, intelligent Alabamians know the sanest course to follow is the one of continued social uplift for the Negro on the South's traditional segregation plan.

Ignored Negro Problem

56K

It is common, when in the South a negro is convicted and condemned to death for killing a white man, for the Liberalites of New York and the Harlemites to try him again and to acquit him, but if in the South a negro kills another negro, is tried and convicted by a white jury, or a jury of poll-taxpayers, it invariably passes unnoticed by these Liberalites and Harlemites. The serious problem of the negro population of the South is crime among themselves; it scarcely decreases, and interracial crimes have been steadily decreasing the last forty years. They will continue to decrease if the Liberalites will but refrain from interference. Meanwhile, the Liberalites and the negroes in the North are indifferent to the killing of one another by their Southern brethren.

California Would Bar Jap Voters

56K

By the Associated Press.

Jun 27 1942

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27.—A former state attorney general contended that this nation's laws were made for "white people" during arguments on a federal court action to bar American-born Japanese from voting privileges.

The move to strike names of American-born Japanese from voting lists was brought by John T. Regan, grand secretary of the Native Sons of the Golden West, an organization of native-born Californians.

New York World Telegram
New York, N.Y.

U. S. Webb, representing Regan, contended that the laws were made for "white people" and that only by a constitutional amendment, the 14th, were they changed to admit Negroes to voting privileges. He added that the amendment specifically admitted Negroes and no other group.

Jun 27 1942

Harold Sawyer, representing the Lawyers Guild, replied that "if you took the authority cited by General Webb and changed the word 'white' to 'Aryan' you'd have the same language you have in Hitler's Mein Kampf."

EDITOR'S DIGEST

By ROBERT DURR

"The White Man" "The Negro"

The Weekly Review

It's high time that all of us who are interested in better interracial relations, get away from the habit thinking in terms of the whole of each group as good, bad, impossible or what have you.

Jul 4 1942
Birmingham, Ala.

56K

Despite the delicacy of the so-called race problem in the South, changes for better interracial relations are improving rapidly. We must of course be definitely concerned about getting our share of jobs growing out of the vast war program as well as projecting our efforts for a square deal in the political and economic avenues of life which were initiated long before the present conflict. At the same time we must be patient and realize that there are white people doing everything in their power to help us as a race. Of course, these people in many instances and localities are outnumbered by those who do not understand us, and, they have to speak for us softly, and work for us cautiously. The settling of interracial problems is the most difficult in all the world. People must exercise patience and courage in dealing with such problems.

America has dealt with her darker subjects more fairly in the way of developing them than any other country including England. America freed the Negro slaves physically, through a bloody war. We ought to stand by America, because of the Americans responsible for our freedom. Americans of goodwill gave us religion. We picked it up and taught America what it means. All of us, white and black, want to be free. Whatever this country needs, we will give even in sweat and blood. It is still the grandest place on earth for the Negro.

Jul 4 1942

The Negro should not and can not afford to be disappointed or discouraged over the fact that interracial customs and ideas have not undergone an overnight change due to war conditions.

Conditions favorable for the Negro locally and nationally have come about since the U. S. entry in the war in early December. Changes have been made in the Army and Navy to the advantage of the Negro. Before the Pearl Harbor attack December 7, Negroes could only serve as messmen in the Navy. Today every recruiting station is calling for Negroes to serve not only as messmen bu tas officers including Ensigns.

In the Army Negroes are being trained in Officers Training camps along with whites in Georgia. Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis, has been transferred to Texas for war duties. Tuskegee is rapidly becoming one of the nation's foremost air schools. Negro soldiers are on all fronts includnig Australia. They have won respect from leaders and citizens of the country who, prior tothe war. did not allow Negroes on their territory.

JUL 4 1942

United Service Organizations (USO) where Negro soldiers are given the same type of recreation as the whites, are being established throughout the country. Six USO centers for Negroes are located in Texas. Despite prejudices in some communities to prevent the Negroes' integration in civilian defense, the movement to include them for training in all types of civilian defense, is increasing. This training includes auxiliary police training, fire fighting, first aid classes, home nutrition, etc. Negro leaders in increasing numbers are being promoted to various government positions in all sections ranging from clerks to consultants in various departments. Just last week a young Houstonian was appointed consultant in the local Naval Recruiting department, the first Negro to hold such position.

JUL 4 1942

Colored women are enlisting in the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps and are being appointed to ranking positions.

On the labor front Negroes are being integrated in skilled positions and many new aveunes of employment are opening up in defense plants that heretofore have been closed. Non-defense industries are also increasing their calls for Negro skilled workers.

"Weekly Review"

This progress has been brought about through changing conditions of the world. All Negro progress has been due to changes and upheavals in our national and international affairs. From the Revolutionary War, a runaway slave became the first hero at Boston which favorably attracted world attention to him as a soldier. From the Civil War or the War between the states, the Negro got his freedom for which he had been fighting over 200 years. The slave traffic was not abolished at the beginning of the Civil War. It was near the end. So, it may be that a number of the things against us now might be changed as conditions depeloped before the end of the war.

Birmingham, Ala

Leaders of our race should address themselves to the task of improving conditions within the race and to preparing the race for a post war era. It is obvious now that we will have to depend more upon our own ingenuity. We should urge our people to take advantage of every opportunity now to improve their economic, health and educational conditions. We should take advantage of every opportunity to work and earn on the farm, in the factories, and in war industries. We should urge the wives and other dependents not to throw away their jobs to depend soley upon their allotments but, to get out of debt and invest in defense bonds and stamps so when the war is over, we will be free people, free from loan sharks and credit systems which have kept many of us to the grinding stone.

JUL 4 1942

As a race we should lay aside our pride on social disease and take advantage of medical aid offered by the government while we have the chance to rid the race of the dreadful disease of syphillis, tuberculosis and other diseases that we have been unable to wipe out because of poverty and poor living conditions. We can only maintain our physical strength through healthy bodies.

Our leaders must urge our youth and adults to take advantage o fall kind of training now open to them. I understand courses to improve the status of Negro workers are forced to close with the funds returned because Negroes would not take time from pleasure and big timing to attend the classes.

It matters not which way the world conflict goes, we are drifting more and more towards a workers' world and all people must be trained to make a living in this new era where men will be measured, not according to color or race but, according to their intrinsic value and their minds.

Negro leaders north and south, who overwork the term "The White Men" as a total enemy of the race, are doing the race a grave injury. White leaders who bracket all Negroes under the term "The Negro" as a group who must suspect all whites as forked tailed devils, has done much to increase "White man" solidarity against all Negroes.

JUL 4 1942

Jesus laid down a good formula for dealing with people. He dealt with men on the individual basis rather than the group basis. A good man to Him was a good man, be he white or black Jew or reconstructed Gentile. He sought to save men individually as a basis of improving groups and the world.

It is unfair to blame all white men for the evil deeds of some white men and this applies to individual Negroes as this relates to the whole race.

When you or I walk down the street, we are a part of the 13,000,000 American Negroes but we are not 13,000,000 Negroes. We are individuals and should be dealt with according to our individual deeds. This too, should apply to individual members of other races. The individual and his deeds and worth should be the basis of evaluation and recognition.

Individual liberal-minded whites and blacks banded together for the achievement of the greatest good for the greatest number of people is the best hope for more goodwill and progress in Interracial, helpful relationship in the south.

Let us get away from John Jones, the man to be judged upon the basis of his deeds as a good or bad man. Get away from John Brown. "The Negro" and all that means in our present evaluation of the man or citizen. Advocate dealing with a black man according to his worth, contribution and potentialities as an American citizen.

All white men are not alike. All black men are not alike. The good, should not be penalized because of the bad.

JUL 4 1942

I want to see white men develop to the fullest possible extent, I want the same for black men, both as white men and black men. And the contributions of both, as such, blended into that which will assure a richer and fuller life for all. This will insure for us a rich and invigorating democracy.

The greatest enemies of America today are those who try to array race against race, class against class. This is being done in the south today on a gigantic scale,, selfish opportunity exists in both races. Let us guard against being tricked into that sort of thing.

MR. ARNALL'S ASTONISHING LACK OF INFORMATION

Rome News-Tribune

Speakingat Fort Valley the other day, Ellis Arnall, candidate for Governor of Georgia, made the statement:

"The race issue is not only false. It is bunk."

That assertion reveals a degree o fignorance about what is going on that unfits Mr. Arnall for any office requiring a wide knowledge o fconditions.

Indeed, it is almost unbelievable that any person capable of reading could be so utterly uninformed upon an issue that affects the South so intimately and which threatens such disastrous consequences.

Mr. Arnall should read the statement issued the past week by Frank M. Dixon, the quiet, conservative Governor og Alabama, in which the deadly nature of this menace to Southern civilization is made clear. For further light he might also get in touch with Congressman Joe Starnes, of the Dies Committee, and with the various Southern Governors who have come to the support of Governor Dixn in his determined stand against permitting the South to be subjected to this monstrous wrong.

But Mr. Arnall does not have to leave the State of Georgia to discover something of this social equality movement which he says does not exist but which is recognized by every informed person in the South today. Let him read the recent issue of Fortune Magazine in which a powerful boost is given to the social equality scheme and in which it is related with evident satisfaction that when a Southern boy at Fort Benning protested against being placed in the same barracks with negroes, he was told to "get out and stay out" if he didn't like it.

This social equality move occured in the State of Georgia and if Mr. Arnall doesn't know about it he should inform himself.

Again, if Mr. Arnall will go to the capital of the Nation at Washington, where some of his support is coming from, he will find white girls being subjected to the indignity of acting as secretaries and stenographers to negro officials in federal offices.

Documentary evidence of what is being attempted also is abundant. Mr. Arnall, by stepping into the office of any industrialist who is doing war work, may find copies of the contract that was so hotly and justly denounced by Governor Dixon, of Alabama, and will discover in black and white a provision under which no discrimination between races is permitted. This clause, as Governor Dixon has stated, opens the way for the social equality bureaucrats of Washington to come snooping ino the South and demand that racial lines be abolished in the manner pointed out by Governor Dixon.

If interested in the work of these snoopers, and he should be, Mr. Arnall might turn to Page 6 of the Alabama Magazine of June 25, 1942, and find a photographic view of the snoopers as they appeared in Birmingham to quiz Southern industrialists about their compliance with the racial equality clause of federal contracts, since denounced so hotly and so justly by Governor Dixon. And as he scans the personnel of this board of snoopers, sent South to haze the industrial leaders of this section, Mr. Arnall will find the second man to the right is a negro from Chicago and the fifth to the right a big black boy who is vice-president of sleeping car porters. Thus two out of the six men on the board of snoopers are negres. If Mr. Arnall doesn't believe it he may see a copy of the photographic view on file in the News-Tribue office. (And this isn"t bunk.)

And what of the attitude of these social equality bureaucrats and their leaders in Washington? Mr. Arnall can find out about that, too, by using his eyes. Let him read the celebrated book "Washington Is Like That" by W. M. Kiplinger, and learn what is happening under the social equality drive as sparked at Washington. The chapter entitled "Negroes and Equality" beginning on Page 147, tells the story, and it is a story of driving progress toward a goal that means the end of civilization in the South as it is known today, if the movement is not halted by resolute and determined action such as that being taken by Governor Dixon, of Alabama, and other great leaders of the South the magnitude and menacing na- who have become alarmed over ture of the movement.

Ignore Flaws In U. S. Democracy For Time Being, Negro Teachers Told

Courier-Journal - Louisville, Ky.

AUG 26 1942

War Called No Time to Squabble

AUG 26 1942

Discrepancies in democracy in theory and democracy in practice must be dealt with intelligently in this era to prevent severe emotional upsets, Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of State Teachers College, Montgomery, Ala., said yesterday.

He and fifty-one other Negro educational leaders from seventeen states are attending a two-day planning conference of the American Teachers Association at Madison Junior High School.

Dr. Trenholm, executive secretary of the association, added that while the race problem with its "cruel impact of frustration" was one instance of the faulty functioning of democracy, it was by no means the only one.

Calls Democracy a Model.

"There is the economic problem," he said. "What the educators of the nation must do is not to lose sight of democracy as an ideal but teach it every day as the model we strive for and also give the students a wider perspective so they will be prepared to make adjustments when democracy in practice falls short of the ideal of democracy."

The conference, designed to integrate, and at the same time to distinguish between, the functions of various professional organizations, is divided into four groups—organization articulation, organization adminstration, techniques of organizations in the efforts to obtain improvements of conditions such as teachers' salaries, and the modification of emphasis of the educational program during this period of crisis.

A statement of policy which the four groups will formulate will be released today, said Dr. Trenholm.

AUG 26 1942

Dr. F. M. Wood, a former president of Kentucky State College, told the educators that "this is not the time for the Negro unduly to press for advantages."

Revison of Ideas Urged.

"Regardless of the shortcomings in the United States' system of government, wartime is no time to raise issues," he said. "Much of our thinking must be revised in the light of the world emergency. I am ashamed of our record, not as colored people but as part of world civilization; but I am thoroughly in accord, and all Negroes should be, with the war against aggression."

Miss Marie L. Williams, Charleston, W. Va., president of the association, explaining the purpose of the conference, said that Negroes should "think on national terms and see the overall picture."

AUG 26 1942

The war, she declared, has proved the importance of teachers as a help in carrying out the Government's program.

War Breaks Down Barriers Between Groups in Nation

SEP 17 1942

A probable by-product of this war will be the gradual dropping from American slanguage of a lot of nasty words expressing contempt for religious, racial and national minorities. It will mean more than an etymological event; it will signify the final welding of an indestructible democracy deserving the grand motto, E Pluribus Unum—"Out of many, one."

SEP 17 1942

Who but the very meanest among us can ever again refer to the great and valiant Chinese as "Chinks"? The spectacle of the sturdy, heroic people pouring out their life-blood for freedom forever blots out the pat caricature of the wily, tricky "heathen Chinee" portrayed by Bret Harte.

How can we look down upon the so-called "hunkies" and "bohunks" whose stout-hearted brothers are even now pitting their rifles and home-made grenades as Chetniks against the Fascist war machine in Yugoslavia, and as death-defying underground workers in Bohemia?

"PM"

We'll also have to swallow the pet names depicting the Russians as dumb clucks, born slaves who don't know what freedom means. What true American is not stirred to deep sentiments of love and gratitude for the epic stand of the Soviet people against our common foe? That stand is featured not only by rare bravery on the part of men, women and children ("animal courage," the Nazi detractors call it), but by an amazing display of inventive genius fueled by a fierce love of liberty.

SEP 17 1942

Two more nasty words should be deleted from the colloquial speech of America—"kikes" and "sheenies." These terms don't fit the people from whom springs a Meyer Levin, the crew-mate of Colin Kelly, who survived the great exploit to sink more Jap ships. The bombardier from Brooklyn typifies the martial qualities of an aroused people. In Palestine, they are literally fighting their way into the British Army. The Jews have contributed to the armies of the United Nations many sons who fight and die for world democracy.

Another minority, the "micks," are once more showing the world the heroic stuff that came from the Emerald Isle to help build and preserve a democratic America.

The dramatic act of Dorie Miller at Pearl Harbor symbolized the quiet courage inherent in our largest and most sinned-against minority—the "niggers." It was a Negro aviation engineer battalion which was cited by Secretary of War Stimson three weeks ago for "exceptionally meritorious" service in helping to win the Battle of the Coral Sea.

SEP 17 1942

Let's remember that the anti-Fascist Italians who manned the Garibaldi Brigade in defense of Loyalist Spain showed how "dagoes" and "wops" could fight when inspired by a worthy ideal.

All the other symbols of narrow group snobbery might well be tossed on war's scrapheap— "spics" and "grease-balls," "frogs" and "limeys."

The war that Hitler started is not yet done. But already it has shattered a keystone of Hitler's race myth. It has proved that bravery, brains and other qualities are not the exclusive property of any one race or people. The global war has annihilated space, lessening the distances between friendly nations, and between peoples within our own borders.

Asks Equality For Negroes In American Life

AUG 22 1942 AUG 22 1942

SALISBURY, N. C., Aug. 20—"We must have patience and we must try with all our might to bring about recognition of the fact that man must have equal opportunity to get any job he is capable of filling," Mrs. Roosevelt declared in her address to the Youth Convention at the quadrennial religious meeting of the AMEZ church in Hood Auditorium Thursday afternoon.

The speaker was frequently interrupted by storms of applause as she sounded the keynote in the afternoon panel discussion of Negro Youth when she called for equal opportunities in America for education, jobs, regardless of race, color or creed.

The speaker continued: "We must reverence the law, she said, and let it serve its purpose, and not do things as individuals and as groups that are outside the law. And thus, she added, we must demand under the law equality for every citizen, every child, regardless of race or creed, should receive equal opportunity under the law."

FACING NEW SORT OF WORLD

AUG 22 1942

Mrs. Roosevelt told the young people that they face a new sort of world, one their parents and ancestors knew nothing of. "It will take equal parts of courage, patience and spirit of adventure to face it and deal with it. Without deep religious feeling added to these other qualities, we may falter," she added.

The speaker said Pearl Buck summed it up nicely when she said this was a war for the freedom of all peoples, no matter of what color or creed. She said we must be one of the nations on hand to help work out real freedom for all peoples. Races must cooperate to the benefit of races on both sides.

AUG 22 1942

SHOLD HAVE RIGHT TO VOTE

Mrs. Roosevelt emphasized that there should be equal participation in government, including the right to vote. "Some people feel that there is such a concentration in some areas that one group would control a section. We should scatter ourselves throughout the nation," she said.

"We should be interested in good government for everybody. The majority should be composed of all minorities so that we will not get that division that breaks us apart as Americans. The real, basic rights of a citizen we must work for day and night—not separately but together. . . A great many believe as I do."

THERE MUST BE NO SLAVES

"No people have the right to make other people slaves," she shouted. "In America we have found a way to work to our ultimate ends. Our country, however, has fallen far short of our aspirations, but does give us a chance to work for the things we believe in.

AUG 22 1942

"I think you young people will come out of this war with new rights acquired. If we meet our problems in the spirit of Christ we will have moved forward toward solving the nation's problems and the world's problems."

Martin L. Harvey was in charge of the Youth panel discussion. He introduced Charles M. Campbell, president of National Zion Youth, who introduced Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, one of the most distinguished Negro women in America and member of the NYA.

Dixie fascism Exposed By Liberal Daily Press

SEP 19 1942

SEP 19 1942

By S. W. GARLINGTON

Special

Day by day in every way it is becoming more apparent that America and the United Nations cannot hope to win the peace, even if they win the war, without fiting and eliminating the denial of freedom within their own borders. Recent exposes by the liberal press on the danger of growing southern fascism to our war efforts throw the crisis wide open for public consideration and definite action by the federal government. The contents of the white press stories are old stuff to the Negro press, much of which has not been used because of the belief that treatment of such would serve a greater purpose if handled by the daily press to educate the whites, those in actual movements of the so-called "race problem."

SEP 19 1942

NY's liberal trio of dailies – the Post, Worker and PM—pointed out during the last three weeks the worst sore spot in American democracy—treatment of Negroes in the South.

The Worker opened up with Talmadge—a Nazi Dream in Action, White Supremacy Plot, Conspiracy in the South, and the Need for US Prosecution of Talmadge, Dixon Copperheads.

The Post exposed Dixie fascism for an entire week, with special emphasis on the Negro-baiting reign of Governor Talmadge and how Red Gallus Gene was "sounding an alarm in the hinterlands against a fancied invasion of Georgia by Ethiopian hordes."

Ed. Note: Last week Attorney General Ellis Arnall, Gene's New Deal opponent, backed by the churches, the press, the women's clubs, organized labor, disillusioned farmers and practically all the rest of the state's decent, fair-minded citizenry, defeated Talmadge at the polls and kicked his bigoted, despotic, greedy gang clear out of the capitol.

Last week PM released a nine-page survey on the Negro question by Victor Bernstein, correspondent who made a special trip thru the Deep South and learned that Dixie "fights the war valiantly – but it isn't the war for the Four Freedoms," and that "the Southern Negro hasn't even got 'promises'."

PM's coverage differed from others in that it gave a picture of attitudes – "attitudes of various strata of white men as they are being shaped, or left unshaped, by the millions of words on democracy and the Four Freedoms which they read daily in their newspapers or hear daily over the radio."

The near explosion of racial unrest and mass migration from the South are due to the following, according to the PM story:

- missing—a belief in democracy —Negroes are not even given promises,
- Alabama Governor Dixon's repudiation of a federal contract for defense work because it contained a non-discrimination clause,
- Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham lawyer and former KKK leader, who openly urged the creation of a nationwide League to Maintain White Supremacy,
- Eugene Talmadge and his Negro-baiting campaign for renomination as governor of George. . . . (Ed. to no avail),
- big northern corporations operating in the South which do nothing to change conditions but carry out the jimcro policy – such as Woolworth, Sears Roebuck, Metropolitan Life, USSteel, Piggly Wiggly, General Motors, US Rubber, Armour, Swift, Greyhound Lines, Standard Oil, Texas Oil, Pure Oil.

SEP 19 1942

WAY OUT SUGGESTED

SEP 19 1942

PM's survey went further than just reporting the facts. It sought to find a way out. In an editorial by V. H. Bernstein called A Belligerent Program for Limited Objectives, which described what he thot might be accomplished as extremely modest and a compromise with justice—"modest and a compromise because he felt that to ask for more at this time of war crisis might be unwise and dangerous"—he set up the three objectives below:

- fight anti-Negro job discrimination,
- go all-out for repeal of the poll-tax, and
- crush the lynching spirit.

SEP 19 1942

Regarding the FEPC, which was created to fite job discrimination, Chairman Lawrence W. Cramer said that the present staff is ineffective because it is too small. At present there are only 25 members on FEPC. He wants it increased to more than 200.

The poll tax issue needs only 10 more congressional signatures and there are still enough unsigned congressmen in NY to bring the issue up for discussion.

The anti-lynch bill has been shelved by the House.

RACIAL DISTURBANCE

SEP 11 1942

In the developing of the democracy about which we are so loud in our praise, there have naturally been some racial disturbances in many sections of this country. Here in St. Louis, for instance, a few incidents here and there have caused some of the white people to make the statement that "The Negro seems to be rising and touchy, cocky and ready to fight." Such statements, of courses, come no doubt from persons who are not abreast of the times in which we are living. They are people who are quick to make snap judgments concerning the Negro. They do not understand that right here in St. Louis there are, perhaps, fifteen or twenty thousand migrants from the South who have brought all of the southern prejudice against Negroes with them. When on the street cars and in public places they want to consign the Negro to "his place." They can see only one place in a democratic form of government for the darker races and that is the place of subserviency. Many of the soldiers who are taking special training in St. Louis are from the South. They, too, have all of their traditional prejudice and they try to impose their superiority upon Negroes. Thus a constant agitation is in the air on this racial question.

SEP 11 1942

As has been publicized in the daily papers of this city, Negro soldiers and citizens who go to and from St. Louis to Jefferson Barracks particularly at night, are harrassed by the white soldiers who use as their first line of attack such epithets as "Nigger, get in your place;" "you coon"; "you black s.......b.......," etc. Is there any wonder that the Negroes have a feeling of resentment? Is there any wonder that the racial feeling is running high in these several communities?

Just this week the press carried reports of white men beating Negro preachers because the latter passed through the coach in which the whites were passengers on the Southern Railroad in the state of Alabama. The account further stated that the poor whites resented the fact that Negroes were occupying a Pullman car while they were riding in day coaches. There was no disposition, according to press reports on the part of the ministers to "show out" or to be "cocky". They were merely moving from one part of the train to the other in the natural line of travel which is freely accorded all other races. Therefore, we think that these citizens who have the feeling that the Negroes are rising, et cetera, should also give some study to this matter in order to get at the root of this condition. Truly it is a condition to be regretted. It is a condition, which if we had control of, would be stopped tomorrow. But the newspapers, and we regret to say some of them are St. Louis newspapers, who play up race prejudice in many trivial incidents, could render a great service if they would preach tolerance and inform the public that we are living in a new day and things and conditions to which we have never been accustomed must be tolerated just as we are making a great sacrifice of our will and habits to win the war.

SEVERAL DRAFT BOARDS in Virginia and other Southern states have been classifying Indians as Negroes. After inquiries were made, the War Department was asked for a ruling not only on Indians but also on men of mixed Negro-white origin. Indians, it said, should be classified as whites. In cases where there is doubt as to whether white or Negro blood prevails, an investigation of the selectee's associates is to be made. He will then be classified in the group to which most of his friends belong.

The Anti-Defamation Society

THERE has been organized in Chicago an organization known as the National Negro Anti-Defamation society. Walter L. Lowe, head of the newly formed organization, says that there will be a militant fight directed at those agencies which have constantly misrepresented the colored people to the public.

JUN 28 1942

That such an organization is needed is attested to by the insults received by colored people on the movie screen, over the radio, in the newspapers, in the comic strips, and in the text books.

One of the first things the organization proposes to do, says Mr. Lowe, is to circulate to the daily papers, the radio, and the movie producers a list of opprobrious names which editors and actors often find fun in calling people of color. If they now plead ignorance, as many do, that such names are objectionable they will not be able to hide behind that screen when the society circulates to them in bold-face type a placard carrying the offensive terms.

Anybody who has read the metropolitan dailies or have seen the Uncle Tom of the movie knows that such an organization is needed. We would suggest one other program for it to pursue which is more on the positive side and will supplement the excellent program which has already been drawn up by the organization. We would suggest that it urge public officials to hang pictures of outstanding Negroes in public buildings; work toward the integration of Negro history in public schools throughout the country that pupils of tender years may know the contributions that colored people have made to American civilization; and to make a studied effort to discontinue the use of biased textbooks from public schools and in their place recommend others more favorable to colored people.

We are told that the Jewish people in Chicago spend a half million dollars a year to eradicate defamation against them. Negroes, too, are willing to work toward a similar program in their effort to gain greater respect, justice and fair play. Toward this end the Anti-Defamation society will receive the support and goodwill of the best thinking people of the white and colored races.

Poll-Tax Rankin Flays Critics

JUN 23 1942

Carl Sandburg and Pearl Buck Denounced by Jim Crow Representative

By Jim Desmond

Resorting to the smear technique of Martin Dies, whom he greatly admires, Rep. John E. Rankin, poll-taxer from Tupelo, Miss., cloaked himself in Congressional immunity to libel last week to denounce critics of his scientifically indefensible theory that there is a basic difference between white and Negro blood.

In a speech entitled Communists Attempt to Pollute the Blood Stream of America, inserted in the Congressional Record, Rankin chose as particular targets:

Carl Sandburg, biographer of Abraham Lincoln and poet of the American dream.

Pearl Buck, liberal author of The Good Earth, which was hailed by critics as the most understanding novel of China of our time.

JUN 23 1942

Lashes Sandburg

Rankin called Sandburg "this Communist-front propagandist" because the poet wrote, apropos of the war, on June 7:

"We have yet another front to conquer—the color line."

That statement, Rankin declared, showed that Sandburg "has joined that bunch of Communistic agitators who are trying to mongrelize America, stirring up race trouble all over the country, and using the Negro as a smoke screen for their treacherous designs."

He attacked Mrs. Buck with equal savagery and disregard of truth.

"Pearl Buck is advocating intermarriage between the white and yellow races," he said. "She is doing so ostensibly to please the Chinese, who have never asked for such a policy and who do not expect it. . . . But Pearl Buck's policy would have our white people intermarry with the Japs and thereby mongrelize our western states."

JUN 23 1942

Ignores Mrs. Buck's Plea

Rankin ignored the fact that what Mrs. Buck pleaded for was an end to the blind prejudice that hounds individuals who, exercising their right of free will, intermarry.

But even then Rankin was not finished. He quoted at length from Attorney General Biddle's notorious decision in the Bridges case—a decision hailed by all the professional Red-baiters—to buttress his charge that Communists seek destruction of the U. S. A.

Although Rankin reserved most of his abuse for American Communists, he also attacked the Russian Communist Party. Even the gallant stand of the Russians against Hitler, he said, is a stand not by the Communists but by the non-Communists of Russia. The Communists, he said, want only to foment a world revolution. (For a rebuttal of Rankin's argument on blood segregation, see Page 20.)

Go, write it in a martial-hand, be brief— it is no matter how witty.—Twelfth Night.

NO RACIAL ISSUE

Editor, The Journal: If there ever was a time for political science to be practiced, it is now time in Georgia.

Georgia from a political standpoint has been kicked around like a football, and unless the people wake up and insist on correcting some of the evils existing, there is no telling what the ultimate outcome will be.

The educational system of Georgia is being strained to the limit, and those responsible for that condition seem about as clumsy in their political activities as an elephant trying to hatch canary bird eggs. The present condition has been brought about through greed for power in politics, and instead of improving, conditions are growing worse. The only remedy for this unwarranted evil is simple. The people of Georgia, especially those enjoying the past advantages of higher education must stop, think and act, and by their actions insist upon the removal of politicians who only take their own personal political ambition into consideration at the expense of our education institutions.

It appears now Georgia is going to be confronted with a racial disturbance as an issue in the coming election of a Governor. This is not common sense. The Constitution of Georgia well takes care of the requirements as far as racial education is concerned, and for any man or few men to bring up such an issue in Georgia, it is nothing more than casting a reflection on the intelligence of Georgia's people as a whole. The people of Georgia, I am sure, will not stand for such activities in her bounds.

The time is at hand, that the newspapers of Georgia must rally to the aid of Georgia and fight to the bitter end for better political conditions, and assist in removing the shadows of evil that now hang over our good state.

It is not a racial issue at all. The colored people of Georgia have their lives to live, and so have the white people; separate and distinct, and the thinking men of both races appreciate there is no reason for bringing up a feeling between the two races. The constitution protects both races completely.

We Want Unity Of Purpose And Action

Never before, as now, should there be a more enduring unity of purpose on the part of our local leaders of our racial group and a sustaining endeavor to put down discouraging bickerings and misunderstandings on things essential for racial development and progress, and a full cooperation for the best interest of our country and humanity.

JUN 25 1942

56K

Being a minority group rigidly exposed to disheartening conditions functioning to keep the masses of our race down to a degrading level in the affairs of a nation, we should not allow internal dissensions among us to sap up every possible chance for us to overcome the things detrimental to legitimate ambitions and wholesome progress.

Intrigues, unwise appeals to arouse unsafe emotions of those among us who depend upon sane advice and guidance; isolating our endeavors through devious and treacherous channels, often from the standpoint of personal equation; spasmodic efforts mainly to serve others who are the farthest down and an attempt to maintain a position to the absolute disregard of serving for the larger number of our folk; a total disregard of the good to be obtained by reaching a common understanding for the gaining of certain objectives—must be immediately discarded by any leader or group of aspiring leaders among us if we are to survive present struggles to obtain what is justly due every Negro.

We want unity of purpose and action on the part of every Negro, who aspires to contribute his share for the end desired, for the fundamental things God has mandated for the Negro as an American citizen. If we fail to unite for the best interest of all concerned, we must readily conclude with the Phillistines—"Brains are Cheap."

WE, THE PEOPLE

"We ought to have sense enough by now to know that the federal government has only such power as we freely accord it; our experience with prohibition should have taught us that a federal enactment is effective only as it conforms to the will of the people and as they respect it."

The above is quoted from the astounding speech made by Mark Ethridge at Birmingham and shows, we think, how a hot-headed man can distort history and facts when they conflict with his pet theories.

JUL 17 1942

It is old stuff to contend that the federal government is an institution which some states brought into being for the amusement of a few people who wanted union, and that the states "reserved for themselves certain special privileges over which the federal government has no jurisdiction.

As a matter of fact, the federal government was born of the necessity for forming a "more perfect union" than ever could be realized while the states operated under the Articles of Confederation. This federal government, in its Constitution, ITSELF, reserved "to the states" certain un-named matters, instead of the states "reserving" for themselves particular matters they did not think the federal government competent to handle.

The kind and number of matters the states have had reserved "to" them depends very generally upon what the Supreme Court says the states may keep in "reserve" and this court is constantly reducing the "reserves."

JUL 17 1942

Prohibition came largely as a result of the agitation and votes of politicians who found in it a profitable way to dispose of their corn crops. They permitted it to be manufactured into illicit liquor. Prohibition failed of enforcement largely because the "enforcing" machinery was to a large extent turned over to politicians who got one salary from Uncle Sam for "enforcing" and another from the illicit liquor dealers for failing to dismantle the little distilleries when they were located.

It is probable Prohibition never would have been repealed had not most of its friends found out that politicians were seeing to it that prohibition did not prohibit, and it was bettetr to bring liquor selling out into the open and tax it.

By their advocacy of National Prohibition, Southern politicians proved how hypocritical they were in contending for State's Rights.

If Mr. Ethridge will take time off to read the Constitution of his country he will find out that it begins with "We, the People."

JUL 17 1942

It does not begin with, "We, the States."

Clinton Negro Writes Letter To Those Of His Race

56K

A bit of advice to the Negroes in general:

In Laurens county we are living in a strange age, strange things are happening now. People act strange, look strange and talk strange. This is an age when one needs to be careful about what he says and to whom he says it. You don't know when you are talking to your enemy or the enemy of America. We, as Negroes, should realize this one fact, that no nation, no country or no race has done as much for us and will do as much for us as the American white man. I was talking to one of our men a few days ago who is eighty-four years of age that has lived in Laurens county all of those years, and he has never been arrested. Why? Because he knows how to act. I am forty-six years of age; have never had one minute's trouble with a white man, and don't expect any. I have only lived in Clinton five years and can get any kind of help I need from the white race and anybody else can if you do your part. Somebody said the other day: Walker is a white man's nigger. I may be. If I am, I thank God for giving me sense enough to be one. I would rather be a white man's nigger than to be Hitler's nigger. A lot of people hollow about social equality. That will never happen this side of heaven, and no real up-to-date Negro wants it to happen. We have what we want down here—good schools, good Negro teachers, and good Negro churches and preachers. We would like for our teachels to be better paid, but that wouldn't be social equality. Look the word up and understand what it means and you wouldn't want it. Don't let anybody fool you. You will never have a better day with any nation on earth than you have with the American white man. Well, some of us say we catch the devil, but listen: Maybe some of us do, or all of us may. But believe me, if we don't play our whole part, I see something up the road, and it looks like death, hell and destruction. I wish to advise the Negroes of Laurens county to remember you were born here, all the people we know are here, and these people are better to us than anybody else can be. Let us stick to them through thick and thin, and I hope the white man will realize that we are his best friend. For two hundreds or more years we have cooked your food, washed your clothes, and nursed your children. How many families have been poisoned by us in all of these years? None. What other race can you get along with as you do the Negro? None. What race can you send to your field and do your work for what we do it for? None. Then why not let these two races stick 'till death do us part. God help us to do so. When it comes to Hitler and the Japs. I am against them. I am against their policy. It may seem strange to hear a preacher say this, but I am against any man or set of men who try to destroy God's church. I love the church. I pray for the church, and I shall die for the church. I don't have any money, but I get hold of a little and I am doing everything I can in the way of buying stamps and bonds to help keep any man from here that doesn't like the church.

In conclusion, let us not look for trouble. People usually find what they are looking for. Look on the bright side, look up and not down, God still lives. Let the American white man, and the American Negro stop fighting each other on the street. We need to fight the enemy and not each other. We can't win fighting among ourselves. That's what the enemy wants. Do a little thinking. We want victory, but we can't get it on the streets fighting each other.

Is Race Prejudice Increasing?

Race prejudice is definitely increasing. If one looks objectively at the situation, one can expect nothing else. Why? Well, ignorance and fear are the basic elements in race prejudice. Dr. Frazier pointed out years ago, that race prejudice is a type of insanity.

In other words, Governor Talmadge is insane. He cannot be judged by standards of reason. If you have ever looked at the inmates in an asylum, you know the manifestations of insanity. Now, take an example of race prejudice.

A student whom I taught was in the station at St. Louis. He was waiting for a train to Chicago. Suddenly he heard a great commotion. A white woman was screaming.

SEP 23 1942

She cried: "Oh, God, what is the country coming to? Look at all these n . . . . rs sitting in a station by the side of white folks!"

Some persons tried to talk to the woman. An elderly white man tried to quiet her. This made her scream louder. Finally, some men picked her up bodily and carried her out. Was this not a case of instnity? Can it be judged by the standards of reason?

THE NEGRO IN THE PRESENT CRISIS

It is a psychological fact that the stronger a suppressed group becomes, the more it is feared. The old Negro leaders thought that economic progress and educational advancement of the Negro would solve his problems. We have but to look at the Jews to see the foolishness of this. Progress of the Negro increases the fears of the Crackers. Today Southerners believe the Negro needs only a chance to make good. They intend to keep that chance from him.

Race prejudice is like a cancer. It continues to spread until it eats away the vitals of things. You cannot stop cancer by doing nothing. You cannot protect yourself from an insanity of prejudiced minds by doing nothing.

SEP 23 1942

It is not just a question of wiping out race prejudice. Far from it. We must stop it from spreading its rot.

Some Negro citizens have asked me about the March on Washington Committee. I sav it is a tremendous thing. It is an example of mass pressure. Propaganda is the most powerful weapon in the world. It causes governments to fall. It causes Justice and Truth to win out. A minority group must use the Word. It must place its case before the bar of public opinion. Now, now is the time. Tomorrow will be too late.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

What is it that the Negroes of the District of Columbia lack? One word will answer the question: Everything. What do they need? Everything. The center of Negro propaganda in the United States should be in Washington, D. C. It is the hub of the world. It is the place where the Four Freedoms will begin their march across the world.

Negroes in Washington need a Civil Rights Bill, the abolition of discrimination in the Federal Government, and the destructon of jim-crowism in the Capital Transit Company.

Why should the street car owners advertise in the South for operators and conductors? Do they expect the leopard to change its spots? Why can't Negroes read the gas and light meters in Negro neighborhoods? Is that a violation of the Constitution?

SEP 23 1942

Every Negro should become a walking propagandist. Everytime, at work or play, you have a chance to speak for human rights you should do so. You should support all militant Negro organizations and leaders. A word of encouragement is a great thing. You should talk with white people of all classes. Above all, work with labor groups. Don't let it be said of the Negro: "He missed the last bus!"

RIGHTS OF MINORITIES

SEP 20 1942

The Courier Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Commending a Kentucky judge for turning loose certain "much-bedeviled religionists" who appeared before him charged with distributing handbills on the streets, The Louisville Times observes: "If police should arrest distributors of Democratic or Republican handbills, there would be indignant public protest. Because Jehovah's Witnesses and Communists are few and largely unpopular, police feel less bound to respect their rights."

SEP 20 1942

It is indeed the essence of democracy to recognize minority rights—however disliked the minority may be, and however much of a home-front hero a chap may become by assailing them.

Decent People of Both Races

In no city of the United States, North or South, have the relations between the white and the negro races been more creditable to both than in Charleston.

One hears "rumors" of discontent, of animosity. They do not proceed from the representatives of the better and older element of the negroes, and they are wholly unrepresentative of the intelligent, the thoughtful, the well-disposed white people of Charleston, whether old residents or newcomers.

The great majority of the negroes are on friendly terms with the white people. The friendly feeling is heartily reciprocated.

Racial conflicts, when they occur, in any city, are invariably started by ignorant and rough persons whether white or black, who do not wish to live in peace with their neighbors. There will be at no time in South Carolina clashes between the races if the substantial and law-abiding citizens will be watchful. Their duty is not performed when they are indifferent, when they do not assert themselves, when they do not condemn law-breakers of every description and demand of their peace officers faithful and just performance of duty and assist them in it.

The leaders of the negro race in Charleston, The News and Courier believes, are as earnest and zealous for the preservation and the perpetuation of good race relations as the respectable and the self-respecting white people are.

The white people are now in a great majority in Charleston. Thousands of soldiers and sailors, officers and men, are in Charleston now, and it may be assumed that they understand their duty to observe the laws, to assist in the suppression of disorder if it occurs. In that way they serve their flag and their country.

There will be quarrels between white men and white men, between negroes and negroes, sometimes between a white man and a colored man. Such occurrences are no excuse for riot, and only ruffians and malicious disturbers will seize upon them as excuse to inject a "race issue".

No person, white or black, who injects a "race issue" into the life of a community is a friend of his country in time of war.

Whosoever shall carelessly or purposely start trouble between races is a betrayer of his country.

SOUTHERN REACTIONARIES

AUG 22 1942

This nation is engaged in a war which historians say will affect the status of the human race for the next 1,000 years; and in this war the morale of the downtrodden masses is sustained by their confidence in America's idealism.

AUG 22 1942

The President and many of his most enlightened advisers are trying to put our house in order before the world sees all the filth of discrimination and injustice to the Negro, and loses faith in our pronouncements. These officials are hurriedly making amends here and there so that the black and brown people of Java and Burma, and the brown and yellow people of India and China may accept our assurance that they are to share equally with the white races of the world the fruits of victory.

Although the stakes are civilization itself, and in this struggle the colored races hold the balance of power, the South goes along indifferent to consequences, flaunting world opinion, and endangering America's prestige by its barbaric treatment of black people. Governor Dixon of Alabama had his State refuse a Government contract because he would not comply with the Federal requirements of no discrimination in hiring employes. Governor Talmadge of Georgia forbids the attendance of Negroes in white classrooms. Senator Bankhead of Alabama advises the War Department not to send Negro troops South, for there is likely to be rioting. Congressman Rankin and other Southern legislators continue to voice their race hatred in the halls of Congress. Lynchings go on as usual.

No outstanding political personality of the South has dared to ask that race prejudice abate, just a little, during the war. These Southerners, who do not grumble when asked to accept rationing and heavier taxes or to sacrifice their lives in battle, would rather see civilization destroyed and die among its ruins than to suspend one of their hates against the Negro people.

The South is not only anti-Negro—it is anti-progress. It disfranchises the poor whites by poll tax, and only half educates them in their public schools. It is opposed to organized labor and living wages to workers. It is the most unliberal place in the entire hemisphere, and probably throughout the world, with the exception of Germany, Japan and Italy.

It is the representatives of these prejudiced and backward people, men who share their sentiments and philosophy of government, who will have more to say in making the peace than those of any other section of our country; for the South holds most of the chairmenships in the Senate, where treaties must be ratified. The contemplation of this fact should be sufficient to extinguish hope in those who are fighting and dying for a more tolerant and better world; for it is to be expected that people who would not sacrifice their hates and prejudices to win the victory would not suppress them after victory has been won.

We advise the colored peoples of the world, and all those forces working for a liberal and enlightened peace, to watch every Southerner that comes to the peace table. We say to the Negroes of our own land that we will never throw off the shackles of race prejudice until the strangle-hold which the South has on our national Congress is broken.

EDIT SIDE OF THE LEDGER—

We are not yet conceited enough to elieve the statements which are reported below, but five issues ago we asked if the Negro had no champion of his cause, or defender against Rankin et al. A review of the Congressional Record for July 16, 17, and 21 shows that:

AUG 15 1942

1. Hon. Elmer Holland, of Pennsylvania, spoke to the House on "Injustice to Negro People" and caused the Pegler "If I Were A Negro" article to be printed in the Congressional Record.

2. Hon. Emmet O'Neal, of Kentucky, at least made an effort to explain the, as he put it, "alleged discrimination against colored soldiers by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company."

3. Hon. Arthur Mitchell of Illinois told the House that white America knows only the Negro in domestic service and the police court, but not the respectable Negro home, Negro physicians, teachers, social workers, ministers, editors, college presidents and the like. In another speech, on Democracy and the Negro, Hon. Mr. Mitchell explained how the morale of one-tenth of America's fighting strength is being destroyed by America. He exploded the so-called reasoning behind the Red Cross blood bank discrimination.

AUG 15 1942

4. Hon. Charles Clason, of Massachusets, complimented the foresight of military and naval authorities in dropping some of the barriers that have heretofore kept the Negro from the same rights and privileges to serve his country on equal basis with white citizens.

He suggested that further consideration be given to removing these barriers altogether.

DEBIT SIDE OF LEDGER—

AUG 15 1942

Declaring that the motto of the Democratic Party in Alabama is "White Supremacy," Governor Frank Dixon said (Congressional Record, July 24) that Alabama would rather do without government industrial contracts than sign an agreement in which this clause appears: ". . . shall not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

A 'Worried Southerner' Fears Racial Equality

OCT 3 - 1942

OCT 3 - 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.— "A Worried Southerner" from Charleston, S. C., made the Congressional Record last week with the assistance of Rep. Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, with a letter "for Southern Independence."

The letter was addressed to the Charleston News and Courier, written by C. Norwood Hastie, who signed himself, "A Worried Southerner." He attacked the poll tax, the feared Negro vote, and suggested a new political party for the South.

OCT 3 - 1942

"Surely by now every southerner knows that the desires of the Communist, the liberalite, New Dealer, and both major parties are to strike a blow at the heart of the South which would imperil our civilization. Both parties wish to become dominant through obtaining the Negro vote," said the worried Southerner. "A drive is on to establish racial equality."

He accused northern politicians of sowing the seed which later on the nation, but particularly the South, will harvest in grief.

"They wish to establish a policy of letting the Negroes vote and protect them at the polls. It was the fear of that which for years has kept the South democratic and hostile to the Republicans. Now, we find both parties getting more heedless of the South. It may soon come to pass that against our will we shall have to form an independent party in the South and border states in order to preserve our way of life handed down to us by our ancestors," said Hastie.

OCT 3 - 1942

"We must not forget the dark days of 1876. We like the colored people. We know them, and they have not had in the South any trouble as recently happened in Detroit. We wish to continue to live on good terms with them," he declared, "but not on the terms or under the conditions the northern people who control the major parties wish to impose upon us."

Hastie then suggests a plan which he declares to be workable whereby the South would hold the balance of power and become the Southern Independent Party. He suggests that after the Democrats and Republicans had nominated their candidates, the South would interview each party, cold as ice, and after getting their promises, two weeks prior to the election, would tell the South which one to vote for as president.

American Indians Have Separate Units In U. S. Army

OCT 3 - 1942

TUCOMCARI, N. M.—(ANP)—While not much has been said about it and no complaints have been registered, the United States Army has units made up of American Indians.

OCT 3 - 1942

Evidently the braves who come from 50 distinct Indian tribes do not regard their separateness as segregation or perhaps they like it. The group is receiving special training in desert warfare.

TRIBES IN ARMS

Among the tribes represented are the Creeks, Cherokees, Choctaws, Seminoles and Chicasaws. The Apaches, Shawnees, Araphoes, Poncas, Sioux, Kiowas and Kaws also have their sons in this outfit.

OCT 3 - 1942

They are said to take to soldiering like a duck takes to water. ~~There are~~ officers of Indian blood, too, in the 45th division, composed mainly of Indians.

The Myth of White Supremacy

The recent address of H. W. Wilkerson, an attorney, before the Kiwanis club of Bessemer, Alabama, aptly disclosed and portrays the tendency in the South today to scraphead democracy and deny Negroes elementary rights guaranteed by the constitution of the United States. Wilkerson's speech is the best evidence we have observed in current weeks proving the unwillingness of reaction to join in the perfecting of a new social order. There are a lot of Negro publications dodging the word "social" but the Black Dispatch wants to say here and now that unless humanity has in mind the formation of a new social order that recognizes the equality of all human beings, the present holocaust of blood is going to fall far short of solving world problems.

There is no way to discuss equitable economic and political relationships without envisioning social responsibilities. The three are cumulative and heaped together, and the Black Dispatch is one publication which shall not be stupid enough to attempt separation.

Natural understanding and intercourse is a social organism. Men and women here on earth are thrown together and must have some type of human relationship and contact. Whenever one individual assumes superiority over another through political or economic planning, there is friction. Ideal society compasses the thought of human equality.

Mr. Wilkerson in his Bessemer speech, attempts to fool his audience ranting about democracy and the right of the majority to rule, but he entirely overlooks the fact that this is a philosophy which in practice he ignores. Listen to this pearl from Mr. Wilkerson's remarks:

> "About ten per cent of the population of this country are Negroes. The whites being in the majority, it is their right and responsibility to work out the problem within the law, and by a law that all whites and blacks will obey."

SEP 12 1942

Now on its face that is a democratic and fair statement. Everyone in America believes in the right of the majority. We also agree that in the United States Negroes represent around one tenth of the population, so that Negroes should in a national way mold 10 per cent of the national patterns, according to Mr. Wilkerson.

Most of the Negroes, however, live in the southern section of the United States. In states like Mississippi and Georgia they represent one-half of the population. Does Mr. Wilkerson's thesis propose that in Mississippi and Georgia government Negroes hold one half the offices and share equally in determining local sanctions? In some counties in the South, Negroes are in the majority. This is true in Mr. Wilkerson's Alabama. What suggestion has Mr. Wilkerson to make regarding self determination in such county atmosphere? Is Mr. Wilkerson honestly and sincerely willing for the majority to rule in every political unit in the United States?

It's all very well to say that when once a law is enacted both white and blacks should obey those laws, but the sad truth is that in the South, when once a savage, bestial stab has been made at Negro citizenship, through the enactment of jim crow and segregation statutes, the Negroes generally, and with few exceptions, abide by such unconscionable statutes, while the whites use "extra-legal methods" to destroy fragmentary liberties Negroes are supposed to have under such undemocratic arrangements.

This excited Southerner says "I learn that there seems to be a disposition on the part of many Negroes to disregard and resist the jim crow laws." In this statement Mr. Wilkerson admits he has no first hand information, but is basing the conclusions reached in his address upon information "I learn" from other people. Probably Mr. Wilkerson rides in Pullmans and has no opportunity to make observations regarding terrible conditions on buses and in jim crow cars.

For instance, a young woman who arrived in Oklahoma City recently, said she had considerable trouble with train officials attempting to make her get out of the coach in which she had been riding, and plainly marked: "For Negroes" and go into the smoker of the little stuffy jim crow coach. The conductor desired to make some whites more comfortable who had unlawfully and at his suggestion jammed themselves into the Negro coach.. Both the conductor and the passengers were plainly violating the separate coach and waiting room laws of Oklahoma. The Black Dispatch assumes that Mr. Wilkerson would feel that the unwillingness of this Negro girl to leave her seat and go into the smoker is an attemp to "resist and ignore jim crow laws."

Every Negro who rides buses and street cars today knows that white people are permitted by the bus drivers to get on the bus ahead of the Negro, not only take his seat, but the bus driver in many instances refuses to allow the Negro to get on that bus. He is told to catch the next one. Who in such instance is resisting the jim crow laws as enacted by the legislature.

Monday this week, a Negro soldier from Fort Sill came to the Black Dispatch office to relate almost unbelievable treatment received on what he alleged was a bus service out of Lawton to Wichita Falls. He said he entered the coach and went to the rear seat, where all Negroes ride. He said at Grandfield the bus driver asked him to come up front so that four whites getting on at this point could have the rear seat. At Burkburnett the driver asked him to leave the seat he was in and take a cot seat in the aisle. At the next stop he asked him to get off so that passengers could get on and off, and that when he climbed back on, one of the passengers who had gotten on had taken his seat. The Negro soldier, with whites occupying the section where he was supposed to ride, stood up the remainder of the way into Wichita Falls. We presume Mr. Wilkerson would condemn the Negro soldier if he had offered some type of protest to the treatment he received.

This writer sometime ago rode on the bus from Oklahoma City to Dallas, thence back up to Hugo, Oklahoma. A little later we rode from Oklahoma City to Fort Smith and returned. In every instance when the bus got crowded, the whites (both women and men) came back and sat down in the Negro section. Twice, however, when a Negro sat in the first seat forward and someone came in occupying the seat across the aisle, the bus driver came back and told this Negro to take the back seat. Jim crow is something for Negroes to respect and whites to reject. All of the trouble on buses today develops out of the unwillingness on the part of whites to let Negroes have any type of accommodation. It seems to the Black Dispatch that the South has just about obliterated all of the rights of black people without going to the trouble to organize Mr. Wilkerson's "White Supremacy" society.

Mr. Wilkerson makes great to-do over some Negro soldiers whom he alleges threw kisses from a train coach, at some white girls as they passed through the city where Alabama State college is located. We hold no brief for those young men, although we are sure the young soldiers in question had nothing in mind but a little innocent deviltry, but what will Mr. Wilkerson think when we advise him that while driving down in Kentucky last week, and just before we reached the Tennessee line, we had three white girls riding in the back of an "open air taxi" to thumb their noses at this writer. When one thinks of the social significance of the throwing of a hand kiss from a train coach, and the thumbing of one's nose, which has the more cultural tone? You see, one is on the wrong foot when he attempts to reach ethnic conclusions based on the idea and notion that white people are better than black. hWat we must all understand and know is that neither virtue nor vice are something incident to color.

And is it not stupid for Mr. Wilkinson to assume that it is proper and right to disarm Negro MPs. We know all about the incident at Tuskegee and feel that President Patterson was clearly within the precincts of reason when he insisted that the Negro MPs be rearmed. The thing objected to at Tuskegee was that Negro MPs guarding government property should have power and authority to arrest white men. We suppose Mr. Wilkerson would be willing to allow the government post office in Bessemer to be blown up by Germans before he would allow such alien miscreants to be arrested by a loyal, alert Negro soldier. We presume Mr. Wilkerson's thesis would insist that all Negro soldiers be sent against the Japs, and that "FOR HEAVEN SAKE DO NOT LET NIGGERS SHOOT AT ANY WHITE GERMANS."

The new apostle of white supremacy seems to be mixed up on his Biblical theories also. Mr. Wilkerson

SEP 12 1942

The new apostle of white supremacy seems to be mixed up on his Biblical theories also. Mr. Wilkerson seems to assume he has heard of some divine edict which would frown down upon and prevent racial admixture. We wish to call Brother Wilkerson's attention to the 12th chapter of Numbers. Moses married an Ethiopian woman, and when his sister Miriam learned her brother had married a black woman, according to the Bible, "spake against Moses."

"And the Lord came down in a pillar of the cloud," according to the scriptures, and after giving Mariam and Aaron a verbal lashing, "AND BEHOLD MARIAM BECAME LEPEROUS, WHITE AS SNOW."

Of course to many Negroes who have been fed the spurious information that black is a curse, it will come with a great deal of shock to observe the only person we have been able to discover in the Bible color-cursed was Mariam, who was cursed white because she objected to an interracial marriage.

Mr. Wilkerson seems astonished to discover that many Negroes believe in the integrity of the Supreme Court of the United States, in its declaration that Negroes must have their constitutional rights to sit on juries, and he says there "is much in the action of that august body of recent years that lends color and support to this dangerous impression." The Bessemer spokesman believes tha the desire of Negroes to sit on juries will be "hotter tha some sections of our country can stand."

It is difficult for one to understand the mental an moral processes of a man like Mr. Wilkerson. He is con vincing evidence of the fact that if fascism and Hitleris ever enter the United States these vicious totalitarianism will find fertile soil in a warped and corrupt mind such a Mr. Wilkerson possesses. Mr. Wilkerson does not see to realize and know that the world is very unsafe for whit people until it is made secure for everybody.

SOME JEWS ARE LIKE FOXES

AUG 22 1942

Intelligent, thoughtful Negro leadership deplores any evidence of anti-Semitism among the Negro masses. It is heartening to know that there is only a scant minimum of such bias. Negroes and Jews suffer from prejudice and there should be a community of interest, thought and action among them.

AUG 22 1942

But some Jews, as some Negroes, do not realize that we should work together for the common interest.

The Fair Employment Practice Committee was set up to combat job discrimination against minority groups, including JEWS and Negroes. It was established as the result of agitation by Negroes. Jews did not help to force the creation of this agency. And, as a matter of fact, they stood off on the sidelines to see how it was going before they began to avail themselves of its power and authority. They didn't want to go off on the deep end.

When they perceived that the FEPC might be of service to them, they swung into line. They not only asked the Committee to add impetus to its fight against job discrimination of which Jews were the victims, but they insisted on bigger and better representation on the staff of the Committee. They began to demand jobs which the Committee had and some it did not have.

That is all right. They deserve the jobs.

But what did they do when the Committee was recently knocked on its heels by the President's letter of July 30? Did they make any move to keep the Committee in power and authority? Did they, as Negroes did, rally to the aid of the Committee?

AUG 22 1942

Maybe they did, but there is not much record of it.

There are some foxy Jews. We believe that they should not be so foxy, that they should FIGHT with us if they hope to share the benefits of our fighting.

WHEN WILL THE PATTERN CHANGE?

AUG 22 1942

There are 13 million Negroes in this country, not one of whom has his full Constitutional rights as a citizen. In some regions in certain cities, he is permitted many of these rights. In others he has few of them; in most rural regions he has none. In the South, the Negro loses out on all counts: education, health, recreation, housing, the vote, jobs both as to pay and kind, civil liberties, rights of free movement, right to the courtesies of address which civilized countries accord citizens regardless of race and economic status.

AUG 22 1942

For 80 years, in legal freedom, the American Negro has endured patterns of discrimination and segregation. Not as a slave but as an American citizen he now asks this question: when will the pattern be changed? He believes that the government which requires him to pay taxes and conscripts his sons to fight its war owes him democracy's privileges as well as its duties . . . Through its press, the Negro race is asking for the freedoms the United States says it believes in. And the race has been answered that the time is not "right." When will the time be "right?" and "right" for whom? The Negro wants to know.

By act, word, newspaper column, editorial, speech, sermon, in quiet reason with friends, public opinion can be created by liberals and labor to accept the Negro in democracy, as public opinion has been created to accept this war. Suggest that the old days have passed; that as war strategy it is the wise thing now, the "hard necessity" perhaps, but the only course to follow both for winning the faith of other peoples across the seas and for strengthening our inner defenses; that is the inevitable direction which we must take to find a way out of our American troubles and the sooner we take it, the better.

If we profoundly believe the Negro is as important as the white man, that his happiness and security are as essential as ours, we shall not be so quickly alarmed about "race trouble," by which is meant trouble for the white man. The Negro is always in trouble, a trouble which does not seem to disturb many white people until the contagion spreads from the Quarters to White Town.

Alfange Lays Shortage of Doctors To Medical School's Anti-Semitism

PM New York, N.Y. 9-30-42

By William P. Vogel, Jr.
Staff Correspondent

56R

BINGHAMTON, Sept. 30.—Dean Alfange, American Labor candidate for Governor, last night demanded an end of all types of discrimination if the U. S. A. is to achieve a real working democracy. He condemned "sham lip service" to racial and religious freedom.

PM

"Racial and religious tolerance," he said, "is the only possible basis of national unity. Notwithstanding the appeal made by the President against discrimination, many of our industries are continuing their practice of discriminating against workers because of race, color, or creed."

1-30-42

Liberty, he said, can "play no favorites." As an example of what he meant, Alfange discussed the Negro question, thereby becoming one of the first candidates for office to take it up in a section where there is virtually no Negro issue, instead of in Harlem.

"When we demand that the Negroes of this country shall be guaranteed the full enjoyment of their rights as citizens, we are not fighting for them primarily as Negroes, but as human beings. . . . When we fight anti-Semitism, the most vicous and poisonous social weapon yet devised by Hitler, we fight it not because Jews are Jews, but because Jews are Americans and a part of the family of humanity."

Alfange said of discriminators:

New York, N.Y.

"I shall oppose them wherever they lift their heads, because they are false to American history, traitors to American unity, and enemies of the American way of life. Majorities do not have rights as majorities, nor minorities as minorities; we all have rights as Americans,"

Alfange mentioned a specific example of what kind of thing he would fight against: the discrimination by many medical schools against Jewish students.

"There have been thousands of our Jewish students to whom medical careers have been denied. Today the cry is going up that we have not enough doctors to go around. Why are they not here? The answer is that we have practiced discrimination and are reaping now the fruits of that discrimination."

Today the tour ends with speeches in Monticello and Nyack. Next Wednesday, Alfange will make his first important Brooklyn speech at a rally in the Hotel St. George, where he also will discuss racial tolerance.

STUDY THESE FACES—The six men above are dead today. They died in the electric chair in the District jail after being convicted as spies who landed on American soil from German submarines, bent upon destroying American industry and disrupting civilian morale, to make it easier for Hitler to win the war.

AUG 22 1942

BECAUSE THEY WERE WHITE, everyone of them had a better opportunity for advancement in America then the most loyal black citizen who knows no country save America, no flag but the stars and stripes and holds no allegiance except to the Government of the United States.

AUG 22 1942

BECAUSE THEY WERE WHITE, they were free to go and come wherever they pleased. No doors were shut in their faces. They were not forced to ride in jim-crow cars or eat in jim-crow restaurants; were not barred from theatres, hotels and schools, and were not obliged to suffer the thousands of indignities heaped upon America's own citizens of color. But, still, they hated America and all it stands for, and risked their lives in an unsuccessful attempt to destroy it.

BECAUSE THEY WERE WHITE, saboteurs though they were, they would have been welcomed with open arms in every American plant. They could have joined the United States Navy, attended the U.S. Naval Academy, from which colored citizens are effectively barred, and would have been welcomed in Talmadge's Georgia where this American Hitler has ordered his militia to shoot on sight any colored citizen who objects to Georgia's jim-crow laws or voices a protest.

AUG 22 1942

BECAUSE THEY WERE WHITE, they could have access to, and could have risen to, directorships in Hollywood or on the radio which are two of the greatest disseminators of propaganda in the world, and which influence American thought and actions. Colored Americans are barred from both of these agencies except in menial or ridiculous capacities.

BECAUSE OF ALL THESE RIGHTS, these men, some of them American-born, should have been staunch Americans, but instead, their loyalties belonged only to Hitler and to their fatherland. These men are dead, and there their personal mischief ends. AUG 22 1942

BUT HOW MANY OTHERS of many nationalities are working silently in high and low stations to destroy America, driven on in their mad desire first to serve the lands of their nationality, and second, because they have no faith in our pretensions of democracy while hypocritically denying it to our own?

HOW LONG WILL AMERICA continue to make a mockery of democracy by permitting racial prejudice and its purveyors to commit the crimes against its own citizens which make the crimes of these men tame by comparison? These American-made Nazis were not landed by submarines and they do not use bombs or dynamite to destroy, but they are effectively undermining the morale of thirteen million black Americans by acts equally as treacherous when they discriminate, insult and humiliate us on the basis of color alone.

AUG 22 1942

WHEN WILL THEY, like the saboteurs above, be bought to justice? What will their punishment be? When will America be saved from the damnation of color inherent in the theory that only white is right?

Letters to The Editor

Negroes Don't Want It

36K

Editor The Telegraph:

It is quite unfortunate and short-sighted that at this time, when America is involved in a war which calls for the full support of every one of its citizens, black and white, that efforts are being made which tend to divide the races and to create tension. Such efforts are in line with Hitler's "divide and conquer" plan.

Specifically, the letter sent by Col. Lindley Camp to the State Guard, which was made public a short time ago, falls in the category of creating race situations where there are none. So does the governor's issue of racial co-education. Both actions are grown-up editions of the story, "Wolf, Wolf."

It appears that the commanding officer of the State Guard received a report from one community that there had been an unusual number of assault cases and attempted assaults. It was further stated that other communities had reported efforts on the part of Negro men and women to demand certain privileges which are not granted in Georgia.

The first community referred to was more than likely Macon, where several weeks ago there were a series of assaults and attempted assaults. Yet, all these cases appeared to have been the work of just two or three men who, according to the evidence presented, were not influenced by any subversive agents. In other words, the violations were individual acts and no indictment against the Negro race, which is unable to control the behavior of all its members any more than the Caucasion is able to control the behavior of Dillinger, "Baby Face" Nelson, et al. Furthermore, it appears that the local law enforcement officers were able, and are able, to take care of such crimes.

The complaint of several communities concerning Negroes demanding privileges not granted in Georgia appears to boil down specifically to the Roland Hayes case in Rome, Ga. This case received wide publicity because of the eminence of the famous singer. Hayes claimed to have been struck by the police when he was arrested for seeking to find out what was the trouble between his wife and a clerk in a shoe store.

Newspaper reports seemed to bear out the point that no demanding for privileges was done in this case but that Hayes refused to observe the segregation policy of the store by walking out and it wasn't the walking out apparently which caused the attack on them but the statement by Hayes to a clerk that he should be over there with Hitler.

Now, there may be other incidents where Negroes have protested against Jim Crowism on bus lines, but these incidents seem to be individual and as the F.B.I. office in Atlanta stated, no report of subversive influence has reached them.

An attempt is being made to show that Georgia needs a governor who will keep Negroes from entering the University of Georgia. What Negro wants to go to the University of Georgia? Although the U. S. supreme court ruled that every state must provide equal educational faculties within the state for all races—a requirement Georgia has not met when it comes to graduate schools for Negroes—still no Negro has made application or shown any desire to want to attend the University of Georgia. Many Negroes in the North who could attend college where both races attend prefer to enrol in Southern Negro colleges, because the social life is better. A graduate of Tuskegee, Morehouse, Talladega can gain admittance to any graduate school that a graduate of the University of Georgia can. So why would anyone think that Negroes are desirous of attending the University of Georgia. Such an idea is unfounded and groundless.

Dean Cocking seems to be held responsible for advocating the idea, but, after all, when he was tried before an unprejudiced Board of Regents, he was found to be innocent of the charges. The verdict of the second hearing cannot be considered because it was undoubtedly not fair and democratic.

Therefore, since no one is advocating that Negroes should enter the schools of Georgia, any argument or debate on the question is superfluous and quite untimely.

Riff In The Clouds

SEP 19 1942 6K

ON AUGUST 15th we wrote in these columns about "Clouds Over The South." We quoted a letter from a white southerner—a Georgian—which said, among other things:

> For six months here in the heart of the deep South I have watched the growth of racial fear, which is the basis of racial hatred.

That was written during the heat of the Georgia gubernatorial primary campaign, when the encumbent, Eugene Talmadge, was using every trick known to dirty politics to convince Georgians that "white supremacy" depended on his return to office. Running against Talmadge was the State's Attorney General, Ellis Arnall, who was trying to convince Georgians that his opponent had raised a fake issue. To the surprise of many people outside of Georgia, he succeeded, or something more significant happened, as Talmadge was thoroughly defeated in the primary on August 9th.

Therefore, we are able now to say that there has been a rift in the clouds over the South, and a little sunshine has come through. What is more important is that what happened to Talmadge in Georgia appears to be a trend. Just a few weeks ago, Eugene Blease, close relative of the late unspeakable Cole Blease, was running for the United States Senate in South Carolina on a "white supremacy" issue. He was defeated by a bare 4,500 votes by the encumbent, Senator Maybank, of Charleston, who did not choose to run on the race issue.

At last, it seems that the race question, or the question of "white supremacy," is passing out as an issue on which most any smart politician in the South can get himself elected to office. Many reasons for this are being advanced by southern white people who have been humiliated by some of their "statesmen." The Louisville Courier-Journal tells why it thinks Talmadge was beaten:

SEP 19 1942

> What beat Gene Talmadge was the awakening of the decent instincts of a people. The voter in Georgia is no longer amused by a travesty of democracy. The common man has begun to realize that his son is doing a foolish and futile thing to die in battle if democracy is to be treated as a bad vaudeville joke at home.
>
> What beat Talmadge was the long-delayed impact of a world revolution on the minds and hearts of simple folk. The people of Georgia have at last found their own battleground, which is the ballot box, and they have begun to recognize their worst enemy, which is the cheap, selfish, loud-mouthed political demagogue.
>
> If people throughout the democracies will acknowledge the significance of Georgia's lesson, this war is won. We can survive a hundred military defeats but we cannot survive the Gene Talmadges of America.

Rome, Ga. News-Tribune
August 11, 1942

The late Grover Hall, of The Montgomery Advertiser, knew a man when he saw one. His editoral, "The War Eagle Flies Again," will not soon be forgotten in Alabama politics. It was about a young man who had gone to France to serve his country in the first World War when aviation was very young. That young man lost a leg in his fight to preserve the freedom of the world against the German legions of 1918. That young man was Frank Dixon.

Yesterday we wrote Frank Dixon and congratulated him upon his straight-thinking and his courage under fire, and added, "If you were Governor of New York you would be elected President of the United States."

Our congratulatory letter to Dixion resulted for his courage and fine common sense in telling of a Federal bureau regarding the future of segregation laws in this state. Dixon wrote the Defense Supplies Corporation that so long as a non-discrimination clause remained in the contract, the state of Alabama would not sign the contract.

"Should we sign the contract with this clause included," he wrote, "we can expect the fair employment practice committee immediately to descend upon the state with the demand that negroes be put into positions of responsibility."

In the United States there are 13,000,000 negroes. Of this total there are 10,000,000 in the South. Therefore, the problem, if it is a problem, is essentially Southern. If it is a problem it is made so by people who know little or nothing about the South and care little or nothing about the future of the negro race. They are in it for what they can get out of it, not because they have any particular sympathies for the negro and his problem of improving his own standards of living. We rather suspect that this controversy, coming at this particular time, is Axis inspired. Certainly there is every earmark of Axis influence in trying to disturb the pleasant relationship existing in the South between the the white man and the negro.

Frank Dixon has spoken with courage, there should be no misunderstanding, no misinterpretation. He has spoken like an American and an Alabamian. This newspaper is proud of him for it.

'RACIAL PREJUDICES MUST GO,' PEARL BUCK WARNS IN SPEECH

Pittsburg Courier ~~FEB 28 1942~~ Pittsburg, Penn

NEW YORK, Feb. 26—Declaring that "if we persist in our racial prejudices, we are fighting on the wrong side of this war," Pearl Buck, Nobel prize winner in literature, told the Book and Author club here last week that: "We belong with Hitler!"

The luncheon was sponsored by the New York Herald Tribune and the American Booksellers Association.

AMERICA MUST END PREJUDICES

"Let Americans be sure of this. Unless we can declare ourselves whole for democracy now, and do away with prejudices against colored peoples, we shall lose our chance to make the world what we want it to be. We shall lose even our place in the world, whatever our military victories are. For most of the people in the world today are colored," Miss Buck flatly warned the gathering of celebrated literati.

The best known writer on the Far East told her audience that there was nothing reassuring in the closing words of Winston Churchill's first speech in Washington: "The British peoples will for their own sofety, aid the good of all, walk together side by side in majesty, justice and peace."

"An England or a United States, walking together side by side in majesty, can only mean to the colored peoples a formidable white imperialism, more dangerous to them than anything even a victorious Japan can threaten," she said.

JAP PROPAGANDA IS EFFECTIVE

"Japan is resorting to propaganda to displace our political and cultural influence in Asia," she warned.

"What the peoples of Asia want out of this war is freedom.

"Knowing this, Japan is trying to prove to them that freedom is the one thing they will not have if America wins. She is using that most vulnerable point in our American democracy, our racial prejudice, as her weapon. Tokio radio broadcasts daily send their programs over Asia in their campaign to drive out the white man.

"'The colored peoples,'" this propaganda says over and over again in a thousand forms, "'have no hope of justice and equality from the white peoples because of their unalterable racial prejudice against us,'" Miss Buck explained.

"It will be better for us if we acknowledge the danger of this Japanese propaganda. The truth is that the white man in the Far East has too often behaved without wisdom or justice to his fellow man.

CITES CRUELTIES

"It is worse than folly—it is danerous today not to recognize the truth, for in it lies the tinder for tomorrow. Who of us can doubt it who has seen a white policeman beat a Chinese coolie in Shanghai, an English captain lash out with his whip at an Indian vendor? Who of us, having seen such Oriental sights or heard the common contemptuous talk of the white man in any colored country, can forget the fearful, bitter hatred in the colored face and the blaze in the dark eyes?"

Miss Buck insisted that "the most dangerous human stupidity has been that of the white race in the baseless prejudice through which even the meanest white creature has felt he could despise a king, if his skin was dark."

"Th effect therefore of this Japanese propaganda cannot be lightly dismissed," she warned.

"It lies uneasily in the minds and memories of many who are still loyally allied with Britain and the United States; in the minds and memories of the colored peoples of Asia.

ALLIED AIMS NOT CLEAR

"Yes . . . and it lies uneasy too, in the minds and memories of many colored citizens of the United States, who cannot deny the charge and must remain loyal in spite of it.

"For such minds realize that though Nazism may give them nothing but death, yet the United States and Britain have given them too little for life in the past and not even promises for the future. Not only are peace aims still unknown . . . war aims are not clear.

The prize winning author of 'The Good Earth' declared that "we must realize—we citizens of the United States—and this whether Britain realizes it or not, that a world based on former principles of empire and imperial behavior is now impossible.

"We must clear our determination for real freedom for all peoples, with mutual responsibility demanded of all to fulfill its conditions. Nor can we postpone such decision for freedom, saying: "Let's win this war first."

AXIS ENJOY LYNCH NEWS

"We cannot win this war without convincing our colored allies—who are most of our allies—that we are not fighting for ourselves as continuing superiors over colored peoples. The patience of colored peoples is at an end. Everywhere among them there is the same resolve for freedom and equality that white Americans and British have, but it is a grimmer resolve, for it includes the determination to be rid of white rule and exploitation; and white race prejudice and nothing will weaken this will."

Miss Buck pointed out that every lynching, every race riot, gives joy to Japan.

ARMED SERVICES DISCRIMINATES

"The discriminations of the American Army, Navy and Air forces against colored soldiers and sailors, the exclusion of colored labor in our defense industries and trade unions; all our social discriminations, are of the greatest aid today to our enemy in Asia—Japan.

"'Look at the Americans," Japan is saying to millions of listening ears. "'Will white Americans give you equality?'"

Regarding Tolerance

To The Anniston Star:

I have read with interest and some apprehension the editorials on "Tolerance" in this paper. So I was not at all surprised to find the letter from the Negro Grimmett in reference to "Race Prejudice Our Foe," and as the newly awakened aspirations of the Negro race was brought out in his letter. I think the editor should have made himself a little more specific as the word "tolerance" covers a lot of territory.

I have waited patiently for some true Southern Democrat to voice the sentiment of the South, now, as always, toward "social equality." I wonder if the Editor has forgotten what effect such propaganda had on the Negro in the past. One has only to brush up a little on history to know the danger of such influence. You will find that he, the Negro, has never accomplished anything constructive except under the direction of the white man. As far as what the Negro race has done in this country, I also refer you to history, which shows that he is not even capable of helping to govern as Grimmett suggests.

He speaks of having been relegated to a back seat. Now the fact is, he has never had a front seat in the South. Although the South is probably not as solid as it once was, there is one thing on which I think we are still united, white supremacy. We Southern people don't call this distinction "race prejudice." We simply want a complete separation.

As no one seems to thoroughly understand the editorial, "Race Prejudice Our Foe," for the benefit of all, will the Editor please make himself clear on this subject.

Mrs. H. H. Fitzgerald
230 G Street.

Editorial Note: The editorial to which Mrs. Fitzgerald refers had to do with a speech made by Pearl Buck, author of "The Good Earth." She called attention to the fact that we now have as our allies peoples who belong to other than the white race and that prejudice against people on account of their color is dangerous in these times, just as is prejudice against a person because of his religion. The Star believes in giving the Negro fair play and in the editorial to which Mrs. Fitzgerald refers we pleaded for fair treatment for Negro soldiers now stationed at Fort McClellan. A race riot here would do irreparable damage to the city. As for the Grimmett letter, our position was made clear, we hope, in an editorial last Sunday.

Lloyd Not The First

To The Anniston Star:

For many years before Mr. Lloyd took over my father's bakery business in 1919, Nonnenmacher's Bakery, as well as other bakeries in the South, were wrapping bread in waxed wrappers. This, in fact, was being done as far back as 1911 and '12. When we entered the war in 1917, new wrappers bearing the name "Victory Bread" were put into use. I am enclosing one each of these old wrappers used before and during World War I. An electric wrapping machine was used to do the wrapping, and two large (then modern) motor driven machines were used to mix and knead the dough.

Stores in small towns and rural communities were regularly supplied with Nonnenmacher's Bread throughout this and neighboring counties. True, we had no fleet of motor trucks, as those were "horse and buggy and bad roads" days, but the American Express wagon called every day for our large crates of bread, which were shipped by rail. Way back, all through the "gay '90's," rural communities near a railroad in this section of the state were receiving fresh baker's bread regularly.

Pearl Buck: 20TH Century ABOLITIONIST

AT THE REQUEST OF THE AMSTERDAM Star-News, Mrs. Pearl Buck, eminent author, will address "The Colored Citizens of America." This statement on both the colored people's rights and their duties will appear in full in the next issue of The Star-News. Order your copy of The Star-News in advance.

Pearl Buck's Human Appeal a State Paper

FEB 28 1942

Editor, Star News:

Dear Sir—The New York Herald Tribune has, I believe, done a service to America by publishing the complete text of Pearl Buck's Book and Author luncheon speech. I was glad to see that the Star-News brought the special features of the speech to the attention of its readers.

FEB 28 194

There are those of our group who even today believe that Lincoln should have issued the Proclamation Emancipation merely to free the slaves. But when he freed the slaves to save the union he associated freedom with union and struck, as a statesman, against an evil that was threatening the security of the Union. Pearl Buck has now associated freedom of all Americans with democracy. She called attention to what is generally acknowledged now—that if democracy is saved, America must save it. But she went further in showing clearly and simply by facts not to be controverted, that racial prejudices, especially as they touch the colored American, now stand starkly in the ranks of our foes. She has reminded America that though we may at last win this war, unless we now free ourselves from the prejudice that rules our defense policy, we shall lose our chance to establish for the world "a golden age of democracy." She thus furnishes the nation with a compelling motive for eradicating race prejudice.

Miss Buck's speech is impersonal, thoughtful, non-political; it urges the adoption of a new national policy in a time of national emergency. It thus acquires the rare quality of statesmanship and deserves to be ranked with our state papers.

Because I believe this speech will help the people of the United States to choose wisely in this issue between race prejudice and democracy, I am suggesting that it would be well to have it printed in an inexpensive but reasonably permanent form that would make it accessible to the great mass of Americans all over this country. There are many of us, white and black, who, I believe, would be willing to contribute to the cost of its reprinting if Miss Buck should be willing to have this done. It would be a project worthy of the New York Star-News.

A SOUTHERNER ON THE RACE QUESTION

Feb. 28, 1942

WE HAVE BEEN READING the late Thomas Wolfe's last novel, "You Can't Go Home," and have been much impressed by Mr. Wolfe's opinions on the question of race. Mr. Wolfe was a native of North Carolina and a graduate of the University of North Carolina, and though only thirty-eight at the time of his death, he was one of the most articulate and brilliant writers produced in this country in the past twenty years. Because of his Southern birth and background, his attitude on nationalism and race, especially as these subjects affect the Negro, are of particular interest at this time.

Mr. Wolfe felt that the interests of mankind could more naturally fall into occupational lines than the artificial racial and national barriers as they now exist. As an illustaration of his point he used men who spend their lives as hotel or restaurant waiters. He showed that waiters as a class are the same the world over, regardless of what race or nationality with which they may be identified. Oftimes, said the author, he would pick out waiters in various countries of Europe and then check his observation, and in almost every instance he was right.

Following this line of reasoning, Mr. Wolfe in the course of his novel dwelt on the theme that individual talents and occupational achievements were the natural groups in which people should be classed. Feb. 28, 1942

Remembering the old song common in most sections of the South that "All Coons Look Alike To Me," the opinions of the novelist are a big advance in Southern opinion. The chief trouble with the world today is due to the prevalence of the idea that one nation is superior to another or that the darker races are inferior to the Nordics.

There are superior and inferior people in all races and nationalities and when we realize this there will not only be less friction between the races of this country but also between the nations of the world.

Race Not Dixie Problem Lincoln Prexy Declares

FEB 28 1942

ELIZABETH, N. J.—"We have in this country a Negro population greater than that of Norway, Sweden and Denmark combined, and 50 per cent greater than Belgium or Holland," said Dr. Walter Livingston Wright, President of Lincoln University, in a Washington's birthday address at the First Presbyterian church here.

FEB 28 1942

"We are concerned with the minorities abroad," Dr. Wright continued. "We should not neglect the vital influence of that in our midst. The Negro is no longer a Southern problem. One-fifth of the population is now in the North, with a steady spread toward uniformity over the northern areas east of the Mississippi.

FEB 28 1942

"In the successful completion of the present war and the effort to achieve lasting peace through righteousness we see the duty of the hour. For the completion of the struggle we need skill in the art of war, military leadership, and heroism; inventive ability, mechanical skill, and industry in production; and finally vision, discrement, and a conviction of something worth fighting and sacrificing for that will give firmness and determination in the face of temporary disaster.

FEB 28 1942

"For the construction of a lasting peace we need a conception of something worthwhile in life to strive for, a belief in the dignity and worth of man, a belief that it is not hopeless for him to aspire and labor for ideals he cherishes; a faith and hope to reach out for something beyond himself, an ideal he believes he can approximate if never reach. The present threat is fundamentally the destruction of righteousness, justice, and kindness as human ideals.

"In this country we have wisely kept general education free from religious control. The danger is lest we raise up a generation that never faces seriously the greatest of all facts, the relation of man to the God who made him and who has revealed truths for man's guidance."

Governor Warns Negroes On Attitude Toward War

RALEIGH, Aug. 4.—(AP)—Negroes are ill-advised if they take the position they are for victory in this war if something is to be done for them, Governor Broughton said last night in addressing the opening session of the diamond jubilee meeting of the State Negro Baptist convention.

More than 1,500 persons attended the opening meeting in Memorial auditorium.

Negroes should put their full energy into the war effort, for failure means "slavery of the worst sort for white and negro alike," the governor said. "The man or woman who uses this emergency as a means for stirring up strife between the white and negro races is not a friend to either race and is not a good American."

A Rather Personal Message Of Condolence to Talmadge On His Defeat in Primaries

N.Y., N.Y.

By SENDER GARLIN

SEP 15 1942

(A Personal Letter to Gov. Talmadge)

Dear Gene: Forgive my familiarity, but I recall you shook my hand warmly when, after your speech before the Advertising Club here some years ago, I said it was "amazing" and you took it as a compliment. And later you agreed to an interview in your suite at the Commodore. You were real friendly, snapping your red galluses and telling how well you run the State of Georgia and how little you knew about the Herndon case although the papers of the South were full of it, and all the time a number of your lieutenants were gazing at you admiringly. . . .

SEP 15 1942

56K

I don't know if they're the same fellows who were photographed with you down in Atlanta the other morning when the primary returns were coming in. But they sure did look sad in that picture, I might even say miserable. And, naturally, so did you.

It's tough, Gene. But it seems the election system which keeps the common people of Georgia from political expression—unit voting and all—cuts both ways. This time you got licked with it. And because of the poll tax only about 20 per cent of the adult population participated in the balloting. Can you imagine what a trouncing you would have gotten had the Constitution of the U. S. been in force in Georgia and all the citizens of the state—including the Negro people—been able to vote!

* * *

I don't like to make you feel bad, Gene. But remember how you proclaimed a couple of weeks ago that "We are going to flash to the world the news on Sept. 10 that Georgia recognizes white supremacy and is a white man's state"? Governor, how does it feel to have to eat your words?

SEP 15 1942

This "white supremacy" stuff didn't seem to go over big. Your opponent, Ellis Arnall, said it was a "fake issue." I guess there's some truth in that. Of course the jimcrow system in the South is no fake issue, and nobody need have any illusions that Georgia's going to be a paradise either for the Negro people or the poor whites even after you move out of the state house. All the same it's nice to be rid of you and, as my friend Rob Hall wrote from Birmingham the day of your Waterloo, "the political air of the South is cleaner and more wholesome" now that you're due to go. The fact is, all the decent people—all who want to win the war against Hitler—joined together to lick you.

Your Excellency, if the voters of Georgia (few as they are) wanted people who brag about "whuppins" of Negroes to be governor they would have kept you. Fact is, however, they've decided to turn you out.

You say you have a $12,000,000 "reserve fund." Your announcement of old-age pensions and raises for the state's schoolteachers is no sudden conversion to public-spirited principles. It is a device to regain your political influence. Your eleventh-hour interest in teachers won't fool many because you've done everything in your power to wreck the state's educational system. Georgia's colleges lost their accredited standing after your monkeyshines with the Board of Regents last winter, when you threw out noted educators and replaced them with your own henchmen. And you, the governor, were burned in effigy by university students as a protest. That's something, isn't it? All this, naturally, helped bring about your defeat.

We have a slogan up here "As goes Maine so goes the Union." Maybe the way Georgia went might be a tipoff to your cronies in Alabama. Of course, Frank Dixon has to move out of the statehouse in Montgomery anyway at the end of his present term because, as you know, an Alabama governor can't succeed himself—even with the aid of the poll tax. But I know he's hankering to be U. S. Senator in place of Lister Hill and thinks this "white supremacy" snakeoil might do the trick. But after the miserable showing you made in Georgia perhaps he'll have to get himself up some brand new, up-to-date slogans like "Stop Sherman's March to the Sea" or "Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation is Unconstitutional" or "John Brown Got Off Too Easy." May be you can give him a few ideas.

As you are no doubt aware, Gov. Dixon is a kin of your old friend Thomas Dixon, the fellow who bellowed about "protectin' white womanhood" at the Grass Roots Convention you called in Macon in '36 to light a fire under the New Deal. Tom Dixon is a writing man, the author of "The Clansman." You must have read the book along with Hitler's "Mein Kampf" for which you once expressed admiration. In any case you probably saw Dixon's vile thing in the movies when it ran as "Birth of a Nation." The plot, you will recall, was not unlike the platform of "white supremacy" that licked you.

What are your plans, Gene? It's a pretty good bet you're washed up, politically. Going back to farming in your Atlanta law office? Maybe you won't get any clients now that your grip on the state's been broken.

You're still in the prime of life, Gene, only 59, and if you've a mind to go back to the soil (I understand you and the missus own a big plantation the missus owned before you were married) don't hesitate to drop me a line and I'll get my congressman to send you along some garden seed for planting.

Let Us Hope It Is True

Let us hope that the Courier-Journal has made a correct interpretation of the Talmadge defeat. It says that it wasn't the personal or political strength of Arnall that beat Talmadge; it wasn't the governor's tampering with the University system; it wasn't his "persecution of the helpless Negro population", or his release of 4,500 felons, or his padding of the state's payrolls with his friends and kinsmen. Arnall had accused Talmadge of having read Hitler's Mein Kampf seven times, but it was not this that beat him, said the Louisville paper. "The common man has begun to realize that his son is doing a foolish and futile thing to die in battle if democracy is to be treated as a bad vaudeville joke at home."

Let us hope that this new awakening—if that is what it is—on the part of the voters of Georgia, recognizes that the "common man" includes the Negro. That Negroes also realize that it is a futile thing for their sons to die on battlefields—and by imposed violence in United States training camps—if democracy is a joke at home.

Let us assume that the Courier-Journal is correct about the result in Georgia being "the long-delayed impact of a world revolution on the hearts and minds of simple folk," and that they have found their battle-front, which is the ballot box. If that is true the simple folk have won a significant victory, but one which cannot be sustained until all of them, of all races and creeds and colors have access to the ballot box. They have not won a complete victory.

Enemies Of The South

There is no doubt that the really responsible white people of the South are beginning to realize that their worst enemies are the "cheap, selfish, loud-mouthed political demagogues." What happened to Eugene Blease in South Carolina, and to Eugene Talmadge in Georgia is the best indication that this conviction is sound. When the South can come to the place when it can vote into oblivion scheming men who would rise to public office by appealing to the basest prejudices of mankind, then the South will be achieving liberation from political, economic and spiritual enslavement.

Nothing has happened within recent years that has been more reassuring to southern Negroes than the defeats at the polls of Talmadge and Blease. These two incidents by themselves do not mean that our problem is solved. They do mean, however, that there is an awakening; that southern voters are at least beginning to discount the fake issue of "white supremacy," and that the time has arrived when liberal-minded southerners can attack their demagouges without being destroyed themselves. Having achieved that much in two of the Southern States where the issue was most dangerous, it is now possible for the liberal-minded whites and the Negro leadership of the South to discuss across the table steps for remedying the social and political injustices which stand in the way of any expression of true democracy; which are now hindering the war effort, and which, if continued, may cause the United States to lose the victory and the peace.

A Rather Personal Message Of Condolence to Talmadge On His Defeat in Primaries

By SENDER GARLIN

SEP 15 1942

(A Personal Letter to Gov. Talmadge)

Dear Gene: Forgive my familiarity, but I recall you shook my hand warmly when, after your speech before the Advertising Club here some years ago, I said it was "amazing" and you took it as a compliment. And later you agreed to an interview in your suite at the Commodore. You were real friendly, snapping your red galluses and telling how well you run the State of Georgia and how little you knew about the Herndon case although the papers of the South were full of it, and all the time a number of your lieutenants were gazing at you admiringly. . . .

SEP 15 1942

I don't know if they're the same fellows who were photographed with you down in Atlanta the other morning when the primary returns were coming in. But they sure did look sad in that picture, I might even say miserable. And, naturally, so did you.

It's tough, Gene. But it seems the election system which keeps the common people of Georgia from political expression—unit voting and all—cuts both ways. This time you got licked with it. And because of the poll tax only about 20 per cent of the adult population participated in the balloting. Can you imagine what a trouncing you would have gotten had the Constitution of the U. S. been in force in Georgia and all the citizens of the state—including the Negro people—been able to vote!

* * *

I don't like to make you feel bad, Gene. But remember how you proclaimed a couple of weeks ago that "We are going to flash to the world the news on Sept. 10 that Georgia recognizes white supremacy and is a white man's state"? Governor, how does it feel to have to eat your words?

SEP 15 1942

This "white supremacy" stuff didn't seem to go over big. Your opponent, Ellis Arnall, said it was a "fake issue." I guess there's some truth in that. Of course the jimcrow system in the South is no fake issue, and nobody need have any illusions that Georgia's going to be a paradise either for the Negro people or the poor whites even after you move out of the state house. All the same it's nice to be rid of you and, as my friend Rob Hall wrote from Birmingham the day of your Waterloo, "the political air of the South is cleaner and more wholesome" now that you're due to go. The fact is, all the decent people—all who want to win the war against Hitler—joined together to lick you.

ANTI-SEMITISM AMONG NEGROES

DR. LAWRENCE D. REDDICK, curator of the Schomburg Collection of Negro Literature of the New York Public Library and lecturer on Negro History and Culture at the College of the City of New York, has written an article for the Negro Quarterly on Anti-Semitism Among Negroes.

Dr. Reddick frankly admits that there is anti-Negroism among Jews and Anti-Semitism among Negroes and wisely adds that nothing at all can be done to stamp out these growths, if we ostrich-like bury our heads in the sands of silence.

The feeling of the Negro against the Jew is principally urban phenomena or recent origin and largely confined to the North. This may be due to the fact that most Jews are in the large urban centers of the East and Midwest.

The more overt and intense forms of Anti-Jewish sentiment among Negroes are to be found between landlords and tenants and employers of domestic labor. In Harlem, for instance, most of the owners of apartment buildings where Negroes reside are of the Jewish race and the feeling is general that these landlords extract the last dollar of profit from their property and give a minimum return in upkeep. The merchant-consumer situation is similar to that of the landlord and tenant and the so-called "Bronx slave markets" wherein Negro domestics were exploited by white housewives, were said to be largely confined to Jewish areas.

Dr. Reddick poses the question, what can be done to root out the discords between Jew and Negro. He suggests:

1. That both anti-Semitism and anti-Negroism should not be ignored but should be brought out in the light of publicity and discussed together.

2. That Negro leaders assume the responsibility of pointing out to their people that the money-grabbing landlord or merchant, who happens to be a Jew, is not representative of the Jewish people. Rather, this exploiter is a representative of a system which has nothing to do with nationality, religion or skin color. At the same time, Jewish leaders should take the responsibility of bringing full pressure on members of their race who exploit the ignorant and weak for gain, and to have their race realize that Negroes and Jews have a common foe to fight in this country.

Concluding his article, Dr. Reddick suggests an alliance between these two minority groups and suggests:

All organizations of Jewish rights ought to incorporate the valid objectives of the Negro people in their programs. Likewise, all equivalent Negro organizations should incorporate all valid objectives of the Jewish people in their programs. Obviously, this will give a broader base and more power to every struggle and will provide a welcome relief from the particularism of each group yelling for its own rights—and with little regard for the threatened rights of others.

"It is up to the Negro and Jew to take the lead and point the way. In doing this, they not only perform a service for mankind but incidentally they solve their own problems of anti-Semitism among Negroes and anti-Negroism among Jews in the only way that they can be solved permamently: that is, by banishing these and all other racisms from the earth," Dr. Reddick concludes.

Theoretically, the author is right in his conclusions but he makes the mistake of assuming that all Jews are of the working class and that their problems are much the same as those of Negroes. We don't think the Jewish leaders fighting for world Zionism or a homeland in Palestine would see the desirability of merging their organizations with the Garvey movement, for instance. Nor would the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Urban League remain the same were they to merge their programs with the Jewish Trade Council.

Greater cooperation between these two minority groups is indicated, but it will take a long time before the individuality of various racial groups will be submerged for the good of all. Human nature being what it is, we think it only natural for each group to see his own problems as paramount.

Dr. Reddick's article is thought-provoking and should have a wide circulation not only among Negro leaders but also among the leaders of the Jewish race.

THE SOUTH AND THE NEGRO

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have lived in the South about fourteen years, and have spent the time convalescing and studying the so-called race problem at its source. By laying aside my prejudices and looking facts full in the face, I find that the South offers the Negro world of opportunities to make his citizenship better appreciated and turn his short comings into assets.

I find that the South has possibilities of becoming the leading section of this country, and that the white man of the South is ambitious, progressive, intelligent, well organized with a constructive program elastic enough to reach all to make it so. Since the setup "as I see it" is economic and industrial (not social), the Negro has the chance of his life to contribute to the development of this particular part of the country where he is better understood, and working conditions are in his favor.

I find, that such an undertaking means leaders with vision and not agitators with rackets. No race, people, or nation can ever rise above their leaders. When I say leaders, I mean men strong in the line of diplomacy, courage, foresight and sagacity. It is that kind of leadership with a constructive program based on dividend producing enterprises to build up race standards, and demand the attention and support of such institutions as the chamber of commerce, banks, all business and civic organizations in the towns and cities in which they live, that is going to bring the Negro into the limelight as an asset to the nation instead of a liability.

I find that the Negro as a whole lacks inspiration, and his ambition is limited. He has yet to learn the difference between corporations and cooperation. When you ask him to invest in a dividend producing enterprise he has to be schooled, but when you ask him to give to a worthy cause he understands only too well. The lesson of giving, donating and contributing to a good cause, based on sympathy and artificial pride "so well learned by the masses" is the go ahead signal for exploiting the race. I find colored people in and around Montgomery with morale so depressing until progressive undertaking among them cannot succeed without the white man's O.K. I suppose it is better that way because, in the economic world you cannot help yourself without helping the other fellow anyway.

It is too bad that outside influences "with inflammable literature" are making more enemies for the Negro in the South in one year, than the next two generations will ever be able to overcome, while old opportunity to improve his position in life is kicking the door down on him. For example, let us take the colored people in the City of Montgomery: If each one would invest five cents a week (not give), in a year's time the thirty thousand of them could buy a city block, put up a building, equip it with machinery and fixtures, stock it with materials and put two thousand colored boys and girls to work making hats for 15 million colored people throughout the country, or any one else who happen to like their brand.

I have talked to some colored people in Montgomery along industrial lines, but they do not seem to be interested in any constructive program where they will have to get an O.K. from the great State of Alabama to do business and give the people investment protection.

The most powerful human force on earth is public opinion; and public opinion represents intelligence, and intelligence rules the world. Public opinion cannot be legislated out of existence, it must be worked out on a system of merit. I believe that when the Negro produces a leader with a constructive program that will give his people employment, mold public sentiment in their favor, and make their citizenship better appreciated on a system of merit, he is going to find the Southern white man his best friend after all.

Please! Not That Way!

Horace C. Wilkinson, noted Birmingham lawyer, recently delivered a speech on "Racial Relations" before the Bessemer Kiwanis Club. His subject was one that is near and dear to every Alabamian, to every Southerner, to every loyal American— regardless of his place of residence— who is more interested in winning the war than in putting over a social revolution.

Mr. Wilkinson pictured what is taking place in the South as an organized effort gets under way to stroy Jim Crow laws and abolish segregation of races. He also pictured the possible consequences of such a movement if it is permitted to carry too far.

Properly interpreting the creation of President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee to be part and parcel of a clever scheme to secure administration endorsement of the social aspirations of the Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race, Mr. Wilkinson sounded a grim warning.

He pointed out that war contracts, written especially for the South, now carry a clause forbidding discrimination against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin. Thus it is the holders of war contracts face loss of those contracts unless they hire Negroes in all departments, from common labor through to policy-making executives, in proportion to the Negro population in that particular community. Carried to its logical conclusion—and that is the goal of its sponsors— this policy will result in Negro men and women working alongside white men and women in many offices and in some cases will force whites into subordinate positions to Negroes.

In Alabama, he said, there have recently been clashes between the races, precipitated by ill-informed champions of racial equality who seem determined to fly in the face of Southern traditions which cannot be broken down.

To be truthful about the speech, Mr. Wilkinson acurately recorded what has taken place in Alabama as the drive to destroy white supremacy in the South has gained momentum with the aid of a Democratic administration. These things have amused and saddened intelligent Southern Negroes as well as whites who have advocated a tolerant and temperant approach to the vexing problem of racial relations.

Mr. Wilkinson closed his speech with this statement: "The white men of the South who oppose dragging the white man down to the level of a Negro must organize. If there is room in this county for a National Association for the Advancement of the Colored Race, there is need for a League to Maintain White Supremacy. It is ridiculous for a 10 percent Negro population to undertake to shape the policy of the Southern States; it is tragic for the white people in this country to sit idly by and allow these Negroes to misguidedly place their selfish interests ahead of an all-out war effort."

* * *

While Mr. Wilkinson is genuinely concerned by this calculated movement to reconstruct the South again and some kind of organization may be required to cope with the revolutionists, we cannot bring ourselves to believe that his is the proper leadership.

Mr. Wilkinson, as we recall it, first came into State-wide prominence as Jefferson County's counterpart of Atlanta's Hiram Evans, he of Ku Klux Klan fame. Teamed with the now forgiven and highly elevated Hugo Black, Mr. Wilkinson was a ring-leader of the followers of the sheet and the cat-o-nine-tales. He typified the bigotry and intolerance of the sneaks who hid under their bed sheets and crept through the darkness of night to vent their spleen on those of whom the Klan did not approve.

When Ku Kluxism was chased from Alabama by an aroused citizenry grown ashamed of the depredations which had been committed under its once proud name, Mr. Wilkinson dropped from the limelight. (Had not Mr. Roosevelt sensed what was happening and nominated Hugo Black for the United States Supreme Court, that great Kluxer and statesmen would also have felt the political axe and faded into the oblivion to which he belongs.)

* * *

No, the settlement of racial differences which now torment and threaten Alabama and the South must come from another leadership. Those leaders must have level heads and must not confuse the Negro's legitimate ambitions for justice with the ill-considered drive for social equality which has been dignified and encouraged by Mrs. Roosevelt. The call is for leaders who have no ambitions to create another Invisible Empire but are fired with a love of the South and who have a full appreciation of the problems of its peoples.

Alabama cannot afford to degrade and debase itself with the creation of an organization which will refuse a sympathetic hearing of the fair and just case of the Negro. Neither can it afford to ignore the presence of danger or give ground to the illegitimate aspirations of trouble makers who ignorantly strive for a social equality which cannot be attained.

Such great friends of the Negro as Booker T. Washington knew and understood the problems of the South and how essential it was for racial harmony that segregation be practiced. These men had justifiable pride in their race and did not approve as has Mrs. Roosevelt—and more recently, Wendell Willkie— measures which would bring about the development of a mongrel race. Even though the system at times worked hardships and appeared unjust they knew from years of experience that it must be rigidly adhered to for the protection of the members of both races.

The good work that these men performed will be nullified by the leadership of hot-heads. Already alarmed, it would be easy for them to stir up prejudices and start a conflagration which well might consume all those who come in contact with it.

A storm not of the South's making is on its way. We must face it with tolerance and determination and intelligence. Only in that way can injustices and sorrow be avoided.

White Supremacy League Advocated

BESSEMER, Ala. (AP) — Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney long active in Alabama politics, called for organization of a league to maintain white supremacy today in an address before a civic club here.

Wilkinson spoke on "racial relations," and outlined a series of incidents between whites and Negroes in the State in recent months.

"A Herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation," he declared, "and with it many of the most cherished institutions in the South.

"This and other things will explain why the situation is growing increasingly tense each day."

As support of this contention Wilkinson cited fair labor practice clauses in war contracts which stipulate no worker shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"The white men of the South who oppose dragging the white man down to the level of the Negro must organize," he said.

"If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need of a league to maintain white supremacy.

"It is ridiculous for a 10 per cent Negro population to undertake to shape the policy of the Southern States; it is tragic for the white people in this country to sit idly by and allow these Negroes to misguidedly place their selfish interests ahead of an all out war effort."

Wilkinson said the league should be organized by "wise leadership around the conference table and followed by constitutional action."

The attorney said he was opposed to any extra-legal methods in solving racial problems.

Dixon of Alabama Charges Federal Agencies Would Break Down Principle of Segregation

Ethridge Called Only Realist On Committee

"The Courier Journal"

Montgomery, Ala., July 23 (AP)—Frank M. Dixon of Alabama charged today that federal agencies had adopted policies "to brea down the principle of segregation under which the white and Negro races lived in peace together ni the south since reconstruction," and criticized "those who seek to foster their own pet social reforms in a time of national crisis."

JUL 24 1942

The governor's accusations, including one that the Fair Employment Practice Committee had intimated the U. S. Government would force abandonment of race segregation, were included in his refusal to sign a contract with the Defense Supplies Corporation for 1,750,000 yards of convict-made osnaburg cloth so song as it contained a non-discrimination clause to which he objected.

5-CK

Objectionable Clause Quoted.

Louisville Ky.

The clause as set out in Dixon's letter to Ralph D. Williams, New York agent for the corporation, reads:

" 'The seller, in performing the work required by this contract, shall not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin.' "

Dixon told nefsmen his primary objection to the clause was "the effect it would have under announced federal policy," and said in his letter to Williams:

"Should we sign the contract with this clause included, we can expect the Fair Employment Practice Committee immediately to descend upon the state with the demand that Negroes be put in positions of responsibility in that (corrections and institutions) department in approximately the same proportion that the Negro race bears to the white race in Alabama. I will not permit the state of Alabama to be subject to the whims of any federal agency, and I will not permit the employes of the state to be placed in a position where they must abandon the principle of segregation or lose their jobs."

JUL 24 1942

Release of Dixon's letter followed by one day a statement by Horace Wilkinson, a Birmingham attorney long at political odds with the governor, that "a Herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation."

System "Placed On Trial."

Dixon said the Fair Employment Committee has been operating to break down the principle of segregation of the races, "to force Negroes and white people to work together, intermingle with each other, and even to bring about the situation where white employes will have to work under Negroes. A careful study of the record of the Fair Employment Practice Committee hearing recently held in Birmingham disclosed that, however sincere the protestations of the committee members to the contrary, actually there was placed on trial the entire system of race segregation of the south, and that with the single exception of Mr. Mark Ethridge of Louisville, Ky., (general manager of The Courier-Journal and The Louisville) Times, there was no realization in the minds of any of the committee members of the basis necessity for any such system."

DIXON'S RACIAL VIEW IS PRAISED, ATTACKED

MONTGOMERY, July 23.—(Special)—Gov. Frank Dixon's view that a non-discrimination clause in a Federal war industry contract was an attempt to do away with racial segregation in the South will become part of The Congressional Record.

JUL 28 1942

Congressman Carter Manasco asked Governor Dixon's permission to have it inserted in The Record and the governor agreed.

5-CK

From two Southern governors—Paul B. Johnson, of Mississippi, and R. M. Jefferies of South Carolina—Gov. Dixon received messages commending his stand.

The Brooklyn branch of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People sent a telegram of disapproval. The governor was criticized in editorials in the Philadelphia Inquirer and the New York newspaper, PM.

"No Power In The World"

Says Mark F. Ethridge, member of the CFEP, prior to hearings held in Birmingham, "There is no power in the world which could now force the southern white people to the abandonment of the principles of social segregation."

We do not doubt the truth of the statement, nor do we desire to argue the point except to say that this is in line with the opinion held by many that Southerners who feel like this would rather lose the war than grant equality to Negroes. All talk of equality under the constitution or through the religion of Jesus Christ to them is the sheerest nonsense. They would say: "For me to live is 'social segregation' from Americans who happen not to be white." It is barely possible there is a power in the world of which Mr. Ethridge does not know, or has not even heard.

5-CK

But Mr. Ethridge does know the other side for he is quoted as follows: "They (Negroes) are better educated; they are better organized; thy are under friendlier auspices, and they are more aggressive and more demanding than they have ever been before; and, I think, we all ought to learn that." To which we add, if Americans will learn that it will do them a lot of good and save them a lot of trouble in the future. Negro Americans will be a lot more friendly to white Americans than some of the suspect, or have any right to expect, for we know we have a lot of fine friends among them.

JNO. G. HARRISON — The ing seems the American Negro more magnificently himself than in his singing. When he sings, he is not an underprivileged minority. When he sings, he proves that he has laid hold on that joy of living whic is the universal privilege of mankind.

This was strikingly illustrated during the 33d annual Conference of the American Association for the Advancement of Colored People, recently convened in Los Angeles. Strikingly, because even though there were heard at its meetings undertones of impatience with American democracy, every session began with choral singing of such wide appeal that it promised one thing from the first: That the Conference would end, as it did, on a high note of conviction regarding the Negro's duty to America's destiny.

The disquiet of the American Negro is not past understanding. Called upon to fight for the liberties of mankind, he is acutely conscious of how few of them he himself possesses. That awareness could become a subtle susceptibility to propaganda directed from the Axis if it were nurtured but happily for America and for the Negro, there are signs that the Negro's native ability think for himself is coming to the fore and that it is getting the leadership it deserves from those charged with the future of democracy.

5-CK

No single agency of government, it is safe to say, has ever done more in a short time for the Negro than the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has done in the 80 weeks of its existence. Dr. Malcolm S. MacLean, white man of learning and understanding who is President of the pioneer Negro school, Hampton Institute, told the Los Angeles Conference what the President's Committee, of which he is chairman, has accomplished. Briefly, his heartening report was that in spite of more gains needed, industry all over America is being roused to realize that the Negro deserves a place in defense work that traditional labor prejudice would deny him.

The situation of minorities employed in the Federal Government, he said, improves steadily. There is still much to be done, especially in local Federal agencies, where there is yet considerable discrimination against Jews, Negroes, and women.

At the conference, other addresses were delivered on the place of the Negro in the armed forces and in the eyes of the law, addresses filled with protest. Whenever anyone said, "We must fight injustice," the delegates were ready with enthusiastic applause. The promptness of those delegates to stand up to the word "injustice" would have seemed frightening to an observer but for one other thing: Their equal promptness to hear with deep thanks anyone like Dr. MacLean who could say, in effect, we are making gains for justice in America, gains in which you share.

A Negro newspaperwoman sounded the depths of patience when she asked for the setting aside as secondary all Negro aims other than helping to defeat Hitlerism. To one observer, it seemed as though the Conference were going to heed this plea only grudgingly, but that it did heed it was no better attested than by the attention it gave Wendell Willkie, chief speaker on the closing day.

"You are here today as leaders." Mr. Willkie reminded a vast audience of Negroes. "You have been sore tried with many of the practices of our democracy. And it is right and just that you should be alert to every opportunity to remove discriminations that exist against your people. But you will find your largest opportunity to help your people in leading them to give their utmost to the preservation and advancement of our democracy. Thus by serving greatly they will share greatly in building among us a society in which all men will have justice and a real freedom."

One of the choirs whose singing opened a session of the Conference caught this same message in the words of a rousing, heart-reassuring spiritual:

"I've heard of a city called Heav-
I've started to make it my home."

'Funeral' to Celebrate The Last of Talmadge

56k

By NELL DODSON

SEP 19 1942

Extra

Funeral services for the political career of Eugene Talmadge, late governor of Georgia will be held Sunday afternoon, September 20, in Harlem, New York. The Honorable(?) Eugene passed from his governmental life suddenly at the conclusion of a fatal pre-primary election fish fry given in honor of the supporters of the Talmadge theory of White Supremacy. Physicians believe that the complete absence of guests at the banquet aggravated a physical illness Talmadge had suffered since birth, a paralysis of brain which often caused him to suffer strange attacks that led him to believe he was the Leading Messiah of White Supremacy, a scientifically unsupported school of thought which the Georgia governor followed with fanatic zeal.

Further aggravation of Talmadge's illness was thought to have been caused by the primary victory of his gubernatorial rival, Ellis Arnall, who rode to a political win on the strength of votes Talmadge thought he was cinching with the fatal fish fry.

SEP 19 1942

Taking part in the Harlem rite for Trumpetin' Talmadge will be outstanding civic fraternal and social figures, including leading ministers of the Harlem and Brooklyn area and prominent funeral directors. Meanwhile messages of deep rejoicing have been flooding PV offices as people all over the country learned of the passing of Talmadge.

No man in the history of politics will be less missed. Among his major contributions have been jimcro, race bigotry, appeal to ignorance, poll tax and other evils.

Resolutions on the demise are expected from the trade union movement en masse, contact having been established with President James Kennedy of the NY Regional Council CIO and other labor leaders.

The United Sons and Daughters of Georgia, over 5,000 strong, one of the most prominent local organizations, and countless college and university clubs in the metropolitan area are preparing to be on hand with suitable expressions on the historic incident.

SEP 19 1942

So joy-stricken are some of Harlem's main funeral directors that they are donating hearses from their own establishments to augment the procession, which starts at 4 pm at 142 st and Lenox ave, proceeding downtown to 111 st, from where it will head west to Seventh ave, then north to 145. From 145 and Seventh, the funeral cortege will proceed directly to the Golden Gate where a public mass meeting commemorating the passing of the Georgia hitler's reign will be held at 5 pm.

Rev. Adam Clayton Powell jr will preach the funeral oration, with leading ministers assisting.

SEP 19 1942

Surviving, despite Gene the Jerk's most zealous efforts, are democracy and common sense—together with an encouragement and renewed hope of all true Americans for the future.

Only 18 More

The Daily Worker N.Y. N.Y.

THE tide of struggle for the rights of the Negro people of America rises ever higher in every sphere of social activity.

A couple of days ago, the great United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union, one of the most powerful in the CIO, announced that it had decided to transfer its national convention next month from Indianapolis because the hotels of that city discriminated against Negroes. That union already has a record of achievement in the struggle for jobs for the Negro people in the important war industries over which it has jurisdiction.

56K

On Wednesday, the State Federation of Labor in North Carolina elected a Negro vice-president. He is Haywood Williams, worker in a tobacco factory. A national scholastic fraternity dropped its color bar, and yesterday inducted two Negro educators in its New York University chapter.

But the political expression of this great fight for democracy for one-tenth of the nation is the struggle for abolition of the poll tax.

Sept. 20, 1942

For years the representatives of the white aristocracy which keeps the South in bondage have managed to block consideration of all moves to eliminate that semi-feudal measure, whose purpose is to maintain the aristocracy in power by denying the ballot to 10,000,000 Negroes and poor whites living in the Southern states.

But now, this rising tide of struggle to extend equal democracy to the Negro citizens of the nation is brushing aside the obstacles. Already 200 Congressmen have signed the petition to bring the Geyer anti-poll tax bill to the floor of Congress. Only 18 more are needed to complete that job. And there are, as yet, 22 New York state Congressmen who have not yet signed.

Everyone of these Congressmen from the nation's most advanced state can, and must, be gotten to sign that historic petition! Delegations, a flood of letters, telegrams must reach them in the next days. Those who are standing for reelection must be made to sign as a pledge of allegiance to our democracy.

The Daily Worker would like to know what you and your organizations are doing in the case of each and every Congressman in the state who did not sign. We would like to know his response and attitude. We will not rest until that petition is on the floor of Congress, and enacted into law.

Here are the New York state Congressmen who have not yet signed the Geyer anti-poll tax petition:

The Primaries

GEORGIA: In 1940, Gov. Eugene Talmadge said in his third-term campaign: "Any doctrine which preaches class hatred . . . is a sin of the deepest dye." But this year his platform was "white supremacy, states' rights, and old-time religion." He asked: "How would you like your children sitting beside some nigger in school?" This issue, said 35-year-old Attorney General Ellis G. Arnall, was "pure tommyrot." He campaigned against the "Talmadge dictatorship," which was responsible for the "destruction of the university system" (the state university and other schools had been dropped from the approved lists of several college associations following a Talmadge purge of teachers whom he accused of supporting "racial co-education").

SEP 21 1942

SEP 21 1942

The response of the voters was eclipse for Talmadge. But "Ole Gene" was not to retire without a final show. Arnall had announced he would enjoin the governor from using Georgia's $12,000,000 surplus reserve fund before leaving office. On the day following the primary Talmadge ordered much of the fund used to give a 25 per cent pay raise to school teachers—an Arnall campaign pledge—and directed that every eligible applicant for state aid be put at once on the old-age pension list. Any injunction by Arnall would halt two measures which had wide support, but observers agreed Talmadge had also embarrassed himself: if he had taken the steps earlier he might have fared better in the primary.

N. C. University Head Raps 'Southern Fascists'

SEP 25 1942

SEP 25 1942

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Presiding over the Thursday evening plenary session of the International Student assembly which was highlighted by a brilliant address by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, rapped southern copperheads of the Talmadge, Dixon, Wilkinson and Rankin breed as "forces working in behalf of the axis powers" and labeled their race-baiting tactics as anti-American and unrepresentative of progressive southern leadership.

56K

President Graham's declaration came in response to a question put to him from Frank B. Adair of New Orleans which ran as follows: "Why is southern leadership so reluctant to realize the fact that the spectacle of disfranchisement, jim crow, exploitation, and bigotry toward colored people seriously impedes the all-out war efforts of the United States and of colored peoples fighting for the cause for freedom the world over?" Dr. Graham's frank attack on the fascist element in the South evoked the hearty applause of the delegates and visitors assembled at the conference.

Negro Groups Here Picket 'Daily News'

Daily Worker
N.Y., N.Y.

Harlem's answer to the Daily News smear campaign is a picket line around the News offices at 220 E. 42nd St.

SEP 15 1942

Since last Friday pickets led by William Moore, chairman of the Social Equality League, have picketed the offices from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

56K

Other groups supporting the action are the Negro Labor Victory Committee, Consolidated Tenants League and Negro Women, Inc.

Mr. Moore told the Daily Worker that his group demanded the News along with all other metropolitan newspapers "cease the use of highly descriptive phrases in connection with crimes such as 'swarthy Greek' . . . 'burly Negro' and 'giant Negro.'"

Such phrases, he said, exaggerate racial differences and affects, adversely, innocent people morally and economically.

SEP 15 1942

Mr. Moore calls on all groups to support the action. He stated that the type of news reporting which smears racial groups and communities "should be fought with every legitimate means at the disposal of the people."

Forego The Revolution

Paul Mallon, the noted columnist, sings a song familiar to most Southerners when he says in a recent column that "WPB reorganization is being complicated by too many people in Washington who are trying to carry on a revolution at the same time as the war."

"These groups," Mr. Mallon continues, "will have to give up their revolutionary ambitions, or the nation may have to give up the war."

56K

He might have added to his list of those who foster domestic revolutions during a critical time of war, those who interest themselves in poll tax reforms as a political sop to Negro voters and those who are making a studied effort to break down Southern social barriers and segregation laws. The members of those two groups will be discovered close to the throne and are becoming increasingly more obnoxious to the South.

Surely there ought to be some way in which the radicals of the New Deal—not all of the New Deal is radical, however—could be held in check and prevented from carrying on their social revolutions while we are fighting a war for survival. This nation has entirely too much at stake to be led blindfolded into an era of racial and social strife which cannot possibly benefit anyone.

It is well to be tolerant of the opinions and the rights of minority groups at all times, but it is the height of absurdity to set aside the interests of the majority during a period of war in hope that in the process something beneficial will result for the minority.

However, it will take a lot more talking than Mr. Mallon has done in his column to convince the great "white mother" that she's off on the wrong foot when she comes meddling into the South with her proposals for a mongrel race.

The Fooling Process

The Northern negro leaders and their white fellow travelers of the Liberalite caste are insistent about recognition of the "race" in military affairs, especially the Southern element of the "race". What have they to say about recognition of the negroes in civilian offices? What has the president's wife to say about it?

Oh yes, to be sure, some colored people are in office in Washington, are working side by side with white people, but what is the proportion of negroes in the 2,207,000 civilian offices?

56K

Are the champions of the "race" seeing to it that the negroes have the recognition and patronage to which numbers would entitle them?

Has the president appointed half a dozen negroes, or one, to a great civilian office? No, we are not saying that he should, we think it would be foolish for him so to appoint, but why all this uproar that the negro have his place in the fighting forces when he is small potatoes and few in the hill of 2,207,000 civilian officeholders? One would suppose that not even the Southern negroes would be received by it.

Governor Darden Gives Assurances To Group

SEP 26 1942

(An Editorial)

IT WAS A FINE demonstration of interest in all citizens of the commonwealth, when Governor Colgate W. Darden came to Norfolk, at the invitation of City Manager Charles B. Borland to address a representative group of colored citizens. His special concern was that in these times of stress and crisis there be no avoidable interracial friction or any hurtful situations affecting relations between groups of citizens.

SEP 26 1942

Racial relations in Norfolk and vicinity, normally pleasant and amicable, were strained by enemy-inspired rumors of impending racial violence some weeks ago. The rumors were exposed as false by careful investigation. Ever since, however, the governor and municipal officials here have been alert to take any steps that would prevent any irritation or conflict.

Hence, the visit here of the governor and the conference that followed with the colored group. It is probable that Governor Darden set a significant precedent by his visit, for we know of no other southern governor who has done likewise. As a matter of fact, not all of them are available for pre-arranged conferences in their state capitol offices.

SEP 26 1942

56K

The governor was frank in his talk in Norfolk, and the spokesman representing the colored citizens was equally frank in his summary of the views of his group on matters affecting racial relations. Governor Darden declared that personally he was not disturbed by the specter of racial trouble, emphasizing his conviction that the Negro citizens were loyal and patriotic Americans.

He gave assurance that no group of citizens "is ever going to usurp the administration of law in this state, and if any mob ever seeks to do so I will give the properly constituted authorities an order to shoot to kill any persons who would overstep the line between law and lawlessness."

He discounted reports that there is any organized move among either race to precipitate trouble. He touched on incidents which have taken place on public conveyances, and admitted that they might lead to suffering or killings if not curbed by cooperative efforts. However, he advised that these and similar incidents be regared, not as symbols of interracial conflict, but as simple instances, without regard to color, of disorderly conduct and "breaking the peace."

SEP 26 1942

"The arm of the law will protect you when right, and protect you from illegal penalties when you are wrong," he said.

If any vital and important matters come up affecting racial relations, he continued, he would "lay down anything to go into them."

After the spokesman for the colored group had given the group's viewpoints on transportation, employment, commissions, and state institutions, the Minute Men units being formed throughout the state, schools, and school transportation the governor pledged his sympathetic and careful study of the several problems, to the end of taking such remedial steps as were within his power and which he found could advantageously be acted upon in any way. He suggested that another meeting might be arranged.

It is obvious that much good can come from such a step as has already been taken. A great challenge for a service to the state, and particularly to the colored citizens of it, lies before the governor. We are confident that he will meet the challenge in a statesmanlike manner.

"EYES ON US"

WE PRESENT OUR WORST, WE HIDE OUR VIRTUE AND PARADE OUR VICE

JUN 20 1942

BY JOSEPH D. BIBB

THE eyes of America are focused and fixed on the colored people. Never before has the specific cause of our race been so forcefully presented before the people of this country. From the White House down to the shacks and shambies the status of the colored American is being discussed. His case is now being presented in a most favorable light before the American Forum. The war status of the submerged one-tenth is being joined to that of other minority groups. One of the most popular subjects under present-day discussions is "The Plight and Rights of the Minorities in the United States." While this is going on, the colored people, as is their wont, are seemingly forgetting about their duties. Wherever there are rights there are correlative duties and we have a duty that concerns us as a minority group that seems to transcend all others and that is the duty to act and look like first class Americans.

Mr. Bibb

WORST ON DISPLAY

White people who venture into Negro communities and look around are not profoundly impressed. There is very little evidence of culture, alertness or individual, racial intelligence. The worst in our race is seemingly always on vulgar display.

IN SPITE of the seriousness of public affairs, in spite of the warfare that is being waged at home and abroad for a new kind of democracy the colored ghetteos reveal a sort of senseless gaiety, a specie of reckless abandon, a penchant for congregating on street corners, a predilection to gang-up in saloons and whiskey stores and a tendency to indulge in ribaldry, hilarity and maudlin conduct—all of which is bad, demoralizing and destructive.

GROUP PENALIZED BY ROWDYISM

It has long been known that we hide our virtues and parade our vices. It has become an axiomatic fact that the dominant whites are led to judge us by what they see when they come into our miserable confines. They are astounded when they find out that there is refinement and culture sequestered in our districts. It is a crying shame that the millions of good citizens in our race who are striving and agonizing to present a strong front to the government and to the American people should be presented in a distorted, and unfavorable light by the froth and scum of the race that is always on public parade. The best people of the Negro race are little seen or understood by the whites. They are prone and perhaps justly, to judge and appraise us by what they see and by what is obvious in our communities.

THE entire group of colored Americans are penalized by the toughs and rowdies that are always on the streets and in public places. The colored leadership has made no successful effort to correct this evil and in consequence, now that eyes of the world are fixed and focused upon us, the same old conclusion is being drawn.

WIPE OUT BAD ACTORS

Some military heads of the Marines, the Coast Guard, the Navy who by governmental edict have been compelled to include our race in their recruiting have unofficially expressed the opinion that our race is on trial in this war. We do not agree with any such conclusion, but in our thinking we might include it. Perhaps the white man does consider us as being on trial in our new posts of responsibility. It is obvious, then, that we should present our best in every phase and vicissitude of public conduct. It is high time that we take up arms against these renegades of our race who make our burdens heavy and our yokes crushing.

WE OWE a duty to ourselves and to our nation to drive these bad actors out of the limelight and into obscurity. This writer has observed that all of the other minority groups in America seem to systematically present their best to the public for observance—we present our worst, we parade our vices and advertise the internal weakness of our racial structure.

Many of our political leaders declare that they don't want to offend "the boys" and therefore do not invoke the power of the police. The "boys" are offending us and creating barriers and hinderances to our progress.

George Bernard Shaw at one time declared that in the kingdom of the blind, a one-eyed man could be boss. Those of us who see and understand the deleterious and fatal results of our public presentation and conduct could be kings in the regions of thought if they would take up arms against these troubles, and end them.

The eyes of the world are focused on the minorities and it is their sacred duty to themselves to see that their very best is put in the line of focus. We should be judged by our best and not by our worst.

Churches Must Lead Fight On Racial Bias

Federal Council Of Churches Warns 24 Denominations

JUN 27 1942

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches in a "Message to Our Fellow Christians" this week urged churches to set their own houses in order in the matter of race discrimination, and pointed out that:

"Out of the churches of America must come leaders who vigorously oppose the policies and practices of racial discrimination in the armed forces; work constructively for the relieving of the acute white-Negro tensions growing up in camp and war industrial communities; and who as employers or workers give strong support to President Roosevelt's executive order against discrimination in industry."

CHURCH RESPONSIBLE

The message, which was directed to the members of the 24 national denominations which comprise the Federal Council, declared that "racial discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups has persisted in our communities partly because it has not been eliminated from our churches.

"The achievement of the Christian ideal of democracy in our nation falls short because of the lack of clearer demonstration in our churches. Men and women of all races should be warmly welcomed among their members.

"The experience of our missionaries has shown conclusively that we need to achieve justice and fellowship among racial groups in our own land in order to show the sincerity of our belief in the gospel we carry to the peoples of other lands.

MUST EMBRACE IDEALS

"If the great struggle against the forces that oppose democracy, freedom and human brotherhood is to be successful, the church must give a fuller embodiment of those ideals in its own life.

Interracial fellowship must become a deeper reality in the church itself.

The church, as the Body of Christ, cannot accept any barrier to fellowship, either locally or nationally, based upon considerations of race.

Letters to the Editor

Negro in Politics

Editor, The Telegraph:

I notice with much regret an item on the front page of The Telegraph of June 7, under the caption: Talmadge Leaders Indicate Racial Question Is Likely To Be Chief Campaign Issue, which gives us much pain.

We sincerely hope that this will not be true.

The racial question cannot be an issue, because both sides will claim to be on the side of white supremacy while charging the other side with advocating social quality. And neither side will gain anything, and will only add to the flames of enmity that already exist between the two races. Everybody knows that during any war we have enemy propaganda organizations who work among the Negro population for the purpose of stirring up trouble. And at a time like this, when we are engaged in war, our whole population should be united closer than ever. But history will show that we always have more trouble with the Negro during a war, and this is true now. We have had several incidents in Macon lately that could easily have ended in a race riot. And there have already been riots in some other places.

About 95 per cent of our Negro population are good citizens who never cause trouble. They are working to produce goods for our war effort both on the farms and in our factories. They don't want co-education, they want their own schools and churches. And it is grossly unfair to persecute them by making a political football out of them by injecting racial issues in the campaign for governor of Georgia. Dean Cocking was kicked out of the university system and that was probably the best thing that ever happened. His plans would have caused more trouble than it would have done good.

If I were running for governor, I had rather lose the race than to resort to such low-life tactics as the racial issue. I would not persecute an ignorant and downtrodden people who are helpless to defend themselves, and who had much rather be left alone and left out of politics. Mr. Talmadge can easily be elected without the racial issue being used. He has a good record and some real issues that can be used.

We are fighting a Jew-baiter in Germany and I don't see how we can be consistent if we support a Negro-baiter in Georgia. Personally, I would not vote for my own brother for any office if he had to use the race question as an issue. We are spending thousands of dollars to entertain soldiers who come from all parts of the country to our state. We are selling them on the South trying to break down the barriers of sectional feeling that has existed since the Civil war, and it would be a shame to nullify the good will that we are trying to build by harping on some crackpot mythical issue that does not exist.

We hope that our friend will announce in the papers that he is above resorting to such tactics.

JOHN H. ANDERSON,
Macon, Ga.

* * *

EDITOR'S NOTE: This matter was discussed by Editor of Telegraph with Governor Talmadge several months ago. At that time he stated he had no antagonism in the world to the Negro; that he felt very friendly toward them and harked back to the time when he was a boy and spent many happy yours with the Negroes on his father's farms.

He said that he wanted to do everything possible for the advancement of the Negro and that he counted among his friends a great many of the prominent Negroes who are leaders in this state. I have recently heard these leaders make speeches on the same platform with Talmadge and everything appeared to be most congenial.

Talmadge states he still believes in the old Southern doctrine of aiding the Negro in every way and helping him advance in his own group, and not to have him mixed up with the white people.

There are a number of Northern states which have about 300,000 Negro voters each and the Republican and Democratic parties now contending for power are making a play against the South to capture these mass Negro votes in Northern states. They do this instead of looking after race riots in their own territory.

The chairmen of the Democratic campaign committee in Pennsylvania and Missouri have made speeches in which they stated that the Negro should hold public office without discrimination in accordance with his population ratio to that of the whites. The chairman of the Missouri Democratic committee said he believed the Negro should have equality from all standpoints, including social. So it may be seen where this agitation comes from.

All Hail To The Militant New Negro

An Address Delivered by Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, Director of Negro Affairs, National Youth Administration, President of Bethune-Cookman College, During the Mass Meeting of the March-On-Washington Movement, Tuesday, June 16, 1942 in Madison Square Gardens.

YOUR CHINS ARE OUT, your eyes are clear! I see determination written on the faces of everyone of you.

JUN 2 1 1942

Your militancy and resoluteness are among America's most valuable assets in a day like this. We must not let America ignore the powerful service that can be rendered her by these attributes you possess. America needs today, as never before, your fighting hearts, your courage, your refusal to surrender or retreat in the face of discouraging odds.

You who are here tonight are a new experience to America. Throughout the history of your life in this country—over three hundred years—you have been regarded as the patient, submissive minority—your first two and a half centuries were spent in enforced slavery. You had no rights the supreme court held—you were chattels like any horse, or plow or iron pot. You were not permitted to use a voice and so had to express your hopes and dreams for freedom, your bravery and courage, through individual rebellion, occasional mass uprisings and more often through the spirituals, the sorrow songs that gave the first mass expresssion to our deep longing to live some day as free citizens in a democracy.

SLAVERY ABOLISHED

Then came your emancipation—to save the union which could not exist half slave and half free. The Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution legally abolished slavery. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments took you out of the status of chattels and made you citizens, made the Bill or Right yours. Stll, you were patient — experiencing discriminations, injustices, segregations, and denials of equal opportunities. Here and there a clarion voice rose above the rumblings against injustice, a Frederick Douglass, a Harriet Tubman, a Walter White, a Phillip Randolph and nameless and numerous unsung heroes. But, the pall of a slave experience still hung over the masses of our people. They had the right to speak out but dared not speak out.

But, today—a new Negro has arisen in America. He is here in Madison Square Garden tonight. He is you!

You are neither young nor old—You're just new! You have awakened as the world. You are seeking full freedom, justice, respect, and opportunity.

JUN 2 1 1942

YOU ARE MILITANT

You are militant in spirit. You are unwilling to accept less than the Constitution guarantees to you as citizens of the world's greatest democracy.

You are no longer begging—you are insisting, because you realize that America, the only country you know and the country you love, cannot be preserved nine-tenths free and one-tenth oppressed. You realize your insistence is necessary to save America from itself, to make America the ideal democracy that it professes itself to the world to me. Not, only are our enemies capitalizing on America's slightest failure to do so, but our allies and friends in China and India, Africa and South America, are weighing America's sincerity on her own "home" scales.

Thank God you have these qualities of militancy and insistence. And thank God you have a leadership to cultivate and to guide these qualities that are rising from the masses.

NEVER STRIKE FLAG

You know how important it is that this surging spirit be kept within the bounds of law and order. You know how necessary it is that your militancy be non-violent. But you must at the same time keep it presistent, keep it courageous, make it intelligently articulate.

Only by so doing can we win victory for democracy at home and for democracy throughout the world. Our insistence upon the practice of democratic ideals here does not in any measure detract from our loyalty to our country, nor from our militancy in our stand for the democratization of the world. Friends of freedom are aware of our purpose—they know our insistence is an effort to rid America of shame.

JUN 2 1 1942

We have grown tired of turning the other cheek. Both our cheeks are now so blistered they are too sensitive for further blows. But regardless of our trials and tribulations at home, we must not for a moment lose sight of the fact that we must give our all-out, unreserved effort to winning this war, Unless this war is won on the battlefields abroad there can be no victory in our struggles here at home. I want all America to understand—and I beileve I voice the sentiment of everyone of you here—that we will never stirke our flag. On the contrary, we will eternally protect it with all that we have in courage, in faith, in endurance.

JUN 2 1 1942

At the same time, we want our flag to protect us—at home in our right to produce and to live, abroad in our willingness to sacrifice and to die.

Darden Doubts Negroes Try To Begin Fight

Governor Darden yesterday expressed disbelief in rumors of the formation of Negro clubs to stir racial differences in Virginia and said most Negro leaders with whom he had worked have been "loyal and patriotic citizens."

"There have been numerous reports from time to time of clubs tending to disrupt racial relations among the Negro population," the Governor said. "An investigation of the information that has reached me fails to support these rumors.

"I have read editorials in the Norfolk papers and The Richmond Times-Dispatch and a statement on the situation made by City Manager Charles B. Borland of Norfolk, and I regard these as an excellent presentation of the problam.

"In the last few months I have had occasion to discuss the situation with Negro leaders here and in other parts of the State. They have been most helpful. I can imagine nothing more unfortunate than any move designed to divide the races at this critical time.

"I have found the Negroes with whom I have worked loyal and patriotic citizens.

"Subversive activities must be watched wherever they appear. However, it is a mistake to assume that these activities have any special relationship to either color or race. Wherever they are discovered they will be dealt with promptly and severely."

American Color Prejudice Hampers Nation's "Good Neighbor" Policy

MAR 6 1941

THERE is a mad scramble in this country to create good will in South America for the United States.

The Federal Government understands that if it is to protect the Western Hemisphere it must have the goodwill of the people of the South.

The National Broadcasting System and the Columbia Broadcasting System have programs on the air to foster a good-neighbor policy. The air waves are loaded with South American music.

Night clubs in all the larger American cities are featuring dancers from Argentina and Brazil. Even Cuba has big spots on night club programs.

The motion picture industry has let down the bars and is now making pictures of South American beauties in roles other than snake hips and hot lips. These women will do more than fall in love with some blue-eyed Anglo-Saxon who had been kicked out of North America.

Money is being spent like water to tear down the ill-will which arrogant Americans have created by their greater-than-thou attitude.

Here is one thing that America should know or must learn: Large proportions of South Americans have Negro blood in their veins. The major prejudices existing in South America are almost directly traceable to prejudices against people of color in the United States.

This superiority complex will do more to destroy friendship between the countries in the Western Hemisphere than all the dancers from Argentina and Brazil can build up.

MAR 6 1941

It is not a pleasant statement, but it is a true one: dark people of the world have no love for the British and American people. This is unfortunate, because aside from color prejudices the British and Americans have exhibited unusual abilities to establish strong governments.

Perhaps one of the reasons for the diplomatic successes of Hitler is his knowledge of the illwill which exists in the breast of most non-white people for the British. He uses this to foster illwill against the British.

We sincerely hope that the United States is not too late in its efforts to establish a good neighbor policy between the South American countries and the United States.

But for it to succeed Americans must stop their foolish attitude towards colored people all over the world. There can be no love for Americans among the dark races so long as Americans persecute and mistreat colored people.

Time to Slap Down The Negro-Baiters

By Ben Davis, Jr.

IT'S ABOUT time the offensive began at home—against the poll taxers, the Negrophobes and unreconstructed rebels. These political die-hards are thorns in the side of every single win-the-war measure that the Administration tries to put through Congress; and either we smack them down politically—putting som them in jail—or they will d our war effort from within.

Gov. Dixon came to Nev
a few days ago and made a sp which sounded like the defiant challenge of Jeff Davis against the Union in 1861. "We're not going to permit interference with some things, no matter what happens," he said in effect. None of these reforms, said he, which will upset the status quo in the South.

BEN DAVIS, JR.

What did Dixon mean? Obviously he was referring to the Fair Employment Practices Committee which has gone into the South for the purpose of ending job discrimination against Negro workers by Southern industrialists. Dixon is burned up because the FEPC actually did secure non-discriminatory pledges from some of the Southern employers, the first time such a thing has happened since the Civil War.

DIXON himself defied the order of the FEPC that there should be no discrimination between Negro and white prisoners in making material for the armed forces. He refused to accept the contract of the government because it had a non-discriminatory clause, put there by order of the President of the United States. Thus our boys and our Allies will not have some much-needed war materials, simply because a pint-sized dictator named Dixon chooses to defy the Commander-in-Chief and the Constituon of the United States.

That is insurrection, pure and simple, and the most dangerous ort! We could lose the war this way. Dixon evidently has the same regard for the Constitution and for the orders of the Commander-in-Chief as Hitler has for a treaty. When he says that the status quo is not going to be changed "no matter what happens," that is the language of secession.

The sole purpose of the FEPC is to eliminate racial discrimination in industry which limits and hampers war production. Anyone therefore who opposes the FEPC is not merely venting his spleen against Negroes or Jews, or Catholics or loyal foreign-born, he is tampering with victory. Dixon is sabotaging the war effort, and by denying to Negroes the equal right to work on Army contracts for the federal government he is playing the part of a Fifth Columnist.

DIXON ought to be impeached. No doubt he would be if the poor Negroes and whites in the State of Alabama had the right to vote. Dixon ought to be put in jail as an active enemy of the war effort; and the issue is a much broader one than his white supremacy attitude toward Negro Americans The issue is as simple as this to every American, irrespective of race creed or color: do you want enough war production to win, or don't you?

In a centralized war economy where manpower as well as materials would be allocated in an ordered fashion, Dixon would have to go. One of the main reasons why such an economy is essential is that it gives us a plan by which all the sheep and goats could be judged—and we could see who the Dixons are in the North, East and West as well as in the South.

There was a lot of other dynamite in Dixon's speech in New New York which should give pause. That an and his collaborators like Gov. Talmadge of Georgia (who just pardoned a couple of his fellow Ku Kluxers) are living reasons why the elimination of the poll tax is a war necessity—and not just a political reform.

It is either these guys, or our country. They're not just out to maintain their lynch system in the deep South. They're out to make our entire country bow to its own white supremacy practices and ideologies. Dixon comes to New York to win converts to Southern lynchdom, and who can deny that his insurrectionary words will fall on sypathetic ears among the Farley-Coughlin Democrats and the Hoover Republicans?

If we are going to win this war—and the American people are determined to do so—then we cannot afford to underestimate the danger of men like Dixon, Talmadge, Bilbo and their ilk. These men must be fought by the mass fury of the people, and the Federal Government needs to apply sternly and quickly all the excellent anti-Jim Crow policies which it has enunciated.

Last, but not least, prepare now to see that the poll tax is gotten rid of early at the January session of Congress. The Dixons are desperate at the powerful progressive forces released by the war for the ending of Hitlerist practices at home. Let's put them out of their raving misery politically crushing them and physically jailing them.

NEGRO GUESTS IN 'FORBIDDEN' CAFES CLAIMED

Tells Press Conference She Would Hire Race Secretary

DEC 26 1942

(EDITOR'S NOTE: No Negroes participate in the White House press conferences of the President or Mrs. Roosevelt. The Defender's Washington correspondent, realizing that the daily papers too frequently cut or distort stories affecting Negroes, called the White House upon reading the following article and sought to see or have read to him the official transcript of that part of Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference which pertained to the subject of article reproduced below. The White House decided it would not make this information available. We therefore reprint the article as it appeared in the Evening Star of Washington on December 17.)

WASHINGTON—Mrs. Roosevelt declared at her press conference today that she had heard a current rumor that she had appeared at leading hotels here with colored persons as her guests, and branded the story as "of value to the Nazis" and might have been inspired by them.

"I cannot remember ever having gone to a hotel here with guests," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She commented that the story generally described her as calling up the Mayflower, Willard, Hay-Adams, Carlton hotels or the Woodward and Lothrop tearoom to make reservations for lunch. The story continues,' she said, that it was a complete surprise to the management when the President's wife appeared with colored guests.

Weakness of Story

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that the weakness of this story is that she has never telephoned any hotel here for luncheon reservations. "I never go," she said, "except as a guest at a public function." She added that she never went for lunch anywhere outside the White House except in suburban tearooms, never telephoned first, and has discontinued even this "since we haven't any gas."

Mrs. Roosevelt said she could not say that this rumor was definitely started by the Nazis, but believes it is part of their general campaign of controversial rumors.

"They must be inspired," she said, "because they spring up in a similar vein all over the country at the same time." She explained she had heard the same rumor about herself in Nashville, Tenn.

DEC 26 1942

Mrs. Roosevelt added this rumor is "probably" tied up with the "Eleanor Club" story of her alleged attempts to organize colored domestic workers for shorter hours and higher wages.

The rumors "naturally would be of value to the Nazis," Mrs. Roosevelt said. She was certain of the inaccuracy of the hotel story, she said. "I hesitate to be so definite," she continued, "because you can never remember everything you have ever done. But I certainly have not as far as I can remember."

Mrs. Roosevelt commented at the same time on rumors that she is planning to hire a colored secretary.

"I should be delighted to hire one if she was capable," Mrs. Roosevelt said, "but I don't need another secretary at this time."

REFUTING A RUMOR WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Mrs. Roosevelt has found it necessary to make a public denial of stories, whispered from one end of the country to another, that she has taken Negro guests to dine with her at white hotels, both in Washington and other cities.

The stories have been booted about the country for some months. Usually they vary only as to locale. All of them have the same sort of poisonous undertone. No one has yet been found who professed to have actually seen any of the incidents reported, but some of the rumor-mongers have gone the next step closest to this by pretending that the facts were vouched for personally to them by the manager of the hotel involved.

The stories run about like this: That the wife of the President, after calling the hotel, always one of the most prominent in town, and making reservations for a number of luncheon guests, had showed up with a group of colored people.

In Washington the hotel named is one of the most exclusive in the city, only a stone's throw from the White House. It was whispered about in drawing rooms and public places for several weeks until someone, doubting its authenticity, made a check by calling the manager, whom he knew personally.

The manager stated that nothing remotely suggesting the incident had ever occurred at his hotel. He denounced it as an absolute fabrication from beginning to end.

DEC 2 3 1942

ANOTHER DENIAL Another hotel mentioned in a variation of the story was at Nashville, Tenn. Someone who knew the manager there personally made a long distance call to verify the report. The denial he got was as emphatic as the one coming from the Washington hotel proprietor.

A secretary to a well-known southern senator has been publicly peddling the story in Washington with a Natchez, Miss., background. He claimed to have been told by the hotel manager personally that such an incident had happened there. Along with the others, it has been proven equally false.

Finally, one of the Washington newspaper women, confronted with persistent repetitions of the story, decided to ask Mrs. Roosevelt about it. Branding them as entirely false, she said they must be inspired, because they have sprung up all over the country in similar vein.

ELEANOR'S STATEMENT Here is what the First Lady had to say about the situation:

"I never call up hotels and ask for reservations for guests. I don't remember ever having taken anybody to a hotel to eat, here or elsewhere. I go to hotels only when on out-of-town trips, or to attend public functions. And then I do not appear with guests. The stories are interesting because, since they spring up all over the country in similar vein, they must be inspired."

Obviously they are a sequel to the "Eleanor Club" rumors, since found to have no basis of fact. The FBI made a special investigation of these some months ago at the personal request of Mrs. Roosevelt. They were found to be totally without foundation—the pure figment of some crackpot brain.

How anyone could be so morally low as to circulate such dastardly rumors against the First Lady of the land is beyond comprehension. They are fit subjects for the psychiatrists—all of them. The people who repeat such rumors are little better.

DEC 2 3 1942

STORM CENTER Mrs. Roosevelt, because of her energetic nature and participation in so many different activities, has been something of a storm center of controversy from the beginning. People either like her or dislike her. Most of her maligners seem to think that the place of a President's wife is in some secluded room of the White House, from which she should emerge only on rare occasions, and then merely as a show piece.

DEC 2 3 1942

The present First Lady is not built that way. She is the epitome of the new freedom enjoyed by women in the more enlightened nations. In her own way she has done infinite good for the social well-being of the country. Some of her humanitarian efforts may take her far afield at times, but nothing she has done or is capable of doing justifies the many miserable attacks made upon her.

The rumor-mongers and the repeaters of such trifles do the country a patriotic injustice by seeking to stir up strife by making her name the target of baseless attacks.

The Old Fight

DEC 1 7 1942

Governor Frank M. Dixon, of Alabama, who in the last year of his progressive administration, has lent his talent to questionable energy on the "race question" renewed his "old fight" against the New Deal and restated his "bogey" views as regards the Negro and "race discrimination" and "segregation laws" in a speech before the Southern Society of New York.

It is probable that Gov. Dixon, himself, is doing more than any of the "outsiders" he seems to blame for "stirring up trouble" between the Negro and the white people of the South.

A native-born, Southern-trained, intelligent Negro leadership has risen in the South that takes no more orders from the "outside," perhaps, than the Governor himself. Which leaves a great portion of the Governor's unsupported views as mere hokum. One, therefore, must seriously question Mr. Dixon's information and inspiration for his racial views.

While we have not commented editorially on scattered efforts of Negro leaders in this state, and over the South, to wwork out their problems as Southerners nevertheless they have been reported.

DEC 1 7 1942

A group of Birmingham and Alabama leaders took up with the Jefferson County Legislative Delegation and with Governor-Elect Chauncey Sparks problems affecting Negro people in Birmingham and Alabama a few months ago.

In none of these instances, and the many others that could be cited, is there any concerted, organized movement aided by any federal agency or outsiders to break down the southern social structure.

Negroes neither request nor quest the social society of white people. They, like all other Americans, ask but for their right to earn a living, to work, to be educated and to participate and share in the benefits of government without discrimination. These things are some times denied Negroes.

Work of the CoFEP needs no defense. It is no weapon to breakdown "segregation' and is not being used that way. It seeks only to compel the full use of all available American manpower doing the work without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin. All of this can be achieved in our opinion, within the framework of southern traditions. It is therefore difficult for us to understand those who seem to view this work so totally differently.

"Segregation implies separation of the races, not mistreatment of anyone....No discrimination should exist, and those practicing it deserves the condemnation of white and black alike." Governor Dixon is quoted as saying.

The CoFEP is the President's apparatus to see that "No discrimination should exist" in war training and in the other war services. In that light the President has only given energy to the Governor's idea of non-discrimination which Mr. Dixon advocated in his New York speech but defied when he refused to sign a federal contract some months ago because it contained a non-discrimination clause.

DEC 1 7 1942

Carefully, however, the Governor said that no discrimination "should exist" but added no more, insofar as taking steps to see to it that racial discrimination does not exist, Action is not in his favor.

Discrimination, probably more of a mattter of incident than necessity, unhappily exists everywhere there is segregation. This is not observed to imply the impossibility of complete elimination of discrimination without the abolition of segregation. It is to point out the intricate nature of the problem and the difficulty of adjustment without some discrimination. While the task is hard, it is not impossible. It will have to be faced calmly, scientifically and understandingly by white and black in a new kind of cooperation.

As a whole, probably, totally, Negroes of this section care not to violate segregation laws. They desire them enforced equally and fairly and justly. If there is complaint and dissatisfaction, which there is, it comes from the failure of Negroes to get the fair treatment they expect under the "separate but equal" laws of the South.

DEC 1 7 1942

Finally, to allay the suspicion and fears and ghosts which seem to torture and scare Governor Dixon we give our opinion that there is no organized plot by Negroes, nor cooperation given by them, nor any discernible evidence of any "outsiders" and the federal government trying to tamper with the social laws of the South.

Urge FDR To Rap Demagogues

Atlanta, Ga. DEC 20 1942

The Atlanta Daily World

56K

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)—A petition with a thousand signatures of Negro and white Southerners from all walks of life, was forwarded to President Roosevelt this week. The petition called upon the Commander-in-Chief to take firm measures to smash the mounting revolt of Southern political reaction against the essential win-the-war measures of the Administration.

The statement charged a band of Poll Tax demagogues with attempting to incite the white people of the South against Negroes in order to destroy national unity.

The petition accused these men of leading attacks on labor, provoking violence against Negroes, organizing phoney "grass roots" opposition to the rationing and price fixing system—all in a mad effort to discredit the President's leadership.

DEC 20 1942

MOTIVATED BY FEAR

It pointed out that these selfish men are motivated by a fear of social legislation and political reforms (such as the abolition of the poll tax) which are being born in the course of this People's War and which operate to undermine their reactionary grip on the national life.

The statement warned that these men have grown in their boldness and that the security of our country and the success of our war effort demands that they be removed from political life. Further stating that their actions in organizing Leagues for White Supremacy has already linked them with the Hitler enemy and has branded them with lurid marks of traitor, the petitioners called for an offensive on the part of the Administration to root out and destory this arrogant band of Dixie Fifth Columnists. Among the inciters of disunity specifically named are Horace Wilkinson, Gessner T. McCorvey, Governor Frank M. Dixon, Congressman Joseph Starnes, Martin Dies, and Governor Eugene Talmadge.

CITE WILKINSON

Louis E. Burnham, secretary of the Southern Negro Youth Congress, in a letter to the President which accompanied the petition, wrote in part:

"When this petition was originally drafted and submitted for the approval of the general public, this past August, the first bugle call in this subversive campaign had just been sounded. A Birmingham attorney, Horace Wilkinson, had publicly endorsed Hitler's Aryan "theories" by calling for the organization of a League for White Supremacy; the Governor of Alabama, Frank M. Dixon, in defiance of a Presidential order, had refused in the name of his state a Federal contract for the manufacture of tenting cloth for the Army and called for a revolt against the "whims" of federal authority; the Governor of Georgia, Eugene Talmadge— recently discredited by the voters of his State —had reached the odorous heights of his campaign against the citizenship rights and security of Negro Georgians.

NOT ISOLATED

DEC 20 1942

"It was the hope of many Americans—white and Negro, Northerners and Southerners,—that this exhibition of callous disregard for the essential unity of our nation-at-war was merely an isolated aberration from the form of high patriotism which characterizes the vast majority of all our citizens in every walk of life. Events have since shown that such a hope was ill-founded. The expectation that the attacks against the rights of Negro people, the flauting of federal authority, the spreading of the divisive seeds of racial friction, would cease on their own accord, has been dashed to pieces by the intensified and more bold activity of the self-styled white supremacists.

DEC 20 1942

"In the name of states' rights they have launched a campaign of "secession" from the policies of the Administration which have won the support of our citizenry as being essential to victory....These actions are not localized in Alabama. The conspirators against unity are working zealously to recruit to their ranks from all parts of the South and the nation. The Governor of Louisiana, Samuel Jones, has but recently announced his complicity in the plan of secession.

"This open, organized revolt is only incidentally a revolt against the leadership of the Democratic Party. As such it would hold only an academic interest for the millions of Negro and white people of the South who are effectively disfranchised by pernicious practices which Southern Democrats, in collaboration with many Northern Republicans, have successfully maintained to date. It is, however, a revolt against the war.

"We call upon you, therefore, Mr. President, to crush this conspiracy with firm hand. The signatories to this petition, you may be sure, are only a token sampling of millions of Southerners who stand ready to rally to your leadership in the conduct of the nation's war to a speedy and successful conclusion. These Southerners are white and Negro men and women" Gordon B. Hancock, F. D. Patterson, Benjamin E. Mays, Ernest Delpit, Rufus E. Clement, Horace Mann Bond, James E. Jackson, William M. Cooper, P. B. Young and Charles S. Johnson, chairman of the sub-editorial committee.

Many leaders of educational, business and professional circles of the South were present at the meeting which was endorsed by scores of leaders not in attendance.

DEC 27 1942

NEW YORK, Dec. 24—(ANP)—Walter White, the Rev. A. Clayton Powell and many others were described as "dumb American Negroes," to be beheaded when he took charge, Leonard Robert Jordan, British West Indian, told Herbert S. Boulin, former private detective now working with the FBI, Boulin testified last week in federal court where the trial of Jordan and three others on sedition charges is taking place.

DEC 27 1942

Also marked for decapitation was Dr. P. M. H. Savory, publisher of the Amsterdam Star-News, Boulin testified. In addition to Jordan, the others on trial are Lester Holmes, James Henry Thornhill and the Rev. Ralph Green Best, also West Indians. They are accused of working in behalf of the Japanese government.

Boulin said he was called to the FBI last year and in December of 1941 he made friends with Jordan who accepted him as an associate. He swore an oath of loyalty and was warned he would be decapitated should he betray the group. The detective also said Jordan asked him for $300, explaining that his Japanese supporters were handicapped by restrictions on their income. Jordan was put off with requests for more intimate statements of the purposes of the Ethiopian Pacific movement of which Jordan was president.

Was to Organize Negroes.

The accused seditionist told him he had been commissioned by A. Takis, now in prison as a forger, to organize Negroes in the east, Boulin said, and testified that Jordan told him the purpose of the organization was "to line up the colored people for the Japanese, so that when they take over the country the colored people will be all one."

"The United States hasn't a ghost of a chance of beating Japan," the detective quoted Jordan as saying. "If the Negroes have any sense at all, the thing to do now instead of following around with the NAACP and A. Philip Randolph movement and that sort of thing, is to join up with the Japanese."

DEC 27 1942

Boulin said that at meetings he attended in Jordan's hall he heard Jordan, Best, Thornhill and Holness denounce Negroes who might fight for the nation. On July 5, he testified, Thornhill declared that if the government were "foolish enough to give me a gun," he would shoot his own commanding officer.

Boulin also declared he attended a party in Holness' home where the guests cheered radio reports of Jap victories while dismissing news of American successes as "propaganda." When he was required to swear an oath of allegiance to the emperor of Japan, the oath was sealed with a "drink of liquor."

Conducted Own Agency.

DEC 27 19

The detective, himself a West Indian, conducted a private agency in New York for years. He was involved in the re-opening of the famous Hall Mills case by the New York Daily Mirror and also uncovered the "secret trip abroad of Frank Tinney and Imogene Wilson for a big daily by working near the gangplank as a stevedore.

Another who testified against Jordan was a Filipino who said his name was Policarpio Manansala, although admitting he used the aliases of "Dr. A. Takis" and "Mimo De Guzman." He asserted that "when I see a name that appeals to me, I take it."

The Filipino, who is also in jail, asserted he chanced to meet Jordan in Harlem last spring and Jordan proposed that they work together, producing a letter purporting to show he was working for the Japanese consulate. They met again last fall when both were prisoners and again Jordan said the two would make money if they worked together.

Manansala, a native of Manila, testified:

DEC 27 1942

"I'm interested in making money, but I'm not interested in making money when my country is being attacked by the Japanese."

A statement was also introduced in court which the FBI said was obtained from Rev. Best:

"I myself have made remarks that I am on the side of Japan to win this war. These things I am sorry I said them, and I will not say them again."

Dr. M. McLean Says Doctrine Is A Fallacy

Race Superiority Is Blasted By Hampton Head

DEC 23 1942

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, Va.—(SNS)—Both the findings of modern science and the teachings of religion show the fallacy of the belief in the existence of important race differences, declared President Malcoln S. McLean of Hampton Institute in a recent panel discussion held at the college on minorities and racial groups.

Anthropologists, Dr. Mac Lean, said, have proven that individual differences within races are most significant than the physical characteristics commonly associated with any given group. He also stated that religious teachings of universal brotherhood further emphasize the need for appreciation of individual qualities found in persons of all races, rather than attributing superiority or inferiority to any particular race.

Mrs. Ida Jones Curry, head of the college nursery school, who also participated in the discussion, declared that pre-school children are not aware of racial differences, although they readily reflect the attitudes and the behavior of those with whom they associate.

She said that it is the responsibility of parents to deal frankly and unemotionally with the subject of race when children become aware of it, keeping in mind the child's educational level and directing his thinking and observations along the lines of individual rather than racial differences among peoples.

Other members of the college staff who took part in the discussion were: Roscoe Lewis of the Human Relations Center faculty, Miss Grace Reeves, chairman of the Home Economics division, and Lt. Comdr. Edwin H. Downes, in charge of the Hampton Institute Naval Training Station.

Basis For New Charter For Race Relations

DEC 19 1942

A statement just issued by a committee of the Southern Conference on Race Relations, which was held in Durham, North Carolina, in October, is intended to serve as a basis for working out what has been appropriately phrased "A New Charter for Race Relations in the South."

The document is what its title sets forth: "A basis for interracial cooperation and development in the South—a statement by southern Negroes."

The Durham Conference represented a fair cross section of Negro life in the southern states. The 57 persons who were present, and the 21 who were represented by letter or telegram—and who unreservedly endorsed the purposes of the conference—represented a large majority of the southern states, and are engaged in the fields of religion, education, social welfare work, fraternal organizations, business, medicine, law, labor, industry and agriculture.

The committee, which compressed into about 3,000 words, the views of seven larger committees, which considered for a full day the vital questions of political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, and social welfare and health, made no pretensions of saying the last word on these subjects. There is more to be said, and that will be said, by white and colored people in the South, who will be invited to collaborate with the Southern Conference on Race Relations.

Since the war started, racial tensions have been increasing in the South. Approximately three-fourths of the Negroes in the United States live in the South. Efforts upon the part of the war administration to utilize Negro manpower fully in both the armed forces and in war industries have met with resistence, both in the North and in the South. Northern and southern Negro leaders and organizations of substantial influence have intervened in behalf of the race and of the war effort, and these interventions have brought about dangerous repercussions from southern politicians.

Up to this time the southern Negro has not spoken in tones and in terms that clearly defined his position. There is the assumption that the southern Negro is leaving the case entirely in the hands of his northern brethren. This is not true. In the current statement a representative group of southern Negroes speak for themselves, and in clear terms they make it known that they are not in accord with any thinking concerning the war period, or the post-war period, that contemplates no change or improvement in the status quo ante-war second-class citizenship rating of the Negro.

The full text of the statement is carried on page 13 of this issue of the Journal and Guide, and speaks for itself. Therefore, we shall attempt no editorial analysis of it. The committee that formulated the statement had before it the views of the several committees that worked upon the different catagories of the Durham conference agenda. It would be an inexcusable act of omission not to mention here the patient and painstaking work done on this report by the sub-committee chairman, Dr. Chas. S. Johnson, of Fisk University, and Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, of Virginia Union University, who is the conference director. These two had the constant collaboration of the other members of the committee, and of the conference.

As the Crow Flies

By DR. W. E. B. DU BOIS

WHEN THE REPORTS about Pearl Harbor are all in, we may be able to add them up and strike an average.

Dr. Du Bois

What one objects to in the published statements concerning the war is the extraordinarily low average intelligence which they assume on the part of American readers.

One wonders if the people who talk of three, four or five years more of war really understand just what war costs, not in life and crippling so much as in ways of thinking.

I have just read the autobiography of Jawaharlal Nehru of India. It has been a flaming experience.

Sitting on Sidelines

DEC 19 1942

I have no doubt but what many folk reading my advice concerning waiting for cultural change and social uplift will be bitterly opposed to the thesis. They will say: no, never wait even for the impossible, so long as the real is wrong! In many ways I sympathize with that attitude, and what I am calling for is not absolute waiting or absolute agitation, immediate reform or infinite patience; but rather for thoughtful and carefully-reasoned planning. For instance, considering the attitude of the white South and much of the white North toward racial segregation, how far could legal enactment change present patterns? If we make a list of proposed laws we can see possibilities. For example: The anti-lynch law, the poll tax law; laws against residential segregation, laws against discrimination in the distribution of school funds and laws against schools separated by race.

There is no doubt but that the majority of the white people of the South want the lynching habit eradicated. If it could be proven to them that any particular form of law could accomplish this, without doing harm in other directions, an anti-lynching law would be almost immediately possible. But the South is afraid that a law which would stop lynching through Federal control of court processes could and would be used to stop other racial discriminations. Notwithstanding this, I believe that steady, thoughtful and restrained pressure could put a Federal anti-lynching law on the statute books and buttress it with further state enactments.

Predicts Reforms in South

Again, I believe that the South is on the threshold of doing away not only with hindrances to voting by the use of the poll tax and other enactments, but is also beginning to see that the white primary must go and that the mass of Negroes and poor whites must be allowed to vote. A Federal anti-poll tax law, therefore, is quite possible; but the difficulty is that the power which such a law would place in the hands of the poor Southern voter is not nearly as great as some people think. Only thorough economic reform is going to implement democracy South and North.

Again, if the Federal government comes to the rescue of the Southern public school system, and it undoubtedly will in time, the legal and administrative methods by which colored children have been outrageously discriminated against can be swept away by legal provision. The present proposal before Congress practically envisages this.

On the other hand, and this illustrates particularly what I have in mind, no law today passed by the Federal government or by state governments in the South could do away with separation by race in the public school system. And that, not because racial separation is right but because the pattern of racial separation is so thoroughly ground into the white Southern mind that it is too soon for law to change it.

What I am saying then is: If you are going to bring about social reform there are some things you can do by law and there are some things you cannot. Those things which are culturally so entrenched that they cannot at present be touched by law can be approached by judicious propaganda, a propaganda which depends mainly upon setting the actual truth before people who would rather not face it. Then beyond propaganda comes agitation. There is a place for it sometimes, sometimes it is inevitable and must be carried to the extreme, but not always. It is an unusual tool for reform and not the single and only one.

The Race Issue Must Not Be Alabama's Shame!

In time of crisis, in time of change, the fabric of life in the South has always been subject to strain and tension. It was that way in the last war.

It was natural that with shifts in population, with such every-day occurrences as cooks being able to afford remaining at home because husbands could get better jobs, with the Negro called into service for a second time, the South would again become more conscious of its unique pattern of living.

Thoughtful Southerners have had no fear of misguided spokesmen from Washington; nor have they feared the few extremists who seek leadership among Negroes. Thoughtful Southerners have feared only what might happen if the issue was exploited.

There has been an increase in the number of violations of the accepted Southern mores. There have been reports of perhaps a dozen Negroes who have been belligerent about accepting the Jim Crow line in buses, or violated the code of rules expected of them in stores—violations of a code that is not written but which has been in the making for a long time. Violations of this code have not been confined to Negroes. It is reported that white men have shot unarmed Negroes in recent weeks on no more provocation than the accusation that a misdemeanor had been committed. And if the code has any limitation at all upon the conduct of whites, murder is certainly included.

These violations, however, were individual acts. For the great majority of Alabama's three million people they do not signify that all white men should fear and hate all Negroes. Likewise, they do not signify that all Negroes should hate and fear all white men.

Whites who understand the war know that defeating the fraudulent New Order based upon German enslavement of other peoples will stand or fall upon success in rallying brown men, yellow men, black men, and whites, to the cause. Knowing the skill with which our enemies can use each weakness in our armor, they are willing, too, to make every effort to be fair and restrained and patient. For in the end, without a defeat of Hitler, the future for us could be nothing except a ghastly nightmare. For their part, Negroes who understand the war fully are not so preoccupied with their immediate grievances as to be misguided into a failure to see the larger cause and the greater stake at issue.

There is no division of opinion among Southerners as to the folly of attempting to establish segregation or impose social equality. The only division is one which requires that all Southerners answer to the roll call in one of two groups:

First, those who are the victims of unreasoned and violent fears on the race issue, together with those who exploit such attitudes for personal, political or economic advantage;

Second, those who look upon the concept of white supremacy as meaning a longer experience in democracy and Christianity, an experience and background which carries with it the responsibility to be more democratic, more Christian, and more willing to accord justice and good will. Likewise, those of this group feel that the Negro among us, being defenseless politically and lacking economic power, should not be exploited by reason of his weaker position.

It is not possible to understand why Governor Dixon publicly charged that the federal government is attempting to "break down the color line" without knowing something of his activities for the past four months.

During this time the Governor, in private conversations and conferences, has been predicting dire and bloody events. He has charged that the Army is to be used to "force a second reconstruction on the South," and has interpreted the requisitioning of rifles of the Home Guard as an intrigue to disarm him. He has seen in the projected plan to send a total of 2,400 Negro troops to airfields in the State another phase of the plot. He has listed a series of "horror stories" as evidence of worse things to come.

Many familiar with the course Governor Dixon has followed have thought that possibly he was suffering from a sincere obsession, since there are very few thinking citizens of the State who agree with the import of his private conversations on the matter. Others, familiar with his bitterness toward everything connected with the Roosevelt administration, have assumed that he, in company with other forces in the State, was engaged in a carefully planned political maneuver.

Since Governor Dixon has pitched his public views on the race issue on a specific point, it might be well to examine his case. He refuses to permit signing of the routine contract for prison-made goods unless this clause is deleted:

"The seller, in performing the work required by this contract, shall not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin."

Governor Dixon might better have begun his fight by refusing to take an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States until the 14th and 15th amendments were deleted!

When the clause in question was written into government contracts as a routine some 18 months ago, there were unemployed Negroes in Mobile who could not get jobs in shipyards because either employers or unions barred them—this, despite the urgency of ship production. There were airplane plants in New Haven, Connecticut, and Los Angeles, California, which were operating at less than capacity because they refused to employ available Negroes. Indeed, those who have made a study of the situation as it affects Negro employment say that the bars were more rigid and unreasonable on the West Coast and in New England than in the South. Work is not on the forbidden list for Negroes in the Southern pattern of living. On trains, on construction jobs, on farms, on trucks, in the mines—there are few whites in the South who do not work within sight of members of the Negro race.

In other sections of the nation there were bars to employment of other racial or religious groups.

If one is inclined to consider only the welfare of the Anglo-Saxons of this globe, there is the unmistakable fact that somewhere on some front a person of Anglo-Saxon extraction was dying for the want of a gun. It seems illogical to proclaim an interest in persons of Anglo-Saxon blood without being concerned about a condition leading to the spilling of an unnecessary amount of it.

Considering the war in its larger implications there is still the necessity for a unified front of all peoples, brown men, yellow men, black men, as well as white. To bar a trained Negro from working to produce the potatoes, guns, planes, ships needed to defeat Hitlerism is a contradiction. If by reason of color a man is denied such an elementary opportunity as helping to produce for the United States, then the issue of the war has been mis-stated.

But Governor Dixon does not see the issue as one involving maximum use of natural resources for production. He sees the contract clause as an effort to destroy segregation, to force "intermingling," to destroy white supremacy. He says that if he sells the Army osnaburg, the federal government might force him to employ Negroes in supervisory capacities in the State Department of Prisons!

There is the inescapable fact that some Negro leaders have also been under the impression that the Fair Employment Practices Committee might be used to destroy the things which Governor Dixon says he is protecting.

The question, however, is not whether Governor Dixon or Walter White has such an opinion. The questions to be considered calmly and without fanciful flights into the realm of imagination are:

1. Has there been any evidence that the clause has had any effect in breaking down social segregation, or white supremacy? If there is any such evidence let it be produced with the names of the individuals and persons whose lives have been affected.

2. Is there any possibility that such an eventuality might come to pass?

The best answer to both questions comes again from Mark Etheridge, the first chairman of the committee and a man whom Governor Dixon implied improperly as sharing his own views. Says Mr. Etheridge:

"All the armies of the world, both of the United Nations and the Axis, could not force upon the South an abandonment of racial segregation."

Racial segregation is not an issue for debate in Alabama; it is not an issue which can be settled by 2,400 armed Negro troops or 2,400,000 troops of any color.

The federal government could not in the past, nor can it in the future, impose any change which men oppose intellectually and emotionally with the unanimity prevailing in the South. The damage to the South in the field of race relations has not come from governors who failed to fight with vigor against federal encroachment. The damage has come from a long line of well-known Southern governors such as Cole Blease, Theo Bilbo, James K. Vardaman, and more recently Eugene Talmadge. These are the men who have injured the South's pattern of living.

Alabama to date has had incompetent governors, greedy governors, good, bad, and indifferent governors. But it has been spared the shame of having a vicious governor or one willing to exploit the Negro issue.

The Advertiser has had many occasions to praise Frank Dixon, whom it helped to elect. The machinery of government under his guidance has been overhauled and modernized.

The Advertiser has on occasion felt pride when some act of Frank Dixon's has reflected credit on Alabama.

The Advertiser hopes that Frank Dixon will see the wisdom of re-examining calmly and dispassionately this most vital issue. The war in which we are engaged is too perilous to permit this State to be torn by the ghastly experience of a fight over an issue which is no issue at all among us.

An Alarming Attitude

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

I inclose herein a copy of a letter to Mr. William M. Bruns, president of the Bessemer Kiwanis Club, of Bessemer, Ala., regarding the account of the speech of Mr. Horace Wilkinson before that group which appeared in the July 23 issue of The Courier-Journal.

I wish to emphasize the fact that Kiwanis International does not approve, I am sure, any such ideas as promulgated by Mr. Wilkinson.

GEORGE E. CAIN.

Mr. Cain is immediate past president of the Kiwanis Club of Jackson. His letter to Mr. Bruns said:

"The Courier Journal"

"I read with misgivings and alarm the report of your recent meeting at which Mr. Horace Wilkinson delivered his address in regard to the 'Negro menace' in this country. I still believe that almost all Kiwanians 'hold these truths self-evident, that all men are created equal', and that they believe that the distinguishing mark of a democracy is that it recognizes the dignity of the individual rather than the supremacy of any group.

Louisville, Ky.

"When Kiwanis International's Immediate Past President Charlie Donley accepted from President Roosevelt the responsibility of Kiwanis for maintaining and building public morale as its number one contribution to the war effort, I do not believe that he had in mind the sponsoring of racial war between groups of American citizens. No intelligent American believes in 'dragging the white man down to the level of the Negro', but he does know that if the Negro cannot be raised from his deplorably low state the Nation as a whole, and the South in particular, will suffer.

"While my ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War, and my grandfather was a member of the Tennessee Volunteers of the Southern Confederacy, I realize that in a country where an individual is judged on his merits and not those of his ancestors or kin, I can claim no credit for what they were, and that, but for the grace of God, my face, as well as Mr. Wilkinson's, might have been black.

"By the end of the current year 30 per cent of last year's membership of our local Kiwanis Club will be in the armed forces of the United States and we will be fighting to preserve the American belief in the sancity of the individual man. Hitler has stated that when the time is opportune he will have no trouble in his method of 'divide and conquer' through the stirring up of racial hatred in this country. Whose side is Mr. Wilkinson on?

"I trust that his speech was 'very well received' by the members of your club because of Southern hospitality for his person rather than for his message."

Lawyer Raises Racial Issue

BESSEMER, Ala., July 22 (AP)—Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney long active in Alabama politics, called for organization of a league to maintain white supremacy today in an address before a civic club here.

Wilkinson spoke on "racial relations."

"A herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation," he declared, "and with it many of the most cherished institutions in the South.

"These and other things will explain why the situation is growing increasingly tense each day."

As support of this contention, Wilkinson cited fair labor practice clause in war contracts which stipulate no worker shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color or national origin.

LAWYER CALLS FOR SUPREMACY OF WHITE RACE

Herculean Effort Being Made To Destroy Segregation, Says Wilkinson

BESSEMER, (AP)—Horace Wilkinson, Birmingham attorney long active in Alabama politics, called for organization of a league to maintain white supremacy today in an address before a civic club here.

Wilkinson spoke on "Racial Relations," and outlined a series of incidents between whites and negroes in the state in recent months.

"A herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation," he declared, "and with it many of the most cherished institutions in the south.

"These and other things will explain why the situation is growing increasingly tense each day."

As support of this contention, Wilkinson cited fair labor practice clauses in war contracts which stipulate no worker shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"The white men of the south who oppose dragging the white man down to the level of the negro must organize," he said.

"If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need of a league to maintain white supremacy.

"It is ridiculous for a 10 per cent negro population to undertake to shape the policy of the southern states; it is tragic for the white people in this country to sit idly by and allow these negroes to misguidedly place their selfish interests ahead of an all out war effort."

Wilkinson said the league should be organized by "wise leadership around the conference table and followed by constitutional action."

The attorney said he was opposed to any extra-legal methods in solving racial problems.

Dixon Charges Federal Agencies Seeking To Destroy Racial Segregation In South

56K

Governor Declines To Sign War Contract With Ban On Discrimination; Says Issue Raised At Time When Unity Is Needed

56K

MONTGOMERY, July 23.—(AP)—Gov. Frank M. Dixon of Alabama charged today that federal agencies had adopted policies "to break down the principle of segregation under which the white and negro races have lived in peace together in the South since Reconstruction," and criticized "those who seek to foster their own pet social reforms in a time of national crisis."

The executive's accusations, including one that the fair employment practice committee had intimated the United States government would force abandonment of race segregation, were included in his refusal to sign a contract with the defense supplies corporation for 750,000 yards of convict-made Osnaburg cloth so long as it contained a nondiscrimination clause to which he objected.

Governor Objects

The clause as set out in Dixon's letter to Ralph D. Williams, New York agent for the corporation, reads:

"'The seller, in performing the work required by this contract, shall not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin.'"

Dixon told newsmen his primary objection to the clause was "the effect it would have under announced federal policy," and said in his letter to Williams:

"Should we sign the contract with this clause included, we can expect the fair employment practice committee immediately to descend upon the state with the demand that negroes be put in positions of responsibility in that (corrections and institutions) department in approximately the same proportion that the negro race bears to the white race in Alabama. I will not permit the state of Alabama to be subject to the whims of any federal agency, and I will not permit the employes of the state to be placed in a position where they must abandon the principle of segregation or lose their jobs."

Views Of Attorney

Release of Dixon's letter followed by one day a statement by Horace Wilkinson, a Birmingham attorney long at political odds with the governor, that "a Herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation."

Wilkinson, speaking to a Bessemer civic club, said: "If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need of a league to maintain white supremacy."

Declaring he told a defense supplies corporation agent he would sign no contract for the state's prison cotton mills which contained the "discrimination by seller" clause, Dixon addressed this explanation to Williams, "In order that our position may not be misunderstood or subject to misinterpretation:"

"Under executive Order 8,802 of the President of the United States, which is built around the same principle enunciated in this clause, the United States employment service division of the social security board has adopted policies, the effect of which are to break down the principle of segregation under

2. Is there any possibility that such an eventuality might come to pass?

Racial segregation is not an issue for debate in Alabama; it is not an issue which can be settled by 2,400 armed Negro troops or 2,400,000 troops of any color.

Wilkinson spoke on "Racial Relations," and outlined a series of incidents between whites and negroes in the state in recent months.

"A herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation," he declared, "and with it many of the most cherished institutions in the south.

"These and other things will explain why the situation is growing increasingly tense each day."

As support of this contention, Wilkinson cited fair labor practice clauses in war contracts which stipulate no worker shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color or national origin.

"The white men of the south who oppose dragging the white man down to the level of the negro must organize," he said.

"If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need of a league to maintain white supremacy.

"It is ridiculous for a 10 per cent negro population to undertake to shape the policy of the southern states; it is tragic for the white people in this country to sit idly by and allow these negroes to misguidedly place their selfish interests ahead of an all out war effort."

Wilkinson said the league should be organized by "wise leadership around the conference table and followed by constitutional action."

The attorney said he was opposed to any extra-legal methods in solving racial problems.

Dixon Charges Federal Agencies Seeking To Destroy Racial Segregation In South

5GK

Governor Declines To Sign War Contract With Ban On Discrimination; Says Issue Raised At Time When Unity Is Needed

5GK

MONTGOMERY, July 23.—(AP)—Gov. Frank M. Dixon of Alabama charged today that federal agencies had adopted policies "to break down the principle of segregation under which the white and negro races have lived in peace together in the South since Reconstruction," and criticized "those who seek to foster their own pet social reforms in a time of national crisis."

The executive's accusations, including one that the fair employment practice committee had intimated the United States government would force abandonment of race segregation, were included in his refusal to sign a contract with the defense supplies corporation for 750,000 yards of convict-made Osnaburg cloth so long as it contained a nondiscrimination clause to which he objected.

Governor Objects

The clause as set out in Dixon's letter to Ralph D. Williams, New York agent for the corporation, reads:

"'The seller, in performing the work required by this contract, shall not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color or national origin.'"

Dixon told newsmen his primary objection to the clause was "the effect it would have under announced federal policy," and said in his letter to Williams:

"Should we sign the contract with this clause included, we can expect the fair employment practice committee immediately to descend upon the state with the demand that negroes be put in positions of responsibility in that (corrections and institutions) department in approximately the same proportion that the negro race bears to the white race in Alabama. I will not permit the state of Alabama to be subject to the whims of any federal agency, and I will not permit the employes of the state to be placed in a position where they must abandon the principle of segregation or lose their jobs."

Views Of Attorney

Release of Dixon's letter followed by one day a statement by Horace Wilkinson, a Birmingham attorney long at political odds with the governor, that "a Herculean effort is being made to break down and destroy segregation."

Wilkinson, speaking to a Bessemer civic club, said: "If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need of a league to maintain white supremacy."

Declaring he told a defense supplies corporation agent he would sign no contract for the state's prison cotton mills which contained the "discrimination by seller" clause, Dixon addressed this explanation to Williams, "In order that our position may not be misunderstood or subject to misinterpretation:"

"Under executive Order 8,802 of the President of the United States, which is built around the same principle enunciated in this clause, the United States employment service division of the social security board has adopted policies, the effect of which are to break down the principle of segregation under which the white and the negro races have lived in peace together in the South for all the years since Reconstruction.

Says System On Trial

"Under cover of this particular clause contained in war contracts, the fair employment practice committee has been operating to break down this same principle of segregation of the races, to force negroes and white people to work together, intermingle with each other, and even to bring about the situation where white employes will have to work under negroes. A careful study of the record of the fair employment practice committee hearing recently held in Birmingham disclosed that, however sincere the protestations of the committee members to the contrary, actually there was placed on trial the entire system of race segregation of the South, and that with the single exception of Mr. Mark Ethridge of Louisville, Ky., there was no realization in the minds of any of the committee members of the basic necessity for any such system.

"The clear intimation was that unless the Southern people changed their way of living and abandon the principle of segregation, they would be forced so to do by the federal government. Unfortunately, the issue seems to be clearly drawn.

Want Negro Trained

"The thinking white people of the South want the negro educated and trained. They realize that by this process the per capita wealth and income of the region can be increased, the services of the local governments to their people made greater, the economic difficulties brought about largely by freight rate differentials be made less serious. They want the negro race to be used, as it is willing to be used, to supply part of the necessary manpower for war and industry. They realize, however, from their familiarity with a problem which has been theirs for years, that these things must be done and can be done within the frame work of the existing social structure. The present emergency should not be used as a pretext to bring about the abolition of color lines in the South.

"I regard it as extremely unfortunate that this issue should be forced upon the Southern people in a time when the very life of the nation is at stake. By every act and expression of theirs they have now as always proven their intense patriotism. In proportions that largely exceed those in every other section of the country they have voluntarily entered the armed services. If you will examine the casualty lists to date, you will find that a large proportion of them are Southern men. There should be no attack on the long-established institutions of any section of the country at a time when our sons are engaged in a life and death struggle with the enemies of the democratic way of life.

Says Issue Disastrous

"Those of us who have long been friends of the negro race regard the present attempt to abolish the segregation of the races as disastrous. The negro has progressed only by the help of his white friends in the South. He can progress only by their help. The federal government, in the past engaged once in the experiment of forcing negro domination on the Southern people . . .

"In still another way the injection of the racial issue at this time is unfortunate. Maximum production is the desire of all of us. It can be obtained only by permitting those experienced in production to run their plants in the way they have found best. Attempts to interfere by bringing social issues and attempted reforms at this time can only have the effect of causing bitterness and confusion, slowing down the production of the country, taking from the hands of the very men on whom we must rely to run the plants their ability to run them efficiently."

NEGRO QUESTION BRINGS DROP IN PARTY'S FUNDS

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 10 (AP).—Federal handling "of the Negro situation in the south" has made it impossible for the democratic party to raise any substantial sum in Alabama, Gessner T. McCorvey, chairman of the state democratic executive committee, wrote national party officials today.

56K

McCorvey's letter, written to E. Ray Scott, of the treasurer's office of the democratic national committee, also was sent to Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn.

McCorvey, in releasing the letter for publication, said he did not desire to "stir up trouble," but he felt it his duty to inform the party leaders of sentiment in this section.

The letter was written, he said, in response to an appeal from the national committee for organization of a fund-raising campaign.

McCorvey Scorches Democratic Chieftain For Racial Stand

State Chairman Also Raps F. D. R. And Wife For Attitude On Negro

BY FRED TAYLOR

State Democratic Executive Committee Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey's scorching letter to Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn and other party chieftains, sharply criticizing meddling in racial affairs in this state by governmental and party leaders, Wednesday drew support from two Democratic governing body heads in Jefferson County.

56K

Sheriff Holt McDowell, immediate past chairman of the Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee and many years a party stalwart here, declared that, "In my opinion, whites and Negroes will continue to get along and work out their own destiny, if outside meddlers will keep hands off."

Herman Whisenant, Bessemer, present committee vice chairman, who became acting chairman recently when William C. Nelson, committee chieftain, went into military service, said:

"Outside agitators could bring on serious racial trouble in the South, but if we in Alabama and the people of other Southern states are permitted to handle our problems, I think we'll handle them satisfactorily."

Chairman McCorvey's letter asserted that the way the administration and Democratic national headquarters have attempted to handle the Negro situation in the South has made it "utterly impossible" to raise any substantial party funds from Alabama Democrats.

"It is just as impossible to mix the colored race with the white race in the South, and think of such a thing as having white girls and white boys working side by side with Negroes, as it is to mix oil and water," McCorvey, Mobile attorney and long a Democratic leader in Alabama, stated in his letter, a copy of which had been forwarded to Flynn.

The letter was addressed to E. Ray Scott, attache of the treasurer's office, Democratic National Committee, who recently went to Montgomery to confer with Alabama Democratic heads with a view to organizing a fund-raising committee preparatory to a drive for money to aid the party in the 1944 presidential campaign.

Chairman McCorvey's letter took the national government and party heads to task for their efforts to nullify the poll tax laws in Alabama and the other seven Southern states. He pointed out that the state's annual poll tax is only $1.50, with this money going to public education, adding that "I really see no reason why those in authority in Washington should be trying to force the Southern states to let the bars down and eliminate the almost nominal sum of $1.50 per year for the privilege of voting."

The state chairman's letter followed up a telephone conversation he had with Scott. He explained he had contacted various state party leaders, but said that "On all sides I was met with the statement that it would be utterly impossible to raise any substantial sum from Alabama Democrats until we first had some definite assurance from national headquarters that our party was going to turn over a new leaf in so far as the handling of the Negro situation in the South is concerned."

McCorvey said, "No right-thinking Southern man is unjust or unfair to the colored race," adding that, "The Negroes are our problem and we care for them in a way that they are not cared for in any other section of the country."

He emphasized, however, that "we will not stand for anything even remotely resembling social equality, declaring that to have white girls and boys working side by side with Negroes in factories in filling government contracts or any other contracts "is just unthinkable and unworkable."

McCorvey, who is expected to be reelected state committee chairman at January's organization meeting, declared white supremacy had to be maintained and that "we are going to maintain white supremacy in the South."

The chairman referred to President and Mrs. Roosevelt, asserting that "President Roosevelt and his wife have done more towards upsetting and disturbing the friendly relations heretofore existing between the white people and the colored people of the South than all the other presidents and their wives who have occupied the White House during the time I have been old enough to take notice of such matters."

The Daily Smear.

The Chicago Bee

DEC 1 3 1942

DID you ever wonder why that when colored people go into certain neighborhoods where they are not accustomed to being seen that there is a guest stare that greets them?

Did you ever wonder why that when colored people go into such neighborhoods police often arrest them without the slightest provocation?

Did you ever wonder why that when some unidentified person is accused of rape police begin looking for a Negro on which to pin the crime?

Did you ever wonder why that when a person is murdered by an unidentified slayer police are wont to round up colored persons?

Well, if you didn't wonder, you should.

The answer is found in the propaganda machine that is grinding away to smear the reputation of 13,000,000 Negroes 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and 52 weeks a year.

DEC 1 3 1942

It is a machine which has as its chief force the daily newspapers and the sordid types of pictures that come from Hollywood and which characterize the colored person as something strange, comical and queer and beyond the pale of American citizenship.

Does it strike you as something unusual when a newspaper incessantly prints articles about crime such as this: "John Doe, a Negro, was arrested in a tavern for the slaying of Syitin Boluksky"? Do you ever ask yourself, "Why is it that the Negro people are always set apart and identified in the daily newspapers when there is no good reason to do it. What difference does it make whether Boluksky was killed by a colored man or a white man? He is dead, isn't he? And if somebody murdered him the culprit should be made to pay the penalty, be he white or black. Why is it that if Boluksky is killed by an Italian, a Pole, a Jew, a Scandanavian, a German, a Turk, an Englishman, a Welsh, a Frenchman, or any other of the various groups that make up the 130,000,000 Americans who populate this country such identity is not important enough to print?

Well, if you haven't asked yourself those questions just begin now each time you see the word "Negro" or "colored" in the dailies. If you think like we do refer your questions to the publishers.

If you want to take some drastic action you can stop reading those papers which hold your race up, either directly or indirectly, to scorn or ridicule.

Alas, it is time that the colored people of Chicago, and of the entire country for that matter, demand fair play from the daily papers which they so religiously read.

Negroes Praise "Fine Spirit Of Mutual Respect" Of Races

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 3 (AP)—A group of Demopolis Ala., Negroes deplored today "outside interference by people of any color who do not or will not understand the spirit of respect and mutual helpfulness between" white and Negro residents of the Alabama black belt.

The position was taken in a resolution adopted at a Negro mass meeting held recently to celebrate over - subscription of their quota in the state war chest campaign.

White and Negro workers were called on in the resolution to "cease this sabotage" of strike in war industries.

Appreciation was expressed for "the privilege of being able to carry our share of the burden in this (war chest campaign) and other all-out war efforts." The group said it considered "it a distinct honor to have been given this obligation," and added:

". . . . We are grateful for the fine spirit of mutual respect and mutaual confidence which exists now, and has existed for so many years in this part of the Southland between the white and colored races."

„HONORING OUR OWN."

"NEW YORK AGE"
NOV 21, 1942

A GROUP OF Harlem Negroes, completing plans to give a dinner in honor of Carl Van Vechten, caused us to wonder why we as a race are more prone to honor some one of another racial group than our own leaders. Mr. Van Vechten was the first of a series of men of letters to give attention to Harlem and to remark on the renaissance of the Negro in the field of literature following the last war. And while we have no objection to his being given a dinner by any group, we can recall several Negroes who have done more for their people.

NOV 21 1942

When the late James Weldon Johnson met with a fatal accident, a committee was formed to promote a movement for erection of a staute in his honor here in New York. At that time Richmond Barthe had recently completed his memorial to the late Arthur Brisbane—a granite monument set in the fence that surrounds Central Park. The monument faces the Brisbane residence on Fifth avenue, and it was suggested that a similar emblem be erected to Mr. Johnson on the 110th street side of the park, facing Harlem where Mr. Johnson lived for many years and where he did most of his creative writing. But alas, the idea never fully reached the practical stage and nothing has been heard of it for some time.

Then there is the Florence Mills Association, organized to erect some kind of a monument to the late popular musical comedy star. This organization staged several benefits and collected a considerable amount of money, which was supposed to go into a home for Negro actors. But like many similar programs, the money was never used for the original plans and we have heard very little about Miss Mills lately.

NOV 21, 1942

We could name similar movements to honor the late Richard B. Harrison, Charles Gilpin and others of the theatrital profession but those cited will suffice.

A little more respect for the achievements of our own people would, in our opinion cause other racial groups to have more respect for us.

We realize that any such peace-time program as the erection of a monument will have to wait for the end of the war but we think that now is the time to plan such a movement and to get the enabling legislation while we have sympathetic heads in City Hall and in Albany.

Incidently, we think that Harlem could at the same time plan some honor to its Negro sons who are making the supreme sacrifice for their country. No lasting memorial was left to the soldiers of the last war, unless we count the armory which the city gave to the 369th Regiment of the National Guard, now in federal service as an anti-aircraft regiment. While the masses are making money now is the time for a committee to get busy and raise enough money to honor our returning soldiers and those who will be left on the battlefields of the world.

Now or Never

DEC 19 1942

THERE IS A LOT of talk and snide references to the Negro's demand for economic and political equality now instead of after the war. The reactionaries—the John Temple Graves, the Mark Etheridges, the Virginius Dabneys and others, aided and abetted by a handful of misguided, self-seeking Negro leaders—have advanced what they consider a potent argument based on the current war and the alleged unpatriotic attitude implied in these demands. They say the Negro and all minorities, including organized labor, should wait until after the war to make their demands.

They declare in so many words that, while the war is allegedly being fought to perpetrate the democratic ideal; that the freedom of all mankind is in the balance in the fight against Hitler and fascism, the realization of the fullness of such a state must necessarily be deferred; they imply that the actual application of the democratic ideal is secondary to the actual prosecution of the war. The Tories in England reinforce the American Bourbons. The Cliveden Set in London is in accord wtih the Cliveden Set in Washington. The appeasement process is evident everywhere. While the "peace in our time" element is less vocal today than in the days of Munich and Prime Minister Chamberlain, its activities have slackened in no respect.

Fortright policies on the equality question for the American Negro, the Indian and the other subjected peoples of the world have had little or no outright statement except in the framework of the Atlantic Charter, which is being interpreted by thinkers as extremely vague and shallow when it refers to the real subject, oppressed peoples—the Negro, the native African, the Chinese, the Indian and the serfs of Southern Europe. That is why there is such a concerted effort to hush-hush the loud demands of these minorities for immediate clarification of the principles for which they are asked to fight, not as a price of participation in the war, but as an augur of what they may expect when the peace comes.

DEC 19 1942

Graves, Dabney, Etheridge, Bilbo, Dixon, Talmadge, Bankhead and the others would center the blame on progressive Negro leadership for raising the race issue in the midst of a war for survival. They would stamp this Negro leadership as selfish and unpatriotic for asking embarrassing questions in the midst of lynchings, discrimination, rank segregation in the armed forces, in the war plans and, more still, in Washington, capital of the nation. They would make it appear that the Negro is the only minority that is making these demands; that all others are perfectly satisfied to go along. But this is a vicious lie. It is misleading. Not one word has been said by them of the "now or never" attitude of the Free French under DeGaulle on what they want done in France and in the French colonial empire as a price of their full participation in the campaign to liberate the mother country. Nothing is indicated by Graves & Co. of these disinherited sons of France, with an empire at stake, boldly raising the issue and standing firmly by it that Admiral Darlan must go if they are to continue in their present role as major troublemakers for the Axis in North Africa.

If the Free French, with their homeland at stake, can raise the issue of "clarification now," then the American Negro has just as much right, if not more, to thunder to the high heavens on his own case right here in the supposed citadel of the democratic ideal.

Gov. Dixon's Threat

Daily Worker, N.Y., N.Y.

DEC 17 1942

FEARFUL of the national support for President Roosevelt's anti-Jim Crow policies, Governor Dixon of Alabama has seen fit to issue a violent threat against the President and the nation.

Dixon, with reckless disregard for the war needs of the United States, has seen fit to tell the Commander-in-Chief that if he persists in enforcing the Constitution of the United States in the Southern states that the Dixon Democrats will break away from the Democratic Party.

He has even implied that he and his cohorts will not hesitate to use violence even to prevent the employment of Negro workers in war industry.

Governor Dixon and his clique are prepared apparently to sacrifice the safety of their country to Jim Crow, lynch prejudices of their minority group.

Governor Dixon's defiance of the Government is not the voice of the Southern people nor of their patriotic leaders. Dixon speaks for a small, but powerful clique which has been robbing millions of white Southerners and the Negro people of their American democratic rights for generations. He is the voice of the poll taxers who fear the voice of the Southern people.

Today, the enforcement of the American Constitution in Governor Dixon's state is no longer a "sectional" matter. It is a matter involving the safety of the whole country.

The defense of the outworn, un-democratic system in certain Southern states today spreads disunity, defeatism, and disruption of the war effort.

This is why the Hoover-Taft Republicans have been aiding the poll taxers in Congress, and echoing their cry of "states rights."

Dixon's threat to the President indicates that reactionary and defeatist forces are coalescing for widescale disruption. They are a real danger "from within."

All patriotic Americans, regardless of their party affiliations, need to rally against this unscrupulous coalition in united support of the President and his win-the-war policies.

Black Dispatch, Okla. City, Okla.

Should We "Improve," or Abolish Jim Crow?

DEC 26 1942

Sometime ago in this column we raised question marks regard the Durham Race Relations conference, held October 20, at which time Negroes from ten states met and outlined a basis for interracial cooperation in the South. Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, of Virginia Union university, Richmond, Virginia, was the keynote speaker, at which time Dr. Hancock averred a new charter of freedom would be drafted for Negroes below the Mason and Dixon line, that would be both "fraternalistic and scientific."

The formal statement issued by this conference group is published on page nine, this issue of the Black Dispatch, with Dr. Charles S. Johnson, director of social sciences, Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn., serving as chairman of the sub-editorial committee.

Following the Durham conference the Black Dispatch observed that such a conference at this time should have been composed of blacks and whites in order to lift the conference program out of the precincts of mere protest. We argued that action could only be taken when all parties in a particular political division had determined social, economic and political patterns, and we made the further observation that no commitment should be made by Negroes today that confined itself within the precincts of jim crow and segregation.

Following this criticism of the Durham conference we received a letter from Editor P. B. Young, chairman of the Durham conference, in which Editor Young expressly suggested that this writer's mind had been "clouded by your lack of information," and Editor Young inserted a paragraph from the call sent out July 27, which is herewith reproduced in part. It provides:

> "In this conference Negroes are to set forth in certain 'articles of cooperation,' just what they regard as the essentials of amicable race relations. These articles are to be submitted to a white conference looking forward to the same objective—avoiding the post war tensions by planning to meet the post-war situations."

It will be noted that Editor Young attempts to meet the criticism of the Black Dispatch by suggesting that after adopting the formula given publicity this week, it is the intention of the Race Relations group that met at Durham to secure the approval of a similar committee composed of representative white Southerners, and Dr. Hancock, in a letter forwarded recenly to the writer at Tuskegee, stresses the same point.

We have published this week the complete and exact text of the 'interracial proposal' as outlined by the Durham conference, so that our readers may make their own decision, as to whether we were wrong in our editorial criticism sometime ago, and we want our readers to examine the document to see whether or not in the scholarly written pronouncement there is evidence of willingness to be satisfied within the precincts of jim crow and segregation. It will be recalled we suggested fear that conservative leadership might make the fatal mistake, suggesting a truce on the vicious principles of duality below the Mason and Dixon line. We argued then and we say again that no voice should be heard today except a clarion ringing with honest and just approach to democracy.

Did the conferees who met at Durham remember during the session all of the sorrow of black folk, and all of the difficulties of the Southland as reflected in the lives of both black and white? Can visionful Negroes stand today on the fringes of freedom and forget basic causes of social difficulties? Is this the time to mumble and fumble with words ,or is it an hour when black leadership should speak out in understandable language about the things that ought to be. This is the measuring rod that should be placed on the Durham conference. This is what we shall attempt to do.

With this in mind we turn now to the official release, sent out this week by the Southern Race Relations Conference. We want to examine it to determine whether or not it adequately sets up the "essential principles of amicable race relations" in the South.

Paragraph two of the third objective set out by the statement reads as follows:

> "We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races, of classes or creeds, however, we regard it both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of the programs aimed at sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework."

Thorough examination of that one paragraph should, in our judgment, completely justify the previous position taken by the Black Dispatch. As we understand this statement those who subscribe to it say in so many words, "we are opposed to the priinciple of segregation in our American society, but we regard it as sensible and timely to address ourselves to methods by which we can work out some plan by which there can be 'improvement in jim crow' and less 'neglect' in administering segregation policies."

Now someone may argue that we are wrong in the interpretation, and we sincerely hope we are mistaken in our view; but why under high heaven would there be a reservation in the paraghaph condemning segregation? Why say immediately following assault upon compulsory segregation:

> "However, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to THE CURRENT PROBLEMS OF RACE DISCRIMINATION AND NEGLECT"?

The thin hair of demarkation between the patterns of segregation and the administration of these anti-social, undemocratic measures is hardly discernable, and it is hard to see just how one is going to condemn discrimination and neglect within the framework of jim crow and segregation, and at the same time forget the major social patterns making discrimination and neglect possible. How can "sound improvement of race relations" be established within the undemocratic precincts of duality?

Everyone is argeed today that there must come to the world a higher type of brotherhood. All of the slogans coined currently deal with a more ideal international morality. Shall American Negroes voluntarily agree to patch prejudice and race hate in an hour when millions of whites like Wendell Willkie shout from the hill tops that race prejudice must be obliterated and destroyed? Is the plan suggested by the Durham conference an attempt at objective thinking of free men, or is it more to be characterized as a temporary expedient, dealing with an emergency economy of slaves?

Negroes who speak now should be clear and definite on one issue. Do they believe in bi-racility in government or not. Do Negroes believe that there is any character of morality in a system that demotes citizenship status of minority groups? Does experience teach that such a program has ever worked for human euality? Negroes who talk now should address themselves to this viewpoint. It is inescapable today among all men of honor and integrity. We cannot afford to forget. This is the hour to remember!

The current experiences Negroes are having in travel over the nation prove conclusively that there can be no such thing as "sound improvment of race relations" within the framework of jim crow. The reason is obvious. Jim Crow is focal in the idea that one human being is better than another. Men must start thinking right before they act right. Men should never attemp to case new wine in old bottles.

We recall in 1920, when the Oklahoma Interracial Commission was organized in the First Methodist church, Oklahoma City, this writer blocked the report of the committee on findings for three hours because the white members of the committee wanted to report a basis for interracial cooperation without mentioning disfranchisement then rampant in Oklahoma. We said to that committee that we could never behind closed doors forget to safeguard for Negroes that principle in government we were continually espousing in the columns of the Black Dispatch. We said to forget it would be stupid and would make us wholly unfit for leadership. We forced the issue onto the floor of that convention at a time when conservative Negroes said "forget it just now."

The fact that Negroes vote in Oklahoma although a vicious registration law still remains on the statute books, and that residential segregation has been declared unconstitutional by our state supreme court, is a monument to the unrelenting, courageous spirit of Oklahoma Negroes, the mass of whom have never decided it is better to "tone up" and overhaul neglect and discrimination, rather than get rid of disfranchisement and segregation as principles in Oklahoma society.

DEC 26 1942

Our readers will of course read the plans outlined by the Southern Conference on Race Relations in its entirety, and while it covers a comprehensive field dealing with race relations, one should not lose sight of the fact that in the outset the signators sidestep the legal and customary patterns. In so many words it is agreed that the South's social sanctions must remain inviolate and that Negroes, while all the rest of the world cries for freedom, should be satisfied with restriction, dictation and an improved type of discrimination.

We may not have sufficiently convinced our readers that this is the clear intention of the Durham conferees and for that reason we call attention to section four, of the Durham statement, under the caption: "Political and Civil Rights":

DEC 26 1942

> "In public carriers and terminals where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that those provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance."

We are all agreed that every facility in travel should be equal for citizens in war and in peace, but the call for the conference suggests working out with white people the development of post-war situations, which causes us to inquire, IS IMPROVED JIM CROW AND PATCHED UP SEGREGATION THE BASIS UPON WHICH NEGRO LEADERS WILL SEEK THE ESSENTIALS OF AMICABLE POST-WAR RACE RELATIONS? Would there not have been more clarity of purpose and objective to have said "We believe bi-racial programs of government enacted into statutory law should be abrogated and set aside"? There would be no mistake about such a pronouncement, and it would be a statement adequately covering the need of America if democracy is to prevail.

One many occasion we have said that the spirit of the American Negro today is not up to the level of white liberalism. That is to say, white people are in many instances quite willing to grant Negroes many rights which Negroes fear to ask for.

Right in this issue of the Black Dispatch we publish on the front page a statement coming from white students in a Southern college condemning segregation and all forms of discrimination, and yet Negro leadership fails in many instances to possess the moral courage, positive statement and a definite race relations pattern in this hour when a new world order is forming.

DEC 26 1942

The Black Dispatch is opposed to jim crow, segregation, and all forms of demoted citizenship. There are thousands of liberal whites who today realize that racial chauvinism is fundamentally the weak point in our social order. We believe we have sufficiently stressed the weakness of the Durham statement in its lack of forthrightness and failure to stab at basic wrong in American life. Next week we shall discuss the failure of the document to declare itself on issues having to do with America as a whole. We have said many times that the American Negro's vision is too localized. We should keep in mind that white people have problems. We shall enlist their support in our difficulties in proportion as we show interest in theirs. In addition we shall also discuss the probability that the Durham meeting may prove the entering wedge dividing Northern and Southern Negroes. This should not happen.

"Treat Men Equal, Not Tolerantly"--Willkie

DEC 26 1942

Says Tolerance Is the Assumption of Superiority; Our Liberties Are the Equal Rights of Every Citizen

NEW YORK CITY, Dec. 24—"No man has the right in America to treat any other man 'tolerantly,' for tolerance is the assumption of superiority. Our liberties are the equal rights of every citizen."

These were the words of Wendell L. Willkie here this week, when at special ceremonies in his office, the Republican leader and champion of democracy in action, was presented with the 1942 award of the American Hebrew Medal for his "promotion of better understanding between Christians and Jews in America."

DEC 26 1942

In accepting the silver token Mr. Willkie deplored the use of the word "tolerance" in connection with the treatment of one group by another in this country.

"It is the right of every citizen in America to be treated by other citizens as an equal," he said.

ROOSEVELT VOTED FOR WILLKIE

Among the committee of judges for this year's award were President Roosevelt, Mayor LaGuardia and Governor Lehman. In his letter to the magazine President Roosevelt said:

DEC 26 1942

"I have gone over the suggested names for the 1942 award and I find it difficult to make a choice. But on the whole, I cast my vote for Honorable Wendell L. Willkie because he is working so consistently throughout this war and in other nations for tolerance and better understanding."

DEC 26 19

Joseph H. Biben, editor and publisher of the magazine praised Willkie's contribution to the "unity of peoples at home and abroad, by his speaking out boldly against discrimination, against minority baiting, and for national unity here and by carrying the mesasge of American goodwill all over the earth."

Segregation, the Issue

Dixons and Bonds Struggle for Lost Cause as the South Did for Slavery in 1861; the Modern Judge Taney; Roosevelt, Like Lincoln, Has Trump Card

DEC 19 1942

Two Southern white men of some prominence have declared recently that race segregation, rather than the four freedoms and democracy, is the American way of life.

Addressing the Southern Society of New York, Thursday, Governor Frank M. Dixon of Alabama (his uncle, Frank, wrote "The Clansman," glorifying the Ku Klux Klan) said that the entire South is built and can endure only on the principle of segregation (keeping the races apart by law, by trickery, or by force).

This is the same Governor Dixon who refused a government war contract for making cloth in Alabama penal institutions because of the stipulation that in fulfilling it, there was to be no discrimination on account of race, creed or national origins.

Dixon Attacks the President

DEC 19 1942

Dixon attacked President Roosevelt's program of using all available manpower to win the war, no matter what its race, and promoting all workers on the basis of merit as dynamiting the South, and likely to cause defeat of the next Democratic candidate for President.

Modern Judge Taney

Blast No. 2 is from Carroll Taney Bond, 69, bachelor, chief judge of the Maryland Court of Appeals, who in handing down a unanimous decision against colored people's using all Baltimore City golf courses, said: "Separation of the races is normal treatment in this State (Maryland)."

Judge Bond went out of his way to make that statement, as did another Marylander, Chief Justice Roger B. Taney of the United States Supreme Court in the famous Dred Scott case. These two Taneys have more in common than their names.

In 1857 the U.S. high court had to decide whether a slave had the right to sue for freedom in the Federal courts.

DEC 19 1942

Justice Taney said no and went further, denying to Congress any right to restrain slavery by law and uttered these fatal words: "The Negro has no rights which the white man is bound to respect."

Decision Helped to Cause the Civil War

That decision inflamed decent people and helped precipitate the Civil War.

Judge Bond could have decided the Baltimore golf case without the declaration that segregation of colored people is "normal," but like Justice Taney, he couldn't forbear getting into broader issues involving current political controversies in an effort to settle the segregation question once and for all.

To the contrary, all he does is to add fuel to the raging flames and convince thinking people that President Roosevelt was right some years ago in using every proper method to purge the U.S. high court of old men, out of step with the times.

Taney Reversed

Within a decade of old Justice Taney's infamous decision, the nation had reversed him in a civil war and soon adopted the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, declaring all persons born or naturalized in the U.S. to be citizens.

DEC 19 1942

That amendment also gave colored people equal rights, equal protection of the law, and sought to make that equality perfect by adding that no State shall by law abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens.

Whittling the Constitution

But the Taneys weren't satisfied, they killed a national Civil Rights Act, decreed that "equal" could mean "separate but equal," justifying segregation. They whittled it down further, saying that "equal" could mean "substantially equal" that is less than equal in some respects.

Today, Carroll Bond, the Taney of our day, takes another slice out of the Constitution by declaring that segregation is normal in Maryland.

1942 Like 1861

The Bonds, the Dixons and the Ethridges are battling as hard for segregation as the South battled for slavery in 1861.

When Lincoln proclaimed Emancipation the South furiously declared him a baboon, an obscene clown, who was inciting Negroes to kill, burn and rape white men, women and children at night.

The Bonds and the Dixons haven't called President Roosevelt names (publicly) yet. Dixon accuses F. D. R. of trying to destroy the South and break up the Democratic party.

DEC 19 1942

Roosevelt and Lincoln

To keep the record clean, President Roosevelt hasn't said anything about ending segregation. What he did say was that in order to win the war, all workers must be employed and promoted according to their ability.

That was Lincoln's idea, too. His first purpose was to win the war. But with the McClellan defeats in 1862, Lincoln called his cabinet together. This is what he said:

"Things have gone from bad to worse, until I feel that we have reached the end of our rope . . . We have about played our last card and must change our tactics or lose the game. I now determine upon the policy of Emancipation. . ."

Freeing the slaves was Lincoln's last trump. It provided the Union with the moral enthusiasm and the manpower to win the war.

DEC 19 1942

The Trump Card

Emancipating the colored people today from segregation, the present-day slavery, can provide the nation again with the international prestige to galvanize China, India and Africa in the Allied cause. And it can give us at home and on the field of battle that crusading elevation of the spirit which has enabled Nazi and Japanese nations to conquer Europe and overrun the South Seas.

It is important to remember that Lincoln didn't play his trump card in the first year of the war, but in the second. President Roosevelt knows what is trumps and he's just beginning the second year of this war.

Willkie Gives Defender Message For Negroes

DEC 12 1942

By HARRY McALPIN

NEW YORK—A grave plea to the American Negro not "to grow cynical in view of some of the abuses he suffers" was expressed by Wendell Willkie, top Republican leader, in an exclusive interview with the Chicago Defender here this week.

Speaking to a Negro newspaper representative for the first time since his return from a round-the-world trip, the 1940 presidential candidate squarely discussed the Negro problem and offered a program and attitude for the Negro to adopt to attain integration into American life.

"From the standpoint of what the American Negro should do, I always think that those who give most in time of basic struggle, always receive most," Willkie declared.

Urges Giving

Talking in the hoarse voice, by now well known to millions of American as the champion of democracy the world over, Willkie added:

"True, the Negro has suffered much. But the more he gives, the more chance he has to remove those things under which he has suffered."

More Yearn To Be in the Money Than Yearn To Be in the Social Register

By ROBERT QUILLEN.

When the stationing of northern Negro troops in the south led to conflict and death, an effort was made to have them moved. Negro leaders opposed this, saying it would be "unbearable segregation."

When agitators used the word "segregation," it seems to mean a policy invented in the south to keep colored people in one place. But in truth it is as old as human history and as universal as snobbery, and nowhere is it limited to one race.

In New York the Negroes are segregated in Harlem, but there is a further segregation. A talented Negro poet, who was lionized in Russia, said in one of his books that numbers of prominent white people in New York had invited him to their homes, but the rich Negroes in Harlem had completely ignored him. These rich ones segregate themselves in one district of fine homes, and the poor, who are segregated in slums, can never hope to enter one of those homes except as servants.

The government segregates Negroes every time it builds decent homes or apartments for them. Why isn't it resented? Because the colored people are glad to have exclusive possession of a district if the houses are better than they or poor white people could rent anywhere else.

Poverty and wealth segregate people, and always have, and probably always will. Every town has a region "on the wrong side of the track." There isn't a city in America where the poor are not segregated by their poverty and the rich segregated and insulated in a "restricted" district that doesn't permit cheap buildings. Even the government recognized this arrangement by refusing to lend money to build a fine house in a poor district or where its value might be hurt by future shacks.

Do Liberals oppose segregation? The most starry-eyed idealist among them lives among his "own kind," and every eloquent reformer in the lot groans under a burden of high rent rather than live in a "poor neighborhood."

There is a great deal of hypocritical tommyrot in this matter. Uplifters preach brotherly equality—and other people—but they herd with their own class. All Americans believe in equality, but they usually mean equality with their betters.

The human race is snobbish, and not likely to be changed by law. We'll do more good if we labor to abolish poverty and give everybody an equal opportunity to prosper, and let each group remain as "exclusive" as its taste requires.

THIS MORNING

by JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES, II

"The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States . . ."

* * *

The fact that common sense is calling for international government after the war gives more, not less, logic to the Southern call for "states' rights" when it is genuine and not just a thing to protect selfishness and backwardness. The only international government which can succeed or which we would want to succeed is one which will let Americans still be Americans, still settle their peculiarly national programs in their own way, still have local self-government. We want no total international state, and neither do we want a total national state. We want in each instance a recognition of the sound principle of local self-government to the limits of practicability. And that, when it is honest, is what the cry for "states' rights" means. It is no more antiquated than is federalism. Both have come down to us from the past and each, in balance with the other, is essential to our free system.

* * *

That the current stress on states' rights in the South should be attacked on a basis of being out of keeping with the times is an illustration of how little some of us appreciate the times are keeping and promising, how little we sense the gathering issue between the free way and the controlled way in our American living.

* * *

In criticism of those who are lifting the "states' rights" cry now, it is necessary to call one's shots. Increased centralization of government as science and machinery make our world smaller and smaller and relate us each to the other more and more has been as indispensable as the installation of traffic lights, and Southerners who are still opposing it and hoping to have done with it are indeed behind the times. Then, too, there is an element among those who cry "states' rights" which is interested not in rights of the states but in rights of clients or friends to be let alone in unsocial activities. Southerners who have only this at heart are in very truth to be told that their day is done. But there is nothing either selfish or out-of-date about honest talk of states' rights now as one expression of local government for a people whose freedom is indeed threatened by centralizing God-players who want to take over every sparrow in the universe to see that it neither falls nor flies wrong.

* * *

Senators Bankhead and Hill have chosen wisely, it seems to us, in giving their endorsement to Clarence Mullins for the new federal judgeship in the Northern District of Alabama. Able, ambitious, trained in the public point of view and devoted to the law as a true profession, Mr. Mullins should be equal to the great task in every respect. The fact that he has a world of friends makes it certain that this crown to a lawyer's life will come to him to the tune of much affection and congratulation.

* * *

Editor Hamner Cobbs, of The Greensboro Watchman, sends us a piece from The Pittsburgh Courier, leading Negro paper, bitterly attacking us for a recent article in The Virginia Quarterly Review. "As you see from the language of this piece," he writes. "It is all or nothing with that crowd. The man who goes part of the way with them gets no more appreciation than does the confirmed 'reactionary,' such as myself." That is true, Hamner, but what is the answer? As a newspaper man constantly growing older and wiser, you must have reached the point now where you know that for your very wisest and most mature expressions you must look to heaven alone for appreciation. On the Negro matter we propose to continue going "part of the way" with the colored people no matter how much we are damned by the reactionaries. And we propose to face the facts on the distance that can be gone no matter how the radicals rave.

* * *

"I urge you most earnestly," declares Director Eastman, of the Office of Defense Transportation, "before you purchase a travel ticket or board a bus or train, to consider if you really need to make that trip. If you cannot answer that question in the affirmative, please do not go." Noting which, guess who Editor Chapman, of The Roanoke Times thinks ought to have it pinned on her dresser. That's right. You guessed it! Mrs. Roosevelt.

* * *

These are the days when proponents of the free life and proponents of the controlled one are each calling the other old-fashioned. Talk of competition, local self-government and such things seems horse-and-buggy stuff to people whose ideas of modernity are the ones prevailing when this war began. Talk of controlled economy, more and more New Dealing and the necessity of new centralizing seems equally horse-and-buggy to people whose ideas of modernity are based on experiences, reactions and clarifications the war has brought.

Race Fights In New York

The New York Herald Tribune of November 26 devotes almost a column of its space to telling of rowdyism and friction existing in one of the numeraus public schools, the trouble being occasioned by mixing white and colored pupils.

After describing how one colored pupil threw a rock through the window of an automobile occupied by a teacher, Mrs. Edith Strong, and saying that the boy "had a very bad temper," the Herald Tribune article goes on to say:

"According to Mrs. Strong, who has been a physical training teacher for twenty-four years, a lot of other boys in the school, both white and Negro, have equally bad tempers. Things have got so out of hand recently, it was said, that the teachers have been directing traffic through the corridors between class changes. The idea is to get all the pupils into their classrooms as quickly as possible, otherwise numerous fist fights break out in the halls and strong, impolite language is used."

Then the article goes on to describe the fight which culminated in the rock being thrown through the window of the teacher's car and how the matter finally reached the courts, where the mother of the boy who threw the rock was held in $200 bail when she become involved in the row.

In the court trial it developed that the division between white and colored pupils is about fifty-fifty and that fights are numerous, with feeling between the races running high.

The situation is interesting because it arises in New York, where so many persons know so well how the race problem should be handled and are ever ready to tell the South what it should do. These persons would break down segregation laws in the South and cause white and colored pupils to attend the same schools, yet in their own community may observe how badly such arrangements work.

The truth is, of course, that racial preferences are universal and that geographical limits have no relation to it. These preferences are based upon ingrained sentiments which no amount of legislation will remove and trying to wipe them out in this country is quite as foolish and quite as vain as would be an effort to wipe out such feelings between the various tribes of India.

Yet instead of recognizing the deep-seated nature of these inborn feelings relating to race, many so-called "reformers" who love to meddle with the affairs of other people, insist on trying to mix white and black, indifferent to the fury that such steps create.

Negro boys and girls in New York's public schools obviously do not wish to mingle with white pupils and are so enraged over it that they keep the school in a turmoil. Then why try such mixtures? Why shouldn't everybody, including fool "reformers," be willing for white and colored, red and yellow, to flock to themselves if they so desire?

Booker T. Washington, one of the greatest of all Negro leaders, had the right idea about this thing of racial pride and racial rights. He believed that members of the Negro race had much to be proud of and should not be ashamed of being a member of this race. He also expressed the view that the members of the Negro race, as well as of other races, should be too proud to intrude upon the members of other races. That was a sane view and one which should prevail now, even among the "reformers" who know so well how racial affairs in the South should be run but who know so little about how to run them right in their own communities, like New York.

Mississippi Cashes In

NOV 14 1942

REPRESENTATIVE John Rankin, of Mississippi, hardly misses a speech-a-day on the "peril to white supremacy" in the New Deal and in the War Administration.

One of his latest diatribes describes how Negroes in his State who are too illiterate to serve in the armed forces are being left at home while "the draft is absolutely stripping our homes, our industries and our farms of our white young men."

He implored Congress to pass a law which would make it mandatory upon the War Administration to take every able-bodied illiterate Negro and place him in a labor battalion.

The situation is one, which, unfortunately for Mr. Rankin, cannot be solved according to his formula. But it should cause him to reflect upon how Mississippi has missed its opportunity to have the Negro young men "drained off by the draft."

NOV 14 1942

Mississippi has kept many of its Negroes illiterate by the simple method of not furnishing them good schools to attend, and by making conditions so bad that they couldn't attend the poor schools they have had.

Mississippi is a poor State, of course, and, as a result, it is bad in many respects. If that were not so a man of Mr. Rankin's mentality would not be in Congress. But Mississippi, with such resources as the State has at its command could do better in the way of educating its Negro children.

It Had To Be Said

Frank Dixon, able and forthright governor of Alabama, probably didn't care much for the job at hand when he publicly branded federal attacks on the segregation system of the South.

A maimed hero of the First World War and an American whose patriotism has never wavered, he must have regretted the necessity of declining on behalf of the State a federal contract because he was unwilling to subject Alabamians to the tender mercies of those radical fools who would force a second reconstruction upon us.

56K

But Frank Dixon knew that, through no fault of his own, the South had been driven into a position into which some person with authority must speak.

It so happened that the issue c to Alabama. Her chief execu stood firm.

No ator, no demagogue, Frank L on spoke bluntly to the point. He spoke not only for himself, but for the millions of the South.

Those who know Alabama's governor know that he does not speak without weighing his words. He will stand on the position he has taken, and the people of the South will stand with him.

BIG PETITION ASKS CHECK ON DIXIE BLOC

DEC 26 1942

Dies, Talmadge Named As Leaders Of Pro-Fascist Effort

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—President Roosevelt was urged in a petition this week to use his war time authority to check the activities of a small but influential group of w te southerners who are charged with attempting to incite bitterness between the races.

The petition, circulated by the Southern Negro Youth Congress and carrying more than a thousand signatures, specifically named Horace Wilinson, Gessner T. McCorvey, Gov. Frank M. Dixon, Rep. Joseph Stearns, Martin Dies and Ex-Gov. Eugene Talmadge as leaders of what was described as a pro-fascist movement.

The petition accused these men of leading attacks on labor, provoking violence against Negroes, organizing phoney "grass roots" opposition to the rationing and price fixing system—all in a mad effort to discredit the President's leadership.

It charged that these men are motivated by a fear of social legislation and political reforms (such as the abolition of the poll tax) which are being born in the course of the war and which operate to undermine their reactionary grip on the national life.

The statement declared that these men have grown in their boldness and that the security of the country and the success of the war effort demands that they be removed from political life.

Further stating that their actions in organizing Leagu for White Supremacy has already linked them with the Hitler enemy and has branded them with lurid marks of traitor, the itioners called for an offensive on the part of the administration to root out and destroy this group.

Louis E. Burnham, secretary of the Southern Negro Youth Congress, in a letter to the President which accompanied the petition, wrote in part:

"When this petition was originally drafted and submitted for the approval of the general public, this past August, the first bugle call in this subversive campaign had just been sounded.

DEC 26 1942

"A Birmingham attorney, Horace Wilkinson, had publicly endorsed "Hitler's Aryan 'theories' by calling for the organization of a League for White Supremacy; the Governor of Alabama, Frank M Dixon, in defiance of a Presidential order, had refused in the name of his state a Federal contra for the manufacture of tenting cloth for the army and called for a revolt against the 'whims' of federal authority; the Governor of Georgia, Eugene Talmadge—recently redited by the voters of his state—had reached the odorous heights of his campaign against the citizenship rights and security of Negro Georgians.

"It was the hope of many Americans—white and Negro, Northerners and Southerners,—that this exhibition of callous disregard for the essential unity of our nation-at-war was merely an isolated aberration from the norm of high patriotism which characterizes the vast majority of all our citizens in every walk of life.

"Events have since shown that such a hope was ill-founded. The expectation that the attacks against the rights of Negro people, the flaunting of federal authority, the spreading of the divisive seeds of racial friction, would cease on their own accord, has been dashed to pieces by the intensified and more bold activity of the self-styled white supremacists."

Rights And Duties In A Democracy

56

By LUTHER P. JACKSON

Nov. 24/1942

FAILING TO ATTAIN FULL FLEDGED CITIZENSHIP

CITIZENSHIP is defined as membership in a political community. In the United States citizenship is very easy to obtain for under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment mere birth in this country endows the individual with it. The poor are citizens as well as the rich, Negroes as well as whites, and children of aliens born in America as well as the native born. Citizenship is a boon to every individual in that it confers certain civil rights, the chief of which are the right to acquire and sell property, to make and enforce contracts, and to sue and be sued. Every citizen enjoys these rights and these privileges regardless of his station in life.

DR. JACKSON

From this purely legal point of view all citizens are equal, from a social point of view they are not equal. Some individuals are considered as good citizens, others as bad citizens; some as worthy, others as unworthy.

ACTIVITY VS. CITIZENSHIP

Some persons are rated as citizens in terms of church membership, property ownership, or the amount of education they have acquired. Church members, property owners, and the educated are given a higher ranking by society than non-church members, non-property owners, or the uneducated.

Thus many Negroes have been pronounced model citizens by members of both races simply because they were active in the church, had acquired property and a bank account, or had finished school or college.

American society must have its good citizens — church members, property owners and persons with an education. American society must also have its good citizens in full possession of certain civil rights—the right to own and sell property, to make and enforce contracts, to sue and be sued.

WHAT IS NEEDED

But good citizens who are in possession of civil rights are not enough; we must also have full fledged citizens who are in possession of their political rights. The right to vote and the right to hold office are political rights, and the group who are without them are not full fledged citizens. Good citizenship is a condition which all persons must seek to attain, but society is ruled and governed by that group which has attained full fledged citizenship.

WHAT MAKES A CITIZEN

Full democracy comes only when a group has attained full fledged citizenship. It goes without saying that the Negroes in Virginia and throughout the South are not full fledged citizens because so many of them do not pay poll taxes, and if they do pay them, they fail to register and vote.

Cumberland County, Virginia has 2,052 good, bad, worthy, and unworthy Negro citizens, but only 43 full fledged citizens; Greensville County has 4,025 varied citizens, but only 91 full fledged citizens.

These counties, and all others in Virginia and the South like them, may forever remain backward for Negroes if their thousands of good citizens do not make themselves full fledged citizens.

LISTEN AMERICA

Dedicated to "Listen America Week" of the A. K. A. Sorority.

Nov. 28, 1942

ALL Americans must know this week that the past of the Negro is no different from the past of all other races and nationalities in our country. All races have started from the bottom and worked to the top. In the field of labor the Caucasian or European has passed through the stages of slavery, serfdom, free hired labor, tenantry, and land ownership.

DR. JACKSON

For five-hundred years slavery was the order of the day throughout the Roman Empire, for one thousand years following serfdom was the order of the day throughout Europe, and for another five-hundred years semi-freedom was the condition in which most laborers found themselves. Complete freedom came only in the 19th century. We have heard much about the emancipation of the Negro; we have heard little about the emancipation of the white man at different periods and stages in his upward struggle.

Nov. 28, 1942

OPPRESSION HEAPED UPON ALL PEOPLE

Oppression has been heaped upon the Negro, and so has oppression been heaped upon all people. The nobility or landed gentry of Europe crushed the peasants, Catholics persecuted the Protestants, Protestants persecuted the Catholics, and Christians exiled the Jews. So severe did oppression become in the 17th century that thousands of the peasants and artisans fled from their native European land to the wilderness of America where they might start life over again.

Poverty fell to the lot of many, and for petty crimes committed the common people of American society were punished by 39 lashes on the bare back, by cropping the ears, by branding in the hands, and by public confinement in the pillory and stocks. In coming to America many of these unfortunate people (white people) sailed by way of a middle passage and entered a system of bondage in this country hardly less severe than the middle passage of the blacks from Africa and the system of bondage which they entered.

Nov. 28, 1942

In Africa the Negroes experienced the same suffering as the whites in Europe. Negroes oppressed Negroes, as whites oppressed whites. Negro chiefs of tribes enslaved their captives in war in much the same way as Romans enslaved the Greeks and all other people of Europe. Finally just as whites were kidnapped and driven out of Europe, so were the blacks stolen and driven out of Africa. In both cases life in the wilderness of America was begun in a state of dependence and was followed by freedom and emancipation, first for the whites and later for the blacks.

SACRIFICES NECESSARY

Advancement has been made by white and black alike because of the ever-increasing democratic philosophy of our government. One measure of democracy came with the American Revolution, another came with the Civil War. Democracy is ever before us but it functions for Negroes, as for whites, only when they make the sacrifice necessary to make it function. In the Southland this means paying the poll tax, finding the registrar to register, and going to the polls to vote.

Nov. 28, 1942

If Negroes in Virginia and elsewhere will only struggle now to achieve political democracy, here again they will find themselves repeating the experience of the whites, who again and again in American History staged a fight to secure and maintain it. America will surely listen if the Negroes will only have America listen.

Citizens Take A Firm Stand For Non-Appeasement

Pittsburg Courier
Pittsburg Pa
Dec. 26, 1942

"Uncle Tom may not be dead but his life hangs by a thread, his days are numbered, his race is run, death knocks at the door and his doom is sealed." Thus spoke a prominent Atlanta, Ga., business man when approached by The Pittsburgh Courier Bureau of Public Sentiment this week on whether Negroes should remain loyal to white 'friends' in the South who refuse to renounce segregation.

ALMOST 8 OUT OF 10 SAID "NO"

And his answer seemed to be the consensus of opinion since colored America, as a whole, answered "NO" 76.7 per cent of the time; "YES" 19.2 per cent of the time while only 4.1 per cent were uncertain.

After the proposition was put to a cross-section of the population, the following results were shown:

Dec. 26, 1942

In the South where the answers were naturally controversial, 64.4 per cent said "NO" and 30.6 per cent said "YES." On a nationwide basis the women were most positive in renouncing their alleged friends as they voted not to remain loyal to whites who refused to take a stand against "jimcrowism" to the tune of 85.2 per cent. However, 74.2 per cent of the men felt the same way.

56K

A COMPLETE CROSS-SECTION SAMPLED

This week's return represents the most complete cross-section sampling of opinion ever conducted among the race populace. The question was plainly stated and only a "yes" or "no" answer was required. Citizens answered as individuals and not as organizations. The defense worker, the teacher, the soldier, the housewife, the doctor, the business man, the student and the so-called "man in the street" . . . all responded without pressure, intimidation or previous build-up.

The result was an honest answer on a debatable subject by men and women who are affected. Not an answer was controlled by a segment of race leaders or dependent public institutions.

Many Negroes were articulate in justifying their responses. Here is a pro-con condensation.

"THOSE WHO REFUSE ARE NOT REAL FRIENDS"

These said "NO" . . . "Live among them if we have to, but loyalty, no" . . . "They won't denounce segregation . . . and I don't think we have much loyalty for them anyway" . . . "If these so-called white friends refuse, then they are not our friends."

"Why does the Negro continue to compromise. Since these southern whites oppose us there is nothing to be gained by appeasement or 'Uncle Tomism.' Put our goal at full integration into American life and let it stay there. To demand less will only make others distain us . . . and justifiably so."

DOMESTIC CANNOT UNDERSTAND WEAKNESS

Another pertinent comment came from a New York domestic worker: "Why should men living in a supposedly free democracy be loyal to Hitlerites who deny them the privileges which rightfully belong to them. I for one cannot understand such weakness."

An Alabama college student said: "If the war aim of this nation is complete freedom from oppression for all minorities, why is it that some people, Negroes included, feel that we must have separate war aims for the South. Either democracy exists in the South or Fascism exists there and now is a good time to straighten the whole question out, social patterns or no social patterns."

56K

THE OPPOSITION IS HEARD FROM

Dec. 26, 1942

From the other side came, "Yes, remain loyal to our white southern friends, even though they will not denounce segregation." And here are the reasons:

"Be loyal to every person but always contend for justice." "The South's proverbial traditions and social patterns cannot be changed over night. We must not handicap our southern white friends."

"Disloyalty on the Negro's part could but serve to increase resentment and friction" . . . "One-half a loaf is better than none" . . . "We should respect his tradition until he can be convinced of his hypocrisy."

56K

They continue: "Be loyal to every person. But contend for justice at all times" . . . "The change will be very gradual and the southern white man should be given time." And so it went.

Next week's question: "Do you believe there is more segregation and discrimination now than there was before the war started?"

"Exclusive"

BY ROBERT QUILLEN

When the stationing of Northern Negro troops in the South led to conflict and death, an effort was made to have them moved. Negro leaders opposed this, saying it would be "unbearable segregation."

56K

When agitators used the word "segregation," it seems to mean a policy invented in the South to keep colored people in one place. But in truth it is as old as human history and as universal as snobbery, and nowhere is it limited to one race.

In New York the Negroes are segregated in Harlem, but there is a further segregation. A talented Negro poet, who was lionized in Russia, said in one of his books that numbers of prominent white people in New York had invited him to their homes, but the rich Negroes in Harlem had completely ignored him. These rich ones segregate themselves in one district of fine homes and the poor, who are segregated in slums, can never hope to enter one of those homes except as servants.

The government segregates Negroes every time it builds decent homes or apartments for them. Why isn't it resented? Because the colored people are glad to have exclusive possession of a district if the houses are better than they or poor white people could rent anywhere else.

Poverty and wealth segregate people, and always have, and probably always will. Every town has a region "on the wrong side of the track." There isn't a city in America where the poor are not segregated by their poverty and the rich segregated and insulated in a "restricted" district that doesn't permit cheap buildings. Even the government recognized this arrangement by refusing to lend money to build a fine house in a poor district or where its value might be hurt by future shacks.

56K

Do liberals oppose segregation? The most starry-eyed idealist among them lives among his "own kind," and every eloquent reformer in the lot groans under a burden of high rent rather than live in a "poor neighborhood."

There is a great deal of hypocritical tommyrot in this matter. Uplifters preach brotherly equality—for other people—but they herd with their own class. All Americans believe in equality, but they usually mean equality with their betters.

The human race is snobbish, and not likely to be changed by law. We'll do more good if we labor to abolish poverty and give everybody an equal opportunity to prosper and let each group remain as "exclusive" as its taste requires.

Negroes and Jews

AUG 22 1942

TO THE STATEMENT of Samuel Barron in the current issue of the Jewish Survey that "the Jewish people are faced with physical annihilation" we could add that the Negro faces social and economic destruction while the Anti-Semites both here and abroad are waging a planned and unceasing campaign of extermination of the Jew, Anti-Negro forces in the United States, North and South, and in the British Isles, are tirelessly about their business of further economic strangulation and exploitation of the black man everywhere.

The Negro, with a population of 13 million, is the largest minority group in the United States, and there are over 250,000,000 black folk scattered throughout the world. There are 17,000,000 Jews in the world with 4,770,647 in this country. The Negro and the Jew, because of their race and religion, and the unsocial attitudes of the majority race toward them, are constantly under pressure and attack.

AUG 22 1942

Dr. Lawrence D. Reddick, curator of the Schomburg Collection of Negro Literature in the New York Public Library, and lecturer on Negro history at the College of the City of New York, has written intelligently on the Negro-Jewish question in the Negro Quarterly, Summer 1942 issue. He says:

"To a man from Mars it must seem strange and tragically ironic that the Jewish and Negro peoples on plant Earth are not allies. The Martian observer sees the Jews kicked about in Germany and the Negroes kicked about in Georgia; and yet both Jew and Negro insist upon the privilege of facing their doom separately, whereas together they could stand and fight. . . . The literature of discussion on the 'Jewish Problem' may contain a few scattered references to the Negro, but where is there to be found any direct, frontal and consistent consideration based upon the premise that essentially the 'Jewish struggle' and the 'Negro struggle' are one? Surely not in the current Jewish publications. Even on an issue as abvious and basic as anti-Negroism among Jews, the available literature . . . does not yield so much as a single magazine article. . . . In Negro life and letters the situation is just as bad. From time to time anti-Semitism is discussed, allusions to the positive efforts of the Jewish people are made, but nowhere has serious attention been given to the possibilities of joint action. Worst of all, we must admit that there is anti-Negroism among Jews and anti-Semitism among Negroes. This truth is awful and we may hate to confess it, but nothing at all can be done to stamp out these growths, if we, ostrich-like, bury our heads in the sands of silence."

II

AUG 22 1942

To us it does seem strange and tragically ironic as to Dr. Reddick's "Man from Mars" that the Negro and the Jew do not get together and unite their efforts to meet a common enemy aimed at destroying or enslaving both races. Instead, there is mutual fear, hatred and distrust in both races, the flames of which are fanned constantly by enemies of both groups inside and outside.

The old Roman policy of dividing and ruling endures even today as the dominant groups pit minorities against minorities and sub-divide them again and again into smaller warring groups. With Hitler making extermination of the Jew the No. 1 item on his agenda for the world and with demagogues in the United States, Africa, the West Indies and wherever black men are found, steam-rolling the Negro under systematized exploitation and economic strangulation, it is lamentable that thinking persons of the Jewish and Negro races do not unite their forces for their own self preservation.

Throughout history, the Negro and Jew have been linked as the target of majority races. The Negro and the Jew have been sold into actual slavery. Both races have been pressed to the wall in the various nations to which they were transplanted or migrated; both have been tried by the fire of hell and both have survived only to fight each other or to stand passively by while the other is being and has been oppressed.

III

AUG 22 1942

Rabbi Harry Essrig, writing in the Jewish Survey, points out that "Jews and Negroes in waging the current decisive struggle against Fascist slavery will rejoice in discovering that this is not the first time they have joined hands in battle for racial equality. The cause of freedom and citizenship for the Negro masses in this country has time an again enlisted the warm support of Jewish leaders. Particularly was this manifest in the days before the Emancipation Proclamation, when the blight of human slavery challenged the conscience of every self-respecting individual. Few of our people are familiar with the fact that three Jewish volunteers rallied to John Brown's colors when he, inflamed with the burning hatred of slavery, embarked on his 'divine mission' to prevent that institution from becoming permanently rooted in the new Kansas. The Jewish triumvirate that threw in its lot with that of John Brown, during the hectic and tense struggle of 1854-57 which was to seal the fate of Kansas, consisted of August Bondi, Theodore Weiner and Jacob Benjamin."

Yet, in spite of the acts of these Jewish zealots on the question of eliminating slavery in the United States, there today exists a situation between the Negro and the Jew that defiies analysis. As Dr. Reddick points out, Negroes have in many instances adopted a set of hostile attitudes toward the Jewish people as do other Americans, and in the same manner, Jews show approximately the same bias against Negroes as do others.

IV

AUG 22 1942

Anti-Jewish sentiment among Negoes, Dr. Reddick points out, is based upon certain rather definite areas of competition and conflict. These arise, he says, "in the main from the face to face contacts with the landlord, the merchant, the employer of domestic labor, and, to lesser degree, the professional man."

The still acute housing problem, he notes, aided by residential restrictive covenants and "lilywhite" agreements among property owners, keep Negroes packed into Ghettos and "black belts" throughout the country. The belief is widespread among Negroes that the majority of the landlords to whom they pay rent are Jewish. Add to this the prevalent disregard of attention to needed repairs and other services by landlords, whom the Negro renter is sure are Jewish, and the fact emerges that a situation exists that can only add to the wrong impression of the Jewish race as a whole.

High prices and inferior quality of merchandise, stale bread, rotten meats and fruits, second class this and second class that, plus short weights and penny short changing, works against the Jew in popular Negro thought. The question of domestic labor is another significant phase of any attention the Negro pays to efforts to stir him to a feeling of Anti-Semitism. "The tales the domestic laborers tell follow a similar pattern; they are worked to the maximum under rigid supervision," Dr. Reddick points out, and he might add, at a very low rate of pay.

V

AUG 22 1942

On the other hand, Anti-Negroism among Jews is no idle comment. The upperclass Jew sees no connection between his racial struggle and that of the Negro. This, despite Julius Rosenwald and other philanthropists who have done creditable work among the Negro masses. Whether Anti-Negroism among Jews stems from the fact that the Jew is economically better off than the black man, is a moot question, as is the natural antipathy minorities have for each other, especially when stimulated by outside agitation and rumor designed to pit them against the other. The apparent selfishness of the Jew in making his position tenable in the war we all are fighting, is seen in the news releases and statements from various organizations with which he is identified. Mostly these statements and news releases loudly cry out against discrimination "based on race and religion," but seldom, if at all, is "color" added to the statement and thus inclusion of the Negro.

AUG 22 1942

It seems that the Negro and the Jews have adopted a policy of armed neutrality on the matter of mutual cooperation for the good of both races. This should not be. God knows both races are in a bad fix, which will be worse if Hitler wins. The Jews, facing physical annihilation; the Negro, social and economic destruction, could well afford to rid themselves of adopted prejudices and band together on a common front for the well-doing of all. Such a step is well within the realm of possibility. For common hate, more than all other human emotions, join men together; and hatred for the Axis forces at work in this country and abroad to exterminate minority groups should be the common bond that will bring these two great people together in their joint struggle to survive.

DIXON'S POPULARITY INCREASES

SEP 20 1942

At the close of the gubernatorial term of office, the popularity of the retiring chief executive almost always reaches a low ebb. The causes of this recurring phenomena are obvious. The retiring chief shortly will be without power to grant favors; during a four-year term, no governor can please everybody; the public all too often remembers the mistakes of an administration, rather than its accomplishments.

5-6-X

The esteem in which the people of the state hold Gov. Frank Dixon, however, is growing, not declining—as his term of office nears an end. One difference between a politician and a statesman, is that a statesman carries out his campaign promises after he is elected. In this respect Frank Dixon has made a near 100 per cent record. Dixon has given the state the most progressive business administration in its history. Dixon has led the fight to preserve the imperiled rights of state government from the constant attack of federal bureaucrats, who wish to centralize control of everything and of everybody in Washington.

SEP 20 1942

Dixon has met every state obligation, paid off millions of dollars of old state debts, and for the first time in the state's history, is leaving a surplus of millions of dollars for his successor!

Dixon had the courage to end the spoils system and inaugurate a merit system for state employes. The merit system may be improved and amended, but Frank Dixon has freed Alabama from vote buying by wholesale job promising.

SEP 20 1942

Dixon's popularity is due in no small part to his personality. He greets his visitors with genuine warmth, listens attentively, and his inherent human kindness is apparent.

The people of Alabama are losing an outstanding executive with Dixon's retirement. He is by far too valuable to be allowed to remain in private life. The public will demand his services again 'ere long, and this, the most popular man in Alabama, will be drafted to serve in some high capacity.—Cullman Democrat.

Race Issue Acute

Editor, The Telegraph and News:

To the readers of The Telegraph and the voters of the state of Georgia, I dedicate this article, as a reminder of the old South and Southern traditions.

I quote from Bethany, page 73, by Thomas E. Watson, immortal son of the state of Georgia, and one of the greatest lawyers, statesmen, orators, authors and historians the world has ever known, The Sage of McDuffie.

Scene: A political barbecue about 1860 at Bethany. Speakers, Bob Tombs and Alex Stephens.

Tombs speaking: "And where is the idiot who doesn't know that if you give the Negro civil and political equality you cannot deny him social equality? Do you want social equality in the South?"

This time there were no handclaps, no yells—only a silence of intense feeling. Like a clarion, the voice of Toombs rang out in the stillness.

"Social equality? Yes, and there's a deeper hell than even that into which these mad men would plunge us. It is miscegenation!"

"Oh, Toombs, mind what you say. What is your authority for that?" It was Mr. Stephens interrupting in a voice of remonstrance.

So great was the excitement in the crowd that women rose from their seats and the pressure of the men towards the stand was tremendous. Toombs did not halt nor hesitate.

"What is my authority? My honorable friend demands authority. He shall have it. Wendell Phillips is the Peter the Hermit of this abolition crusade. What does he say?

"Of miscegenation he says that 'it is God's own method of crushing out the hatred of race, and of civilizing and elevating the world."

"Henry Beecher, brother to her who wrote Uncle Tom's Cabin—what does he say?"

"Discussion of this very question of intermarriage between whites and blacks, he declares 'that every great nation has been married into its greatness by the union of many stocks. By and by the Negro of the South, growing paler with every generation, will at last completely hide his face under the snow."

I quote from a speech of Sumner Wells, under-secretary of state and spokesman for the New and really kill these dictators.
down for a while and let them go Democracy, doctor it looks like to me we may better close them about saving the University and Deal, made at Arlington National cemetery. He said: "Our victory must bring in its train the liberation of all peoples. Discrimination between peoples 'because of their race, creed or color, must be abolished."

Also read some of Mrs. Roosevelt's answers to the questions asked her on the race question in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Oh, fellow Georgians, and Southerners, can ye be any longer doubting Thomases? These Satan's angels from hell are still on the loose and rampant in the U. S., Washington and the South today. So let there be no doubt in your mind for whom to vote in the forthcoming election. There are certain issues at stake on which Georgians cannot afford to be indifferent. Remember, there is no middle ground. Do not swapt a certainty for an uncertainty. Vote for the one who is true and tried and who has passed through the fiery furnace of persecution.

There is only one answer for true Georgians who still believe in the dear old South and true Southern traditions, who believe in such men, and their doctrines, as Jefferson, Patrick Henry, John Calhoun, Toombs, Stephens and Thomas Watson. What will your answer be in the forthcoming election? How will you stand? For whom will you vote? Consider the facts of the case well. When you come to make up your mind to vote on that day and may our verdict be unanimous.

Who Injected Race Issue?

Speaking at a teachers' meeting in Louville, Dr. F. M. Wood, former president Kentucky State College for Negroes, advised his people that "this is not the time for the negro to unduly press for advantages". It is sound advice, much sounder than that offered by a large section of white people [illegible] are goading the South into what may become an intolerable situation.

"Regardless of the shortcomings in the United States system of government, wartime is no time to raise such issues," Dr. Wood said. "Japanese and German appeals to racial prejudices are not getting them anywhere, and I hope that continues the case."

5-6-X

Commenting on the racial question as discussed in South Carolina's recent senatorial campaign, The Atlanta Constitution says that this state's voters have "given a deserved rebuke to a candidate for the senate, Eugene S. Blease, who injected racial issue into his campaign". The Constitution uses this observation as a peg on which to hang another of its jibes at Eugene Talmadge, running for reelection as governor of Georgia.

Though South Carolinians defeated Blease (by 6,000 votes in one of the closest elections in statewide political history) it was not a "rebuke" for injecting the racial issue. First, Blease did not inject it; the New Deal government at Washington injected the issue, and Blease merely commented on it. Second, the racial issue did not defeat Blease. Senator Burnet R. Maybank, though stepping across the question by saying the issue had not come up for a vote during his service in the senate, undoubtedly feels the same as Judge Blease on this matter.

"That a candidate who raises the racial issue is raising an utterly unfounded and false issue is self-evident," The Constitution says. "At least in the South, relations between the two races are not such as to cause alarm. The candidate for office who raises the ancient cry of 'nigger, nigger', is doing so only because he thinks thereby to gain votes and has no scruples whatsoever as to how he gains them."

The Constitution must be either blind or is shutting its eyes. Dr. Wood knows the race issue is being raised at a time when America is fighting for its life—for the lives of its 130,000,000 people, both black and white. He knows it, and he sees the danger of it.

"He's Been Monkeying With Pitch"

OCT 24 1942

Of course we want it thoroughly understood that we do not approve of any such "gestapo" methods in determining the Americanism of citizens, but, even so, since it seems to be the vogue to probe for the "inside" connections everybody has (or seems to have) these days, we demand immediately the arrest and investigation of Congressman John E. Rankin of Mississippi.

The leather-lunged solon from the banks of Pascagoula river may be constitutionally beyond the pale of arrest, but we certainly should investigate some of the contacts he has had in recent years.

It will be recalled that one Madam Mittie Maud Lena Gordon, Negro, has been recently convicted in Chicago, charged with subversive activities. Mrs. Gordon will be remembered as the black woman who headed a back-to-Africa movement several years ago, having the endorsement of Congressman Rankin, and whom Congressman Rankin lauded in speeches on the floor of congress.

The FBI and government reports now link Madam Gordon with definite attempt to encourage violation of the selective draft and teaching that Negroes are related to Japs.

The question occurs on how much information Congressman Rankin had with respect to Mrs. Gordon's "Back to Africa" movement before he loaned his endorsement. It is now alleged by the FBI that this movement, under the leadership of Mrs. Gordon, was a "front" for the notorious "Black Dragon Society," founded in 1930 by Major Satakata Takahashi of the Japanese Imperial Intelligence. Did Congressman Rankin know this? How much information did the rabble-rousing Congressman Rankin have about the Black to Africa movement? Is it actually Japanese inspired?

OCT 24 1942

We are urged to say all of this because of the recent charge of Congressman Martin Dies that a number of liberal organizations are communist inspired, simply because the Marshall fund donated assistance to the support of same. In our hysteria to root out subversive elements we should dig in all of the "pay dirt" we find. The very worthy Marshall Fund is of course indicted by insinuation and innuendo, but in the Rankin case we have the word of the FBI that Madam Gordon's setup has a definite oriental setting.

Was it not old Ben Tillman who said during his lifetime, "A man cannot monkey with pitch without getting some of i on him"?
some of it on him"?

Negroes Also Have Feelings

OCT 20 1942

56k

Distinguished Group Suggests Ways in Which These Might Be Regarded

---

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

We offer a list of situations wherein white people most often offend the feelings of Negroes. Unintentional slights are grouped with perversely malicious acts because what is done in honest ignorance by one person may be a deliberate insult by another. Perhaps there is scant logical justification for the Negro's sensitivity in some of these cases. Logic, however, is able to explain very little in the realm of personal attitudes, white or Negro.

1. The word Negro should always commence with a capital just as the words Jew and Indian. Such capitalization contributes to racial self-respect. Colored and black can begin with a small letter the same as white. The logic is that the term Negro refers to a specific racial group and hence deserves the capital. The terms colored, black, white, brown, yellow are simply descriptive of the color of one's skin.

2. Negroes like to be addressed by the customary titles of polite and civil society, Mr., Mrs., Miss. Where there is no familiarity they resent being addressed by their first names or by the slightly more formal last name. Adults dislike being called "boy," "girl," "aunty," "uncle." Negro women dislike the term Negress, because in Southern newspapers it is used in derogatory fashion.

OCT 20 1942

Epithets to Be Avoided

3. Taboo, of course, are the epithets "nigger" and "darky." Negro audiences do not appreciate them in jokes. The argument is that such jokes hold the Negro up to ridicule.

4. A sentimental tale about one's "old black mammy" will prevent or destroy rapport with a Negro audience. Colored students will frequently hiss a white speaker who eulogizes his father's old black mammy.

5. The Negro population has upper, middle, and lower class distinctions which closely approximate those of the white population. Snobbish, perhaps, but an upper class black intellectual does not like to be treated as some people treat their cooks. Negroes resent the blanket generalization that all of them are alike, just as do white people.

Movies Could Help

6. The movie industry seems determined to perpetuate a myth about the place of the Negro in contemporary America. Who has seen a movie in which a Negro was something other than a servant, buffoon or criminal? There is no reason why the movies should continue to be condescending or offensive in their portrayal of the Negro.

7. Negroes want to be treated like ordinary human beings. Paternalism is almost as deadly a sin as deliberate mistreatment. The point at issue is that the Negro in America today feels that on the basis of accomplishment he should be treated as an equal. This, of course, is the crux of the problem.

Observance of the points mentioned will go far toward improving the relations of white and black in our common land. But surface politeness is not all that is needed. While mending our manners let us also give sustained thought to basic reforms that will extend democracy to our Negro fellow citizens. The solution of these problems cannot be achieved overnight, but to be aware of the evils of discrimination is a necessary step in planning for their eradication.

Things to Remember

Let us therefore bear in mind that by State law at least four million eligible Negroes are not permitted to register and vote; at least five million Negro children have schools below the minimum standards for white in the same areas; Negro youth have only one-fifth the opportunity of white youth to go to college.

At least seven million Negroes have pitiably inadequate hospitalization or none at all; there are thirteen million Negroes in America, about one million of whom are in the upper class; at least nine million Negroes live below the poverty line.

By law, or by policy approved or condoned by the Federal Government, Negroes can serve in the armed forces in only restricted capacities, whatever their abilities may be. Drafted Negro college graduates are finding it extremely difficult to work up through the ranks. Even the most ignorant Negro troops resent the way in which Negro ability is disregarded and not used.

Most Negroes are inclined to believe that they have everything to gain by a victory of the United Nations. But it is not enough to "incline to believe." They should be made to feel certain of it.

NEGRO RESOLUTION RAPS 'INTERFERENCE'

By United Pr

NOV 3 - 1942

56k

DEMOPOLIS, Nov. 3.—A mass meeting of Negroes here in Alabama's famed "Black Belt," where Negroes far outnumber whites, adopted a resolution declaring members of the two races "feel entirely competent to work out our own problems together without influence of any other groups."

The resolution was adopted at a meeting called to celebrate oversubscribing of the Negro quota in the Alabama War Chest campaign.

The resolution also deplored strikes in industries which slowed down war production and called on all Negroes, "wherever they may be in the United States, to cease this sabotage of war production. . ."

"We deplore outside interference by people of any color who do not or will not understand the spirit of respect and mutual helpfulness existing between citizens of the two races of the Black Belt of Alabama; as we, who have lived together in harmony for so long feel entirely competent to work out our own problems together without influence of any other groups," said the resolution.

"Practice Democracy At Home"--Senator Pepper

OCT 31 1942

56k

OCT 31 1942

By HERMAN HILL
(Courier Staff Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Oct. 29—Sounding the firm conviction that this war will be a long hard one which must produce out of it "a lasting peace and a brotherhood of mankind," U.S. Senator Claude E. Pepper, distinguished Florida statesman, liberal, and author of the poll tax bill, electrified a capacity audience at Second Baptist church here Sunday afternoon.

A logical, convincing speaker, Pepper dwelt on world as well as America's domestic problems. Declaring the United States the sole hope of democracy, he said:

MUST PRACTICE DEMOCRACY

"This nation must first practice democracy in all of its forms AT HOME. This is no time for half-truths and insincerity."

Touching on the poll tax and service men's voting, Senator Pepper told of the progress made on these important measures, saying:

"A year ago, I was almost laughed out of the Senate when I urged passage of the poll tax bill." But, indicative of a new trend of thought, the solon suggested, was the fact that, following Pepper's now celebrated "Town Hall" poll tax debate with Georgia's Senator Cox on the air recently, Cox shook his hand and said, "After all, I guess this thing has oomph!"

SAYS OUTMODED PATTERNS MUST GO

OCT 31 1942

Senator Pepper reasoned that if, after victory is won, we return to outmoded doctrines of democracy, they will obliterate the human race. It was the senator's thought that the war would greatly benefit the American Negro. He likewise hoped that the war necessity would remove all surplus Negroes from the South. Along this line, he said:

"I believe they should migrate wherever possible to other parts of the country. Let them mix with other people and grasp the many opportunities not afforded them at the present time."

Terror Societies Spring Up as Negro Haters Plot to Protect Their Power

---

WASHINGTON (Special)—"Hell will break loose in the South" if the anti-poll tax measure goes through in the Senate, a responsible Southern liberal declared here Monday following a favorable report on the bill by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Alarmed over the growing possibility that the Geyer-Pepper anti-poll tax measure will be passed by the Senate very soon, enfranchising 6,000,000 "poor whites" and 4,000,000 Negroes, Administration leaders are reported working feverishly to get things straight "before this thing hits us and we won't be able to control it."

Revive Terror Gangs

OCT 31 1942

White supremacy societies throughout the South are enjoying a revival of popularity with many new ones coming into being along with the Ku Klux Klan. Frank Dixon, Governor of Alabama, who heads the Southern Conference of Governors, and who recently launched the League for White Supremacy, is in the forefront of the Negro-haters who are waiting to unleash a wave of terror unprecedented in history the moment the poll tax ban is written into the statutes.

Prominent among the Southerners, who are backing the organized move to terrorize Negroes and poor whites, is Senator O'Daniel (D. Texas), who has many times sought federal restriction of union activity and who helped to organize the "Christian Americans," called by anti-poll tax leaders, "a Southwest pro-Fascist force."

Dixon, Talmadge Again

Down in Georgia Gov. Eugene Talmadge, who with his followers set up Vigilantes, Inc., restricted to "white males," is increasingly active. His program is in accord with that of Gov. Dixon of Alabama. Senator Reynolds (D.-N.C.) who heads the Senate Military Affairs Committee, has resumed publication of his "anti-alien" newspaper, the Vindicator.

The old Southern "sport" of tarring and feathering Negroes will be revived, it was reported, as will lynchings, burnings, terrorism and all the cruelties toward minorities for which the South is noted.

Passage of the anti-poll tax bill would unleash a strong new voting force which would threaten the traditional balance of power the Southern bloc exercises in Congress. Such a law, it was pointed out, would open new political fields to the pro-Negro CIO and the farmers union which are both ready to seek political influence in the States of the South as did the CIO so successfully in Michigan, New York, California and Pennsylvania.

Mitchell Attacks Foes

Rep. Arthur W. Mitchell (D.-Ill.), only Negro member in Congress, in one of his infrequent responses to the things going on around him in the House, said he believed that Sen. Tom Connally (D.-Tex.), Cotton Ed. Smith (D.-S.C.), and George (D.-Ga.), would "gang up" on the bill in a effort to prosecute their unholy projects.

OCT 31 1942

"They will attack the bill and the government, charging that the law would be unconstitutional and a violation of States rights. It's the old slave question up again. They fought WPA because they did not want Negroes earning $30 a month. Now they will fight just as bitterly to prevent Negroes from obtain the right to vote," Mitchell said.

Lynchings Inspired

"There may be violence in the South. Lynchings, such as the recent ones in Mississippi, are inspired by bitter speeches of some of the Southern Congressmen. During the debate on the anti-lynching bill some time ago two Negroes were lynched in Mississippi."

OCT 31 1942

The Republican Party has actively aided anti-poll tax leaders here in an effort to win support among the 10,000,000 new voters in the 1944 presidential election, the first time the "poll taxers" will be able to vote if the bill is passed.

Migration Begun

A migration of Negroes seeking defense jobs "up North" has begun. The Santa Fe and Southern Pacific R. R.s are now recruiting Negroes as track maintenance workers. Republican leaders believe that support of the anti-poll tax campaign will win the backing of these young Negroes when they vote in northern and western States in 1944.

Southern political leaders now fear that repeal of the poll tax, coupled with the new migration, will create a vast voting force seeking political vengeance against the South.

Persecution of Jewish People Is Most Debased of Them All, He Tells Rabbis

OCT 31 1942

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30—Secretary Hull called today for "a world in which Jews, like every other race, are free to abide in peace and in honor." He made this statement in receiving a group of American rabbis who left with him a memorandum in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Balfour Declaration of Nov. 2, 1917.

Mr. Hull denounced the German persecution of the Jews as "the most debased" of all "the inhuman and tyrannical acts of Hitler and his Nazi lieutenants."

When victory was won, he pledged, the United Nations, under the terms of the Atlantic Charter, would be prepared not only to redeem the hopes of a future world based upon freedom, equality and justice, "but to create a world in which such a tragedy will not again occur."

The rabbis, who included James Heller of the Central Conference of American Rabbis and Isadore Lookstein of the Rabbinical Council of America, called attention in their memorandum to the anniversary of the British pledge for the Jewish homeland in Palestine, expressed appreciation of America's effort in support of it, and hoped that the United States would keep the Balfour Declaration in mind. The text of the memorandum was not made public by the State Department.

"Shocked" by Nazi Brutality

Secretary Hull observed that the Balfour Declaration had aroused wide attention in the United States and that this country had followed with interest and sympathy the work which had been done under it, stating that American citizens had played a useful part in this.

"This country," he said, "was shocked and outraged when tyranny and barbarity again commenced their march, at the brutality which was inflicted on certain races, and particularly on the Jewish populations of Europe. Apparently, no form of abuse has been too great, and no form of torture or oppression too vile, to be meted out to these populations by the Nazi despots. And, in taking this attitude toward the Jewish race, they have made it plain by concrete acts that a like attitude would be taken toward any other race against whom they might invent a grievance.

"The Jews have long sought a refuge. I believe that we must have an even wider objective; we must have a world in which Jews, like every other race, are free to abide in peace and in honor.

Confident of Our Victory

"We meet today when the battle for freedom is being carried on in the East and in the West, and our every effort is concentrated on a successful issue. We can with confidence look forward to the victory when liberty shall lift the scourge of persecution and the might of the United Nations free mankind from the threat of oppression.

"Of all the inhuman and tyrannical acts of Hitler and his Nazi lieutenants, their systematic persecution of the Jewish people—men, women and children—is the most debased. The fate of these unhappy people must be ever before us in the efforts we are making today for the final victory; at the moment of triumph under the terms of the Atlantic Charter the United Nations will be prepared not only to redeem their hopes of a future world based upon freedom, equality and justice but to create a world in which such a tragedy will not again occur."

Morgenthau Rumor Denied

A rumor that Secretary Morgenthau planned to resign and become head of the Zionist Movement was denied today by Emanuel Neumann, a representative of the American emergency committee for Zionist affairs, according to The United Press yesterday.

"We know nothing of the source of the rumor," Mr. Neumann said. "So far as we have been able to discover, it is entirely without foundation.

"Mr. Morgenthau is not and has never been officially connected with the Zionist Movement. He has expressed his sympathy with our efforts in Palestine and we are deeply appreciative of his sympathetic effort toward our cause."

Negro Fares Best in US, Speaker Says

By I. M. A. Myers

"The American Negro has as much to fight for in the world crisis as any other American, and enjoys more economic blessings in America than he does in any other area of the world where Negro people live in big numbers," declared C. C. Abbington, D.D., editor of the religious literature of the African Methodist Sunday schools throughout the world. He was guest speaker at vespers in Allen university Sunday.

Doctor Abbington is a native of Dallas, Tex., and his office at present is in Nashville, Tenn. His tour of the state takes him into the annual conferences of the African Methodist Episcopal churches and he is associated with Bishop J. S. Flipper in the work of the conferences.

The speaker has spent much time in Europe, Africa, Brazil and the West Indies making a study of the Negro's condition and progress.

He claimed to have found more Negroes in Brazil than in the United States. Brazilian Negroes enjoy equal political and social rights, but they have not absorbed the fundamental ideas of home life so well as the American Negro, he declared.

Vespers will be held at Allen university each fourth Sunday in the month, and President Higgins in his introduction of the speaker last Sunday, promised to bring to the exercises national speakers.

Mordicai Johnson, president of Howard university, Washington, D. C., and Channing H. Tobias, international YMCA secretary, have been listed among the speakers.

Another happy feature in the vesper services at Allen last Sunday evening was effective singing of Negro spirituals done by the 36 voices which compose the Allen university choir under the fine leadership of Prof. Belcher McMillan, head of the department of music at the university.

Buchwald Is Crying 'Wolf' Too Soon, Says Mike Gold In 'Cafe Crown' Controversy

FEB 28 1942

By MIKE GOLD

IS THE current play, "Cafe Crown", a crime against the Jewish people in the same way as "Gone With the Wind" was against the Negro people?

Nathaniel Buchwald, drama critic of the Jewish daily, "Morning Freiheit," seems to think so. In a letter to this column last week Buchwald charges me with a grievous political, esthetic and ethnological error in having failed to smell the anti-Semitism of this little comedy.

He is an eloquent and bitter prosecutor, and if I hadn't seen "Cafe Crown" with my own adequate eyes and heard its lines with my own perfect ears, I would be hanging my head in shame.

Unfortunately, I can still remember what I saw and heard, and Buchwald fails to shake me. Maybe it is some other epic he is talking about. I am confused by the amount of political wrath and boiling indignation this play rouses in him. I found it light and charming, perhaps a little too loaded with Broadway gags, but on the whole, kindly in its intentions.

FEB 28 1942

Buchwald talks against it, however, in the tone of William Lloyd Garrison starting an abolitionist crusade. All I saw in the play was a few good laughs and some genial caricatures of East Side characters I had always known. Either Buchwald or I must be whacky. I hope it is not I. For it seems to me Buchwald is out to lynch a butterfly. Or am I so blind and callous that I fail to recognize anti-Semitism when I meet it?

* * *

I would have left the judgment to posterity, but Buchwald, insists on an immediate settlement of this great historic problem. What about the jury that must decide? Less than one-tenth of one per cent, probably, of the readers of this column have seen the play. The other readers must judge, not by the play itself, but by the reports of it submitted by opposing counsel. But how can you try a murder case in which the defense argues there has been no murder, and in which the prosecutor cannot produce a corpse or witnesses to a murder?

A further complication is that nobody can quarrel with the abstract arguments that Buchwald presents. I, like every other friend of justice, agree with him that there should be a state of constant war against the vile and familiar cliches of the stage Jew, the stage Irishman and the stage Negro.

FEB 28 1942

It is disgraceful when a member of a minority people feeds the contempt and ignorance of the majority by these stupid caricatures. The Jewish comedian may have afforded his audiences many innocent laughs, but he has also contributed to establishing anti-Semitism in their minds.

I always writhe when I see a Hollywood film in which a Negro actor defames his own people, or hear a Jewish vaudevillian work for laughs against his people. In this time of Nazi barbarism, such clowning is dynamite.

Buchwald charges that "Cafe Crown" is full of this Nazi-like caricaturing of the Jewish East Side. I disagree. The play is not an abstract treatment of the Jew in general, but a specific portrait of a group of Jewish theatre people, their specific weaknesses and peculiar problems. The author has not tried to make them symbolic of anything but themselves. The humor arises out of the particular provincialism and aspiration of a certain period in the history of Jewish immigrants in New York. It does not rise out of the world position of the Jew, or his world problems.

It is regional humor, and it is the good-natured humor of a Jewish author who likes his own people, and treats their follies and vices with affectionate reproof.

I would hate to see the day come when Negro, Jewish or Irish authors had been so terrorized by racial oppression that they were no longer capable of such kidding or criticism of their own people. Laughter is a sign of sanity and health. It is a sign of courage and good morale when a soldier under fire can still wisecrack. Out of the tragedy and darkness of the Czarist ghetto, the Jews produced their greatest writer in Yiddish. He was Sholem Aleichem, a humorous author of the stature of Mark Twain. The Jews are not a weak or cowardly people. They have been persecuted for thousands of years, but have not forgotten to laugh.

FEB 28 1942

I am afraid Buchwald dislikes "Cafe Crown" as much for its humor as for any reason. Does he believe it would help the cause of Jewish freedom only to portray tragic, Biblical Jewish heroes? That also becomes a cliche. There must be room in every literature for the little people, too—the street vaudeville, the comedy of ordinary living, the comedy of manners and character, the satire against follies of the day.

One of the troubles at the beginnings of proletarian literature in America was that it always tended to become the most dreary, unrelieved tragedy. It depressed the readers too much. They instinctively knew life could not be so drab and hopeless.

It was only when our authors learned how to portray the full man, the worker who laughed, fought, cried, cursed, and was completely human, that the era of successful proletarian books arrived.

* * *

No, I think and ponder again, and try to see if I have forgotten anything, and still I can't discover any harmful anti-Jewish elements in this play.

Buchwald charges that it trades on local color, as if the Jews were some kind of freaks whom the author was exhibiting to a party of slummers.

But what is wrong with local color, anyway? How can you write about Blue Ridge mountaineers except in their Elizabethian dialect, and against the background of their peculiar local color? Or about Slovak miners in Pennsylvania, or Negro sharecroppers in Alabama, or Dutch farmers in Michigan or the Pennsylvania Dutch areas, or the Italian vineyardists of California? This is a huge country of many regions, and to describe one section of the multi-nationed American people to the rest requires a certain amount of comment known as local color.

FEB 28 1942

I regard the East Side in the same light as an American region, and consider "Cafe Crown" a regional comedy where local color is a necessary background for those hitherto unacquainted with the East Side.

The play does not particularly trade on this local color, for its major problem is concerned with an old Shakespearean actor of the European tradition who is having difficulty adjusting himself to jazzy, modern America. The universal problem of the immigrant and the misunderstandings caused by the fact that his children are born in America and are not European is also indicated.

This play is a light comedy and only brushes these larger themes. But the themes have dignity and importance, and do not show the Jew in a trivial or clownish aspect.

Nobody will go away from this play prejudiced against Jews. If I am any judge of audience reactions, the spectator will leave "Cafe Crown" a little envious of the romance and humor of East Side life. He will want to go down to Cafe Royale, the model from which the play was drawn, to see if the glamor really is there.

He will be disappointed, of course. The glamor was all in the author's head. He has idealized a little. Which is not a fault in any author, glamor is to be preferred over degradation. My only criticism of Cafe Crown was that it had been gagged too heavily for laughs. Some of the humanity of the people had been robbed by this commercialism. But this is a fault of most Broadway stagecraft; it becomes as efficient and slick as an adding machine, it is mechanical clowning, not true humor.

No, Buchwald is lynching a Broadway butterfly. He is crying Wolf too soon. What rage will he have left in his arsenal if a real anti-Semitic play should appear? He writes for a Marxist paper, and so do I, and we disagree on this play, and the readers have never seen the play, and must feel confused. Let them go and see for themselves. They are Marxist critics, too

He won't be elected because this state votes Democratic, although we hope no one will embarrass us at the present time by asking just why this is so. Under the so-called Democratic regime we have seen the South shorn of what power it had in party councils; it has denied us relief from freight rate differentials; it has constantly agitated the race question and tried to force social equality on us; it has agitated for anti-lyching laws; and it is now about to take over our election machinery.

Randolph Suggests Series Of Mass Meetings To Stir Protests Against War Bias

FEB 28 1942

NEW YORK CITY—Because of the widespread and continued discriminations against Negroes in the Army, Navy, and all departments of the armed forces, A. Philip Randolph, International President of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, has suggested that a series of public mass meetings to protest these discriminations against Negroes be staged from coast to coast by the various Negro organizations.

FEB 28 1942

Have Right To Equality

Randolph stated in the Headquarters of the Brotherhood here that some unified, concerted and nationwide protest of the Negro masses is essential and imperative at this time to shake official America—governmental, industrial, and labor—into the consciousness and realization of the fact that Negroes as American citizens have a right to play a role upon a basis of equality in defense industries as workers and the armed forces as soldiers, sailors, and air men and in the Government as office and professional employees, as well as on the policy making boards of the Nation.

FEB 28 1942

The month of May was suggested by Randolph as the time to stage these mass meetings with Negro and white leaders—who are dedicated to uncompromising integration and equal participation of Negroes in the defense industries and the armed forces of the country—as speakers.

Mr. Randolph points out that now is the time for Negroes to speak up and speak out in defense of their rights and interests, and if they don't do so they are doomed to relegation to the status of virtual vassals and peons in the country.

Has The Negro Race Been Weighed In The Balances And Found Wanting In The Things That Men Do?

FEB 27 1942

This is an all-important question that the American Negro must answer in the negative, by proving affirmatively, that he has been weighed in the scales of what men and races do, and found worthy of the confidence and respect of men and women who make the world a better place for people to live in. He must prove that his contribution to the social and economic order of his country is far greater than his opportunities have been to make his contribution to American civilization. That unless he makes a fine answer to this question in the negative, that satisfies his critics, they will continue to say that the Negro has been weighed in the balances of human values and found wanting in the fundamental essentials of human achievements. This feat cannot be accomplished by using our opportunities for personal gains, but by directing all of our energies for the benefit of the people of our race and country.

No one man has ever built a race, or a country by himself. It takes the union and cooperation of many people, endowed with the spirit of one for all and all for one, to do the job. The man who builds for all the people builds for himself in common with all the people; but the man who builds for himself alone, usually builds like Haman built, and hangs himself on the cross that he built for his neighbors. Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, has given the Negroes of his state a separate set-up from the whites, in which they have the same opportunity to make good, the whites have, according to their ability and experience. But many of those in charge do not seem to understand that the race is being weighed in the balances by their conduct, and race achievement and ability will be measured by what they do, or what they contribute to their country under that part of the Civilian Defense entrusted to their care and keeping by the governor.

The whites are moving along smoothly, but the Negro leader is making a mess of our end of the set-up. If some changes are not made, and their conduct is placed in the balance to be weighed, the entire race movement in the state will be wanting to the disappointment of the governor. Those in charge are placing selfishness and ignorance above winning the war; and the cause of the people is suffering at their hand. The people of America are facing a crisis that will not wait, and we have no time to lose trying to impress the white folk: "I am a smart nigger." The president and the governor and all the people who love freedom want morale, patriotism and the necessary production of everything for all free people. This is not a white man's war; it is everybody's war who loves the American way of life and the blessings of human liberty. Let us forget ourselves and put all we have in an honest effort to win freedom for the world.

THE NAZI-JEW ABUSE NOT LIKE U. S. NEGRO

MAR 1 1942

MAR 1 1942

Dr. Embree Writes In Book

(By the ANP)

The Nazi propaganda trick of comparing German treatment of Jews with American treatment of Negroes is entirely unjustified, acording to Edwin R. Embree, president of the Julius Rosenwald fund and author of "Brown America."

"What Hitler tries to cover up is the difference in direction," Mr. Embree writes in an article in the March issue of The American Mercury. "While he has crassly reversed the clock of civilization, we in America have been slowly moving toward more tolerance and freer opportunity for all peoples."

MAR 1 1942

The improvement in the status and democratic opportunities of the American Negro since emancipation has been phenomenal, Mr. Embree points out. The Negro literacy rate has swelled from 5 per cent to 85 per cent. The death rate has dropped from 32 per 1000 to 14 per 1000. Negroes have accumulated more than $2,500,000,000 in wealth and their total purchasing power comes to two billion dollars a year. In the creative arts they have made noteworthy contributions.

Mr. Embree views with optimism the changing attitudes toward Negroes particularly the transformation that has occurred in the south where increasing educational opportunities are offered in spite of segregation. He stresses the interest of the New Deal administration in this minority: the President's charge to defense industries that there must be no discrimination in employment, the establishment of an air school for Negro pilots, the attitude of the supreme court in upholding Negro rights.

While the evidences of progress are encouraging, Mr. Embree insists that much remains to be done in giving this important minority a larger share in national life. He demands for them the minimum requirements that all citizens have a right to expect in a democracy: the right to earn a living at work for which they are fitted by merit and ability; the right to equal opportunities in education, health, recreation, and similar public services; the right to vote; equality before the law; courteous treatment by their fellow Americans.

Charges North Serving Axis By Fostering Race Trouble

GADSDEN, Ala., Aug. 27—Representative Starnes of Alabama Thursday charged that certain persons in Washington and the North are forcing a racial equality issue in the South and "by so doing, are serving the Axis powers."

He charged that the persons were attempting to put the blame on Southerners and thus cloak the fact that they are acting as German or Japanese agents.

USE AXIS TRICK

"This thing is made more vicious by the fact that those who are pushing the race issue from the outside have the monumental impudence to try to place the blame on the South," he said.

He charged that it was a common trick of the Axis to try to use minority groups to stir up internal strife.

"That is being done now as persons outside the South attempt to create strife between peoples that have lived in harmony for a number of years."

TO LAUNCH PROBE

He warned that after his return to Washington he would investigate the source of the money that is being paid the agents stirring up racial trouble in the South."

Starnes was the latest official to enter the picture in the south in recent weeks in which it has been charged that attempts have been made by federal agencies and individuals to do away with segregation in the South.

The fight was touched off by Gov. Frank Dixon of Alabama, when he refused to accept a contract for state prison mills on the grounds of a stipulation that whites and Negroes be given equal rating under the contract.

Dixon charged that the contract would force the placing of Negroes in positions of trust in the state government.

UNION LEADERS PROTEST

Gov. Eugene Talmadge entered the controversy, urging those who didn't like the segregation system to leave the Southern states before "they are run out."

Several CIO leaders in Alabama and Georgia have filed protests with the Civil Liberties Committee, charging that Negroes are being discriminated against in contracts and working conditions.

At the same time, several Southern leaders have protested the attention given Dixon's and Talmadge's statement, declaring there is no race problem at present in the South.

WHITE PREACHER CUSSES OUT ALL COLORED FOLK DURING HOT SERMON WHILE THOUSAND BELIEVERS CHEER

The Rev. Joe Jaffers, Moved By The Spirit, Said He Too Would Like to Slug Roland Hayes (But He Passed Up Joe Louis)

By Harry Levette

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13 (ANP),—While certain colored leaders trusted to be on the watch for such attacks were preparing to picket movie studios and while state and federal authorities were absent instead of listening in, a seditious orgy of dangerous race-baiting took place last Sunday in downtown Los Angeles. The meeting was at spacious Embassy auditorium in the heart of the city on Grand Avenue.

While an ANP reporter, whose presence was unknown by the speaker sat through it all taking notes, the Rev. Dr. Joe Jaffers, white, pastor of a church in a westside restricted district, thundered out an hour long verbal blast against Negro fellow-citizens of America.

Close to 1,000 whites filled the downstairs space and the balcony cheering him to the echo.

"I wish I could have helped beat Roland Hayes."

Among Jaffer's phrases were: "Some of our rotten law makers in Washington tried to send all our fine white boys away to war from the south, and leave the n______rs there supposedly to carry on war production. Truly enough they are good laborers if you drive them, but if they had left these n______rs among our white women instead of sending them to the army, by God, you would have seen one of the damndest revolutions by the white southerners that ever happened. I am from the south myself, born in England but have lived in the south ever since I was nine years old; have preached in all 14 of the southern states, and I know those states will never give in to the doctrine of social equality planned by a lot of smart n________rs and foolish Yankees."

During his "sermon" Jaffers kept a copy of the Pittsburgh Courier and one of the local Negro papers on the altar, frequently commenting on anti-prejudice articles featured on the front pages. Holding up one with a bannerline about the brutal assault on the famous singer, Roland Hayes, he said:

"Now this is a smart-alec n______r, who because he traveled a lot among white folks, thought he was good as them. But they showed him down in Rome, Ga., that he can't talk back to white gentlemen." Baring his scrawny arm and clenching his fist he continued, "Yes and I wish I had been there too, so I could have given him a smash on the jaw.____That's the way we do n______rs down there.

"California all wrong"

"You've got to keep the n______r in his place! Down there we hire them; feed them; give them things, and treat them like they should be treated. But eat and socialize with them? By God, no!______A lot of states including this one are all wrong about the n______r. Take laws permitting intermarriage between white and black races; just imagine a black n________r standing up before the altar with one of our fine white women. The very idea is disgusting."

Speaking of the NAACP he drew laughter from his audience as he ridiculed the organization: They have some kind of a society supposed to be for their advancement. Advancement where? Yes, the National Association for the Advancement of N______rs. It should not be allowed to exist. They even had a convention here a week or so ago, and they have 'em in all the other states. This one here should have been stopped, and all the others should be stopped."

The ANP reporter for obvious reasons does not want his name published as yet for he believes evidence may be uncovered that justify charges of subversive activities. Ever since his startling expose of "Father" William R. Riker's "Holy City" colony of Negro haters in California, the reporter has been on the lookout for similar activities right in the city. His curiosity was aroused by the display of a large picture of Dr. Jaffers in front of the Embassy auditorium and small circulars inside the vestibule announcing that something important in social life would be discussed that afternoon by him.

So he slipped quietly, and made his way to an alcove in the upper balcony where he could hear but not be seen from the rostrum. A few of the whites in the balcony near him noticed him but said nothing. However, they looked at him curiously, especially during some particularly vicious insult.

Real Racial Helpfulness

Cooperation between the white and Negro races in the South has long been recognized by the thinking members of both races as essential if either group is to thrive and prosper, and there have been frequent occasions when voluntary cooperation has been extended.

Another such occasion is a mass meeting of Negro citizens of Dothan and Houston County called for Sunday afternoon when they will discuss the farm labor shortage in the Wiregrass, a shortage which is threatening a full harvest when a full harvest is needed as never before.

Purpose of the meeting, called by Negro leaders, is to find the answer to a problem which is more perplexing this year than ever before because so many of the farm workers are now in the military service or have been attracted to defense jobs.

The Negroes can play an important part in saving crops which otherwise may spoil in the fields. Inasmuch as there are more members of this race capable and available for harvesting tasks, much of the responsibility for salvaging crops is theirs.

That the Negroes realize this responsibility and are taking steps of their own accord to do what they can is a fine tribute to the manner in which they respond to the demands of good citizenship. It is to be hoped that they will be able to work out a solution to such a vital problem.

So long as this example of cooperation exists between races who want to live in harmony and a spirit of helpfulness to one another, the South need never worry that those who would stir up strife will be successful. Such things as Dothan's mass meeting is a rebuke to them.

Governor Talmadge Right About Social Equality Move

It is high time for Southern Senators and Representatives to wake up to the sinister implications of the things that are being attempted in the South at this time and to see that these perilous and provocative activities are brought to an immediate close.

Negroes of the North, finding a lot of craven politicians amenable to their desires, have succeeded in creating a condition under which white and colored persons are mixed indiscriminately in various departments at Washington, white girls being under the supervision of or having to take dictation from Negro men.

Now having gotten away with this sort of thing in the nation's capital through the bluffing and intimidating of the weak-kneed politicians of the North, the Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race is now trying to put the same thing over in the South as a whole and it seems to have the full cooperation of the administration and the full support of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Committees of snoopers, like that which assembled in Birmingham Thursday to spy upon Southern industrialists, Southern labor unions and Southern school authorities, are out deliberately endeavoring to create a condition under which white and colored people will have to mix freely in offices, shops and elsewhere and also in the public schools that receive support from the federal government.

Meanwhile, under the instigation of these same social equality groups, Negro soldiers are being sent to Southern military camps, where white soldiers are forced to mingle with colored soldiers.

According to an article in Fortune Magazine in which the program of the Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race is boosted strongly, the statement is made that at Fort Benning, Georgia, a white candidate in the officer's training school who objected to having to sleep in the same barracks with Negroes was told that "if he did not like it he could get out and stay out." That statement is on page 164 of current Fortune and it might interest Governor Eugene Talmadge, one of the few Southern executives who appears to have been alert to the sinister plot that it is sought to put over on the South.

Interesting, too, in fact, according to Fortune. that this whole program looking to implanting Negroes among those of the white race, in all sorts of positions, had its inception in a hard-boiled bluffing of the President of the United States by a set of Negro politicians! The Fortune article relates that the order under which the social equality movement is now being pushed with such tremendous vigor, had its inception as follows:

"The President's proclamation would have caused much more enthusiasm among the Negroes had it not been so clearly THE RESULT OF PRESSURE. A. Phillip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, had announced a general protest march upon Washington for July 1, (1941). A few weeks before the critical day, Fiorello La Guardia, then still in charge of the Office of Civilian Defense, requested them to call it off. When this was refused, the White House took the matter up officially. At a meeting with the President and ranking members of the Cabinet and the Office of Production Management, the suggestion of an executive order came from the Negro side of the conference table, and was coolly received on the other side. When only a few days were left for preventing an international embarrassment, the Negro leaders were shown a first draft, which committed defense industries but not the government itself. The Negroes stood pat. Finally the President agreed to include an order to his own administration. And the march was cancelled."

Fortune adds that it "was a compromise between hard-boiled pressure groups," but compromise or no, it led to the unbelievable conditions that have since been created in Washington and to the astounding crusade that is being conducted in the South today to fill offices as well as factories with Negro men and women and to force the entry of colored children in public schools.

In brief, the greatest emergency in the nation's history is being utilized as a vehicle for forcing upon the South intolerable social conditions that are wanted neither by the Negroes nor the white people of the South.

Georgia's virile, courageous and outspoken governor has taken the lead in trying to keep the educational system of the South from coming under the dominance of these advocates of racial equality and he probably is the best equipped of any one in public life to meet the current situation and, by boldness, frankness and devotion to the priceless principal of white supremacy, prevent this monstrous effort to saddle upon the South an intolerable condition.

The people of the South, white and black, get along nicely together and are fully capable of working out their problems without the intervention of insane reformers from the North who do not recognize dynamite when they see it. If these apostles of racial equality in the South are not told where to get off and persist in their inflammatory tactics they are going to start something they won't be able to finish. And it is time for some on high in authority to tell them so and to do it in thunder tones.

Serious Consideration Of Negro Problem Urged By Wilkinson

Work Out Differences Within The Law Is Message To Kiwanians

Horace C. Wilkinson, for many years prominent in legal and political circles in Alabama, Wednesday delivered before the Kiwanis Club of Bessemer an address on "Racial Relations," in which he recited complications of the race problem in the South and declared "the time has arrived for discussion that will provoke serious consideration of the situation in Alabama and the South, and bring forth suggestions for a solution of the problem within the law and under the Constitution of the United States."

Judge Wilkinson recited a number of local occurrences to indicate the strain upon race relations, as he sees it, and called the attention of his audience to the recent speech of Wendell L. Willkie under auspices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which Judge Wilkinson said "advocated a program that, in my judgment, would inevitably result in two things, namely, the destruction of segregation and the amalgamation of the races."

"About 10 per cent of the population of this country are Negroes," Judge Wilkinson declared. "The whites being in the majority, it is their right and responsibility to work out the problem within the law, and by a law that all whites and blacks must obey. It must be done that way. Extra-legal methods, however necessary or effective they may have been in days of yore, are not to be resorted to now. The blatant black and the demigogic white, who would further their own personal interest or grind a political ax by arousing animosities in either race, must be ruled out. The situation calls for clear, calm, deliberate thinking and resolute, uncompromising, positive action."

Declaring the time to act is now, Judge Wilkinson said: "My first suggestion is that we organize statewide, South-wide, nationwide. If there is room in this country for a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, there is need for a league to maintain white supremacy."

They Can't Mislead the Southern Negro

"SPECTATOR," whose weekly letters to the press of the state are always timely and interesting, says "the race question is being stirred up." He says the trouble is that "northern meddlers and politicians are fanning a flame of discontent which can have only a painful conclusion."

This is true to a certain extent, but there may be another reason for the spirit of discontent which seems to have arisen in recent months.

It is not probable that paid Axis agents would work on a certain element of the nation's white population and overlook the colored people, and there is ample evidence that these secret agents have been stirring up trouble among the whites in the industrial centers.

The same thing happened during the first World War when the activities of paid enemy agents were conducted on a much smaller scale.

But the colored people of the South particularly are far too wise and live too close to their white friends to be misled by these dangerous enemy agents.

They may listen attentively to what a false adviser has to say, but not only is the colored man endowed with a sound natural philosophy, but he has a sixth sense which enables him to distinguish the genuine from the spurious—the dross from the gold.

Negro Couple Retain Custody of White Child

Supreme Court Justice Kenneth O'Brien last Wednesday ended attempts to remove [illegible]-year-old Luis Rodriguez, son of a white Puerto Rican mother, from the custody of its Negro Puerto Rican foster parents. The decision closed a hearing during which counsel for Amparo Camara, white Puerto Rican and original mover in the attempt to claim the tot, repeatedly injected the racial issue into the proceedings. Justice O'Brien's decision ". . . that the child should have first consideration . . . the interest of the child would be best served by remaining with the respondents . . ." climaxed a legal tangle which won wide attention when Justice Wasservogel, originally hearing the case, was reported to have declared in open court:

"No white child should be reared by a colored family unless an institution cannot be found for it."

The foster parents, Luis and Malen Rodriguez, who legally adopted the youngster less than 10 days after birth at request of its mother, were represented by Attorney Harrison S. Jackson, 200 W 135 st, who was called to the defense after dissatisfaction was expressed by the couple over the results obtained by the white lawyer they retained in the beginning.

Judge Wasservogel, facing a storm of criticism about his courtroom remark, denied the implications attributed to it, then disqualified himself from hearing the case further.

Mrs. Ampara, whose filing of the original action was the climax to an alleged long campaign to get the tot away from the Rodriguez family, was disqualified by the court after cross-examination had shown

- she had been in an insane asylum,
- she had been convicted of illegal practice of medicine,
- that she had been living in common law relationship for seven years.

The case then rested on the court's opinion as to whether the little fellow should remain with his foster parents or be sent to an institution.

Mrs. F. D. R. in Plea For Race Equality

Speaking before the 27th annual convention of the State Federation of Colored Women's Clubs at Bordentown, N. J., Wednesday, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt drew a picture of future world peace in which international friendships predominated and race, color and creed were completely subordinated.

The nation's First Lady said in part:

"Democracy really means that basic rights should be enjoyed by all, regardless of race, color or creed. After the war, I am sure we will have more mutual respect among human beings, one for another. Only in this way, future peace can be assured."

The session, which will continue Thursday and Friday, was well attended.

The Plaindealer
Kansas City, Kan.

A. PHILLIP RANDOLPHE IS being hailed as one of the most outstanding leaders of our race. He is worthy of that consideration because of his unique position and because of his uncompromising stand for his people. Randolph was not pusher to the front but he fought his way to the front amid adverse circumstances and under criticism that his activities and program were subversive to the American way of life. Negroes who fight for the advancement of their race are not popular and never will become popular because they are, more or less, lookd upon as radicals and fools by a certain segment of critical whites who desire to forever exploit the political, economic and social rights of Negroes. The popular Negro is the Uncle Tom type who runs around with his hat in his hand, bowing and scraping every time his boss nods his head.

When Randolph first started his fight for the pullmana porters his worst opposition came from within the ranks of those whom he desired to help most. That is the case in every instance where a movement is put on to liberate Negroes. Just somehow they are slow to catch the vision. Randolph has been able to get the ear of President Roosevelt and the administration.. He, perhaps, has done more to arouse Negroes in one direction and to attract the attention of labor organizations than any one other single Negro. He deserves praise and credit while he is living rather than flowers when he is dead. II only hope that some of our so-called leaders today will catch the inspiration is needed here in Kansas because we have tomuch of the Uncle Tom type of leadership.

Quoting Satchell Paige

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

The colored people who read The Courier-Journal appreciate the broad-gauged policy of your newspaper. The publishers of Negro papers here have been a little short of profuse in calling attention of the Negro public here and throughout the Nation, to the liberal attitude and the democratic spirit exhibited by the publisher and editors of The Courier-Journal and The Louisville Times toward colored people. We have also taken cognizance of the publicity and support given Negro sports and athletics. You have been quite kind to such outstanding characters as Joe Louis and Satchell Paige.

I am, however, calling your attention to the following excerpt taken from the sport columns of The Courier-Journal in a report of a recent ball game: "Autographing cigaret packs and sundry objects Sunday at Parkway Field, he wrote with no little flourish 'Satchell Paige.' A wide-eyed fan said, 'Hey, does you know how to spell your own name? They ain't two l's in Satchel.' To which the tall, dark and bony one replied, 'Ah is the one and only Satchell, Honey, spelt with two l's like in hell, which Ah gets plenty of when Ah ain't in good form.' 'You suah wuz right today, man.' 'Speck Ah wus, but conversely, Honey, that other team can't play baseball. If Ah was feelin' really right, Ah'd bet you Ah could go nine full innings against those whiskers and they wouldn't none git to first base, noways except by error!'"

I have conversed with Paige on and off the baseball diamond. Last summer in Chicago, I had the opportunity to hear him in a lengthy discussion of a baseball topic, but at that time and at no other time have I been able to credit or discredit him with the type of English as quoted above. However, if Paige is correctly quoted, I am not able to see the point in the reproduction of it. I doubt that it is journalistically ethical.

The outstanding prize fighters and baseball players who are not well versed in English and whose language would not look well in print, are not confined only to the Negroes, but from newspaper interviews and quoted statements, the public never knows the difference when the subject is not a Negro.

Paul Laurence Dunbar became a great poet through the poetry and literature which he produced from the Negro dialect of the slavery and reconstruction period. But the Negro talk of today is quite different from what it was seventy-five years ago.

Some of the writers on our daily papers may not realize the injustice they can do a race when they inaccurately report items which carry the wrong impression, although they may find it easy to do where the Negro is concerned.

Discrimination Charged In Library of Congress

"PM" New York, N.Y.

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 21—The Library of Congress is demonstrating that anti-Negro discrimination, which is rampant throughout much of the Federal Government, can be curbed by the creation of proper grievance machinery and an aggressive union.

JUL 22 1942

5-67

In the Library, like in many other Government agencies, Negroes have had tough going. Regardless of education or background, they were rarely promoted. The custom of addressing them by their last names, rather than as Mr., Miss or Mrs. was evidence of the feeling which developed more important discriminations.

But last Fall FDR issued an order prohibiting all discriminatory practice in Government agencies. Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, followed it up with a similar order to the Library staff.

Subsequently, Seth Major, a Negro clerk, began insisting on his rights. If fellow employes addressed him as Major, he responded by calling them by their first or last names. It resulted in a threat of personal violence from a white employe.

At Major's request, his union, the United Federal Workers of America, intervened. The man who had made the threat was reprimanded. But the incident wasn't over. A little later, Major's immediate superior, a white woman, filed a [illegible]-page report listing errors he was supposed to have made over a period of several months, and asking for his dismissal. He was suspended.

JUL 22 1942

Again the union intervened and an appeals board was set up to study the charges, under procedure established by MacLeish for such cases. It recommended his reinstatement with back pay after hearing all the evidence. Library officials accepted the findings.

But a little later Major received his annual efficiency rating and found that he was rated "unsatisfactory," which meant that he would have to be fired. The union protested that his inefficiency had already been proved false by the appeals board investigation and asked for a revision.

JUL 22 1942

The appeals board took the case again. After hearing Major's superiors defend their rating, the board recommended that the rating be changed to "good," which not only reinstated the Negro employe but made him eligible for promotion. This recommendation is now being considered by higher officials of the Library.

Meanwhile, there have been a series of Negro promotions in the Library and union officials are hopeful that the discriminations in this Government agency are about over.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), introduced a bill in the House yesterday to give the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice broad power to stop discrimination in war industries.

Marcantonio's bill would write into every Government contract a prohibition against discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin or citizenship. The President's Committee would have power to issue complaints, and orders to cease and desist wherever it found evidence of discrimination.

JUL 22 1942

The Committee's power under the bill would be similar to the power of the National Labor Relations Board in cases of discrimination against union members.

WHAT NEGROES WANT NOW

Negroes in America want to be accorded full and equal rights as citizens in the commonwealth. They want all discriminatory laws repealed in the military establishment including segregation, and disfranchisement in public conveyances, public places of worship, amusement, housing and education. They desire to be integrated into the Army, Navy, Air and Marine Corps in all branches on the basis of ability.

JUL 23 1942

In this hour of grave national and international peril the great need is unity. And there can be none with color antipathies and racial hatred. Negroes want the allies to win the war. They want to help, but as full fledged citizens. Abolish the tenth column for the American Column.

YALE TEACHER PLEADS FOR NEGRO RIGHTS

NEW YORK, July 16—(ANP)—In a plea for colored people who will create a new world after the war rather than to restore the old one with all its injustices, Prof. Halford E. Luccock of Yale Divinity school cited to the congregation of Broadway tabernacle Sunday, the repression of the Negro race in America as being in need of postwar [illegible].

JUL 18 1942

"Today in the midst of and behind all the battles going on, there is the struggle for dominance between those who want to restore a vanished past and those who want to create a better future. The restorers include many people," declared Dr. Luccock. "There are the Col. Blimps, immortalized by the cartoonists Low, who with unshaken complacency, want to see the world in the precise order it was, as one would rearrange a formal living room after a party. There are the profiteers who want to get all four feet back in the financial trough in which they used to wallow. There are the lip servants of democracy, who use the word as a fighting slogan, but who have no use for democracy as an equalization of economic opportunities, as a more wide-spread sharing of the common wealth, as the lifting of the cruel repressions which hold twelve million Negroes in virtual economic and social bondage."

"The need today is for creators rather than restorers. It is not to put back old boundary lines because they once ran this particular spot; it is not to preserve any empires, British or American. It is to create a liveable world in which the already achieved economic interdependence is matched by a political order in which the dignity and welfare of manhood can be preserved."

Dr. Luccock, former editor of the Methodist Christian Advocate, the author of more than a score of religious books, is the son of the late Bishop Naphtali Luccock.

RACIAL STRIFE BREEDERS

No newspaper writer in America has been more fair and generous with the negro race than has Mark Ethridge, former Mississippian, now general manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times. All conservative leaders of the negroes are well-aware of that fact and all negroes should therefore give serious heed to the following paragraphs from an article written by Mr. Ethridge on the subject of racial relations:

> The Southern negro cannot afford to drive from his side, in his march to a greater fulfillment of his rights, the Southern white men of good will who have been his chief asset and his chief aid. He must recognize that there is no power in the world—not even in all the mechanized armies of the earth, Allied and Axis—which could now force the Southern white people to the abandonment of the principles of social segregation. It is a cruel disillusionment, bearing the germs of strife and perhaps tragedy, for any of their leaders to tell them that they can expect it, or that they can exact it as the price of their paricipation in the war.
>
> They would do better to learn, and to tell, plain truths to their people and to stimulate them into giving the evidence of self-discipline and the example of willingness to sacrifice which will shame the demagogic, and challenge the admiration of decent white people.

It is unfortunate that in Mississippi we now have a few—just a few—negroes whose activities bode no good for the welfare of their race and it is because of their intemperate utterances and pernicious activities that ill feeling has been engendered in some communities.

The Daily News is just as much against a white demagogue and mischief maker as a negro demagogue and mischief maker. Both should be sternly suppressed. It is to the best interests of both races to do so.

On The Negro Question—

Much ado has been made recently by a bunch of meddling Dam Yankees (all one word) about the negro question in the South, his not having equal rights and opportunities with the whites and all that sort of bunk we've heard of in the South since the days of the Civil War.

It is a shame and disgrace that we people in the South have to be unfavorably publicized throughout the Nation by such an unfair and unwarranted group of meddlers, mostly by people who could not make a living if they did not work for the government or some group financially able to support them without the making of a profit off of their labors.

They should study the negro. Know him as well as well as they expect Southerners to equalize him. Then they would have about as little to say as the little boy did when the calf ran over him.

5-6K

This president of the Hampton Institute coming to Birmingham to hold a conference to see why the negro is discriminated against in the South is of no value to him or the negro. We will venture he'd eat and sleep with them, he thinks so much of them. And all that other gang, including some radio boys from New York. They'd better keep tuned into the station and sudject they know.

If you know the negro, then you will know he has a place in the picture. The negro knows he has a place and he wants it and expects the white people to leave him alone, including the Dam Yankees.

Negroes that want to be somebody and take their place in the realm of things can make their way—and not in slavery, either—if let stay in their place and given employment in keeping with their ability. To think they are as smart and intelligent in every way as the South's white leaders is as absurd and as untrue. They might be as intelligent as some folks we have heard about, but that is beside the point.

We advise the group that have just concluded their conference in Birmingham on the Negro question to first clean up around their own back doorsteps before coming down South to interfere with the ways and doings of the folks in God's Country.

We might add poor white folks in the North have a much harder time getting along than does the average negro in the South. Why?

Mr. Hampton, Institute President, let that soak in before you start on another tour of embarrassment for American Democracy. If you have time aside from your theory and books you might read the Bible and learn how come the negro to be black.

COLLEGE DEGREES VS. EDUCATION

Editor, The Journal: Mr. H. C. Allen, of Douglas, Ga., is seeing true education in the right light. I have been taught, and I believe Mr. Allen has, that a true education, honestly obtained, is educating the whole person by training the mind, the soul and body in the good subjects he or she should know.

Mr. Allen knows, and our Governor knows, and I am acquainted with a few individuals who have all the degrees obtainable from accredited colleges throughout the nation and the holders of these degrees in some instances are unemployed, in debt and not making a decent living in keeping with their college training. All the above does not discredit a college education but goes to prove that the one with the most schooling is not the best educated.

If the just and unjust (most unjust) criticism that has been piled on our Governor's shoulders had originated from the ones with a "true education" instead from the "untruly educated" political backstabbers, the just criticism would outweigh the unjust criticism.

5-6-K

My personal long years acquaintanceship with our present Governor and the future governor for the next four years forces me to believe that he stands ready to try and correct some of his errors that he is accused of making during the balance of the present term of office and by all means correct all of them in the coming new term.

I do believe that there is not a man in the entire state of Georgia who had rather see the young people in Georgia "truly educated" in an accredited Georgia college than our Governor Talmadge; even to the cornfield Negro, provided the Negro is not "truly educated" in the same schools with the young white people. These desires have been proven by past performances in providing free school books to the students and prompt pay to all the teachers.

We know that we have as good teaching talent as there is in the nation, and as good buildings and equipment as any state in the nation ,with comparable population and wealth.

Let's stop this political back-stabbing and look forward to a brighter day, and let us all learn to do good by doing good.

As Pickens Sees It

IF YOU BUT LOOK, you may find in the Georgia weekly press some of the best thinking and most forceful writing to be observed in Southern journalism. Our country editors waste little time trying to muster up imposing verbiage; they express ther thoughts in simple, direct language. For example, look at this editorial taken from the current issue of the Pickens County Progress, "up in the mountains":

> "The Progress is not concerned about which is the more illiterate State, Georgia or New York. There is too much ignorance in both States for either to have anything to brag about. New York has more people who cannot read and write the English language than any other State in the Union, and Georgia has one of the highest percentages of those who canot read and write in any language.
>
> "The problems, created by Georgia's large Negro population and thinly settled areas and by New York's foreign population, are so important that both States had better get busy on them. We won't solve them by throwing off on each other."

5-6K

Georgia would have higher repute in the Nation if it were judged by the utterances of its small-town editors, instead of by misrepresentative spokesmen who are dignitaries only by virtue of the pranks of politics.

The Race Issue

By SPECTATOR

The race question is being stirred up. Nothing could be more unfortunate for our Colored people. We have several types of Colored people: (a) those who are trying to earn a livelihood by work and who work during the week and go to church on Sundays; (a) then we have some who have a political bee in their bonnet. They seem intent on forcing issues which our White people will resist, regardless of the Northern White people, Northern Colored people or Northern Democrats.

I have just had an illustration of the first type. The wife of a Colored tenant has been to see me. She is a good woman, honest, hard working and true. She and her husband have lived on my land eleven years. We have no rent contract; no hard and fast rules. And I have others like them. This woman came to see me because she heard that her father was in trouble "with the law." That is the relation of many White and Colored people. I talked to the Sheriff and to the Magistrate about the charge against the old man and told them how honorable he had always been with me and his other White neighbors. These colored people have White friends who will speak for them. In this case the law part of it is a row between two Colored families. I have, once or twice, had to speak for my Colored people when in difficulties with White people. That is what nearly all White people do: they show their friendship and regard for the Colored people who work for them or whom they have known. We want our Colored people to be treated considerably and fairly. Unfortunately the two races are drifting apart. Northern meddlers and politicians are fanning a flame of discontent which can have only a painful conclusion and embitter the White people against the Colored Race. Time after time I have written that our Northern Democrats have played false to us and that our Southern political fence-straddlers had betrayed us. This issue is coming to a head in the one final resort which could be seen from the beginning. I do not care to put it in words, but you can guess. Federal Courts, Northern Democrats, New Dealers, selfish, aspiring politicians can all take one side of the question, but the Southern White man is going to assert and maintain his traditional position.

Mr. Togo And Mr. Chang

BOTH THE JAPANESE AND THE CHINESE IN AMERICA HAVE SHOWN NO CONCERN IN US.

BY JOSEPH D. BIBB

SEP 12 1942

NEITHER TOGO, as many colored Americcans dub the Japanese, nor Chang, as we will style the Chinese in this country, have to this writer's best knowledge and belief, manifested any marked concern or interest in the affairs of the colored people of the United States. Both the American Japanese and the American Chinese have shown a marked preference to mingle and associate with the American whites rather than with us. At this writing the reasons are not important, as it is quite obvious that our yellow brothers did not desire to be branded and stigmatized along with us.

Mr. Bibb

The Japanese and the Chinese in America have held themselves aloof from us and have never engaged in the struggle with us to lift our yokes or shift our burdens. The Japanese people have not, to this writer's knowledge, engaged in any interracial effort in the United States in behalf of any of the darker minorities. Neither have the Chinese people. They have pursued their separate coursse, built up their businesses, jim-crowed us with impunity and sought to fill their coffers and break over the American racial barriers without the slightest manifestation of interest in us.

HAVE THE BRAZEN TEMERITY TO GLOAT

Many colored people in this country during recent months, have been heard to exult—under their breath—over the successes of Togo. Others have had the brazen temerity to gloat gleefully over the fall of Singapore and the seizure of the Aleutians. They seemed to feel that every time that Togo won a victory, white supermacy was being destroyed and their own chains unloosed a bit.

THEY have never reconciled themselves to the fact that the Japanese were not interested in them and that the best they could ever collect out of Japanese successes was a sort of vindictive satisfaction on the victory of a yellow man over a white one. The victory is indeed hollow when one realizes that the Japanese have never yet joined up in America with a single movement whereby our plight might be improved.

HAS ALSO MINDED HIS OWN BUSINESS

Mr. Chang, the Chinaman, has also strictly minded his own business. He has not been known to link his cause with ours. He has stoically and blandly remained to himself, and has not even concerned himself with absorbing our civilization, as did the Japanese. The cause of the yellow races cannot be linked to that of the dark Americans in the unclouded light of cold reason and clear logic.

THE psychology of the Japanese and the Chinese is oriental—diametrically different and distinct from ours. The Filipinos and the East Indians have, to some extent, integrated themselves among us, joined our movements and have in many instances made their cause analogous with ours, but not Togo and Chang. This leads us to conclude that even in this welter and confusion of racial wars and world-wide conflict, the American Negro had best focus his hopes and fears upon his own native land. He will waste his time chuckling over the Japanese successes. Whatever the outcome is, he at best will only be an incidental beneficiary.

OUR HOPE LIES IN THE "FOUR FREEDOMS"

The hope of the American Negro lies in the approach to the ideals and propaganda expressed in the "Four Freedoms'. True enough, the application of these Utopian concepts seems far removed, but if China and Japan ever worked out a separate peace we would be left entirely to the tender mercies of proponents of the new order.

This writer is willing to reiterate that we have a definite stake in this war. But he does not concede that our salvation depends on Togo and Mr. Chang. Our future depends on ourselves and the people in America who are willing to concede us a place in the social, political and economic life of the nation. Our ultimate lies in America. It lies in the United States . . . not in Europe, Asia or Africa.

THEY WHO HELP HITLER

SEP 4 1942

One man holding an office of high responsibility in this county appears to have become unduly and apparently hysterically alarmed over the possibility of a race conflict here, and we learn he is about to afflict a number of his colored friends with the same kind of jitters with which he is suffering.

According to the reports reaching us from several persons, with regard to this official's perturbation, he believes that colored persons in this city have become "unsettled" since Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt came here and participated in the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. Mrs. Roosevelt, it is reported, did or said something or the other while here that was definitely disturbing to hitherto peaceful race relations in Nashville.

We are taking note of the "case of jitters" that our high official is said to be suffering with, only because the Office of War Information of the Federal Government is pointing out that, in many places in the South, wild and unfounded rumors of forthcoming race riots and other disturbances are being circulated by thoughtless persons, who thereby are playing Hitler's game.

Hitler, it has [illegible] so often been pointed out, is positive that conquering America will be an easy "inside job." Hitler bases his hope on conquering this country by producing confusion among us and by fanning the flames of racial and class hatreds.

We are confident that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, like the President, is aware of the plans of the enemies of this country to create race riots and that is why she has worked so hard to bring the white and colored people of this country together into a closer bond of trust, friendship and co-operation.

We think it is an attempt to reflect upon Mrs. Roosevelt's sound judgment and patriotism to say or insinuate she did or said anything in Nashville that countenances or excuses racial conflicts. Certainly no member of the Negro race got any such inspiration from the First Lady's visit to this city, nor do we believe that any sane white person was angered into desire to precipitate racial trouble.

This war, above everything else, is calling for greater sacrifices upon the part of Americans than they have ever made before. It challenges Negro citizens to be patient and loyal in the face of the adamant decision of many Americans to exclude Negroes from a full and fair part in the working and fighting that are necessary for victory.

It calls for sacrifice of archaic ideas by white people, who feel that including Negroes in the plans for winning the war abroad and for maintaining the highest morale of the people back home would bring on "social equality." It is not called "social equality" to call upon Negro soldiers to face the enemy on battlefields, with equality of opportunity for dying. Nor is it "social equality" to give Negro civilians jobs in proportion to their population and at equal pay to that given persons of every other race or group.

The fact that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, here as everywhere, has advocated a square deal for Negroes, both in the war and in civilian pursuits, does not convict her of having put any new or strange ideas into the heads of Negroes of Nashville. White people who think that Negroes in Nashville or anywhere else were a happy and contented people under the lash of racial discrimination, until Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt came along, prove by that thought that they they don't know Negroes.

No President in all history has done more for the material betterment of the South than has President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Both he and Mrs. Roosevelt are anxious to contribute more to both the material and spiritual betterment of the South. Negroes of the South by PATIENCE and white people by TOLERANCE can and should give both the President and the First Lady heartwarming demonstrations of our loyalty to them and to our nation in the tragic crisis through which we are now passing.

'White Supremacy' Cry Is Raised Anew In South

South Carolina And Georgia Raise Issue In Two Torrid Races

ATLANTA, Aug. 28—(WIDE WORLD) — "White supremacy," password to political success in another era of the South, rang anew from the stumps of Georgia and South Carolina this year, while in Arkansas negroes looked courtward for entry to Democratic primaries which name Southern officials.

Opponents of those who raised the question said that all white Democrats are for white supremacy, that there is no threat to that supremacy, and therefore no basis for such an issue.

In South Carolina, the one who campaigned on a white supremacy plank was defeated narrowly, in Georgia the voting still is to be done.

But these two states served to stir voters to an excitement which is lacking across Dixie generally in this first election year of World War II.

Few races have done more than bring up local issues, and a majority of the senators and representatives offering again were nominated without opposition.

Virginia had a heated contest when the labor question appeared dominantly in Representative Howard Smith's challenge by Emmett C. Davidson, secretary-treasurer of the International Machinists Union (AFL). Davidson attacked Smith's advocacy of several amendments to the Wagner labor relations act, and his espousal of an unsuccessful bill to ban strikes during the war. After the intense campaign, Smith was renominated by a four to one vote in the district centering at Alexandria, across the Potomac from Washington.

The pensions for congressmen fight was rehashed in Georgia's Fifth congressional district, when two opponents came out against Representative Robert Ramspeck, author of the measure which was passed (and later repealed), giving congressmen civil service retirement benefits.

Aside from these issues, the campaigns in the solid Democratic belt of the South furnished little material for others than the homefolks. With senators and representatives almost to a man behind the Administration in both domestic and foreign policies, there was no "isolationism" to debate, practically no opportunity for an incumbent to be challenged as derelict in his responsibilities to the nation's war leaders.

With primaries already held in all states except Louisiana and Georgia, only a negligible number of incumbents met defeat, and in all of the states, the Democratic nomination virtually means success in the November general elections.

It was on this basis that the Arkansas Negro Democratic Association launched its drive to gain entry to the primary. Members were sent to the polls during the primary, were turned away as ineligible under party rules, and on this the association plans to base an appeal to Federal courts. The association cites a Supreme court ruling that primaries involving federal officers are subject to federal regulation—and the association instructed its members to seek to ballot only for federal officers.

Just this week, U.S. Attorney General Biddle notified District Attorney Sam Rorex at Little Rock he had ordered a Federal grand jury investigation into alleged election frauds and civil rights violations in Arkansas. Biddle said the FBI had been investigating the charges, and at Fort Smith, Ark., a Federal judge instructed a grand jury to probe primary fraud allegations, but made no mention of the civil rights question, which Biddle said involved the denial of voting privileges to qualified negroes.

The racial question did not enter the Arkansas primary, which resulted in nomination for the Senate of former Congressman John L. McClellan, forced into a second (run-off) primary against State Attorney General Jack Holt for the place of an interim appointee ineligible to offer. McClellan will serve with Senator Hattie Caraway, whom he unsuccessfully opposed four years ago.

The racial question in South Carolina was injected into the senatorial campaign, while in Georgia it went into the race for governor.

Eugene S. Blease, 65-year-old former chief justice of the South Carolina Supreme court went from county to county in the state's unique parade of candidates with his cry of a threat to white supremacy, but the voters renominated Senator Burnet R. Maybank in the closest vote the state has had in a major race in many years.

Blease, who campaigned with the fiery oratory which brought many political successes to his half brother, the late Senator Cole Blease, was criticised by many newspapers for "raising" the racial question. He replied that he did not raise the question, that it was thrust upon the state by the effort earlier this year of a group of negroes to gain the vote in the primary, an effort thrown out by the state's party.

Maybank held there was no basis for arguing the question, that there was no issue involved, because there was no effort to break down white supremacy. Blease contended that the policies of the present national Administration tended to break into the state's traditional policies, and therefore South Carolina needed a protector in Washington.

Georgia's racial question faced the same condition with one candidate — Governor Eugene Talmadge — arguing the point, and his opponent — youthful Attorney General Ellis Arnall — saying there was no issue. In the gubernatorial race in which they faced each other, the central debate was over the management of the state university system.

Several colleges were ordered off accredited lists of various college associations last year, when Talmadge forced the release of several faculty members on charges of advocating racial co-education in state institutions. The accrediting groups said there was political interference in the state's educational system, the faculty members denied the Talmadge charges.

As the campaign battle edges toward the Sept. 9 primary, Arnall and the governor stress their educational platforms. The rotund attorney-general promises to divorce the university system from political control, in order to restore suspended ratings. Talmadge champions what he terms white supremacy against alleged threats from "foreign" educational interests.

It's the "cracker state's" most heated race in several years.

RACE TROUBLE RUMOR IS SQUELCHED BY FBI

Mayor, Police, Negro Leaders Also Place Blame On Unfounded Gossip

Rumors of racial unrest which have been agitating Memphis have been found baseless by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Mayor Chandler, Memphis police and negro leaders.

Percy Wyly, special agent in charge of the Memphis office of the FBI, said last night an investigation has failed to discover any indication of organized disloyalty among the negroes of Memphis.

A group of negro citizens issued a statement to the effect that those spreading the false rumors would be looked upon as "traitors."

Should Stop Rumors

Special Agent Wyly added that the spreading of false rumors is a known propaganda trick used by the Axis governments and, although there is no indication of foreign inspired agitation in this area, the practice of repeating rumors should cease, for it acts to harm civilian morale, and, therefore, deters the American war effort.

Joe Boyle, commissioner of public safety, said:

"This talk is the result of a lot of irresponsible people playing with gossip."

Mayor Chandler's statement follows:

"It is unfortunate that good citizens, when excited, sometimes spread rumors which, on even casual investigation, would have been found absolutely groundless.

"The persistent rumors that various Government agencies here were apprehensive of sabotage or other trouble evidently arose from the fact of increases in the personnel at the Memphis Municipal Airport for the purpose of guarding valuable property moving in and out of the port. It is only common sense that, in proportion to the value of war equipment, materiel, and supplies on hand, increased protection be given against any possible damage or loss.

All Well Protected

"All of the Government operations, and even privately-owned plants in Memphis having war contracts, are adequately protected, with increases in personnel whenever advisable. Likewise, the Memphis Police Department is in constant touch with every phase of the city's safety, and is equipped to protect all of the people of this community at all times.

"Therefore, the City Commission hopes that those who have received and passed on the unfounded rumors will correct the erroneous reports, and will disabuse their own minds of any supposed unrest among the people of our city. We have a loyal and patriotic citizenry which must not be swept off its feet in any crisis; especially by false propaganda at a time like the present, when we need every ounce of strength and nervous energy for the fight against the Axis enemies."

The negro citizens issued the following statement:

"To the citizens of Memphis:

"Reports have come to our attention that unrest exists among the negroes of Memphis.

"Such reports are grossly untrue.

"The negroes of Memphis are patriotic and lawabiding. They are loyal and faithful to the democratic principles and idealism of the United States.

Realize Situation

"Their first interest is in helping, to the limit of their ability, the winning of the war which endangers all—white and colored. They realize and understand that should the enemy be victorious that they, as a race, would be among the first to feel the sting of the totalitarian whiplash.

"They realize that there may be persons in Memphis who will seek to create a breach between them and their fellow white citizens.

"They realize that there are persons who would—if they could—destroy the happy and constructive relationships which have so long existed between the white and colored citizens of Memphis.

"For those reasons they wish to assure the people of Memphis that they will do their very utmost to sustain this happy relationship. To that end they will co-operate to the very limit with the government of Memphis, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Have No Grievance

"The negro has no grievance against the white people of Memphis and will regard anyone, white or negro, who spreads rumors to the effect that they have such grievance and are planning trouble, as a traitor."

The statement was signed by the following:

J. A. Beauchamp, executive secretary of the Negro Chamber of Commerce.

A. A. Latting, attorney, Negro Chamber of Commerce.

Dr. R. Q. Vinson, executive committeeman, Autress Russell Post 27, American Legion.

L. C. Sharpe, principal of Douglass School.

Dr. J. B. F. Shaw, pastor of Centenary Methodist Church.

W. Alonzo Locke, Hotelmen's Improvement Club.

Radio Message

"For a specific case of what rumors can do, let's come right to our own doorstep—right here at home—in Memphis.

"For several days now rumors have been going the rounds of impending racial disturbances. They were nothing but rumors. As they were spread from one person to another these untrue rumors gained in scope and damaging effect. Soon, hundreds of Memphis people were talking about a rumor that had no foundation whatsoever.

Probed By FBI

"These rumors have been thoroughly investigated, according to Percy Wyly, special agent in charge of the local FBI office, and there is no racial trouble in Memphis. Let me repeat. These rumors are groundless and there is no racial trouble in Memphis. The next time you hear a person say there is, ask him where he found out. Pin down the rumor-mongers! Make them tell you the facts. And you'll discover that what they are spreading are complete falsehoods.

"You know, this business of rumors is a well known propaganda trick of a fellow by the name of Hitler—and his cohorts, Hirohito and Mussolini. These aggressors want to spread rumor—for by doing so they make it easier to conquer a country.

"So, stop spreading rumors! Every time you listen to a rumor and repeat it, you're playing on Hitler's ball team and you're helping him to beat your boy at the front."

Segregation In The South

Anniston Star

The Anniston Star has long maintained that there would be no racial trouble between the whites and blacks in the South if outside agitation and influences were kept out of the picture. Along those lines we are heartily in favor of Governor Dixon's refusal to sign a contract with the federal government for-convict - made cloth due to the fact that a non-discrimination clause was contained in the contract.

In his refusal, Governor Dixon declared that the federal government was seeking to abolish race segregation in the South, a principle under which white and Negro races have lived in peace together for all the years since Reconstruction Days.

Governor Dixon charges that under cover of this particular clause in the contract which he rejected, the Fair Employment Practice Committee of the government has been operating to break down this same principle of segregation of races, to force Negroes and white people to work together, intermingle with each other, and even bring about the situation where white people will have to work under Negroes.

Continuing, the Governor's statement said: "A careful study of the committee hearings recently held in Birmingham disclosed that, however sincere the protestations of the committee members to the contrary, actually there was placed on trial the entire system of race segregation of the South, and that with the single exception of Mark Etheridge of Louisville, Ky., there was no realization in the minds of any of the committee members of the basic necessity for any such system. The clear intimation was that unless the Southern people changed their way of living and abandoned the principle of segregation, they would be forced to do so by the federal government."

Abolishment of the segregation policy is a step that would be distasteful to the Negroes as well as the whites. Both want the system retained, for they realize that abandonment of this principle would lead to disastrous conditions.

Under the principle of segregation, the two races live in near-perfect harmony. Both realize the other's problems and limitations. While there are instances of misconception on the parts of both, these are isolated incidents, and can be blamed upon human failings rather than that of the system.

In this connection, the action of 12 of Gadsden's leading Negroes Saturday in wiring Governor Dixon on their approval of his remarks provides a striking example of the success of the system. The wire, in part, stated: "Our past and present relations with our white people are satisfactory and we do not want any strife to mar our pleasant relationship."

Thinking people of the South, both white and black, want the Negro educated and trained. They realize, however, that these things must be done, can be done, and are being done within the framework of the existing social structures. The present war emergency must not be used as a pretext to bring about abolition of color lines in the South.

Responsible Negro leaders, such as the Gadsden group, know that the Southern white man is the best friend their race possesses. They know that the whites in the South are perfectly willing to accord the Negro any place that he earns through his own efforts. The Negro race has made tremendous strides forward in the comparatively few short years since the days of slavery, and these responsible Negro leaders are perfectly willing to be allowed to work out their own salvation. They know that whenever they need help of the whites, that help will be forthcoming.

Contrary to the common belief in other sections of the nation, and especially high circles in Washington, the Negro in the South does not consider himself mistreated. He does not ask nor want the sympathy of anyone. He wants only to earn his own way, and he knows that his progress will not be hampered by the Southern white race. Left alone, he and his white friends pull together in unison, but the foreign agitators are not satisfied with that. They seek to make trouble where none existed, bring strife into the picture instead of harmony.

But while we resent the effort on the part of the federal government to enforce fair employment by bureaucratic fiat, we can envisage a certain harm that the Governor's statement might have: it might give comfort to Georgia's firebrand Governor Eugene Talmadge, who is making his campaign for a third term on the issue of racial antagonism.

There is all the difference in the world between Dixon and Talmadge, however, the one being a statesman and the other a demagogue; and while Northern newspapers may take advantage of the opportunity to classify them together, we believe that every person in the South who knows the Alabama Governor will recognize that he is a true friend of the Negro race and of education and that his protest was inspired purely out of a resentment of what appears to be another Force Bill in disguise.

Moreover, while we believe the attitude assumed by Governor Dixon will have a salutary effect, we do not subscribe to the suggestion of Horace Wilkinson of Birmingham that there be organized a nation-wide campaign to protect white supremacy. That, in effect, is an invitation to a resurgence of the Ku-Klux Klan, and if a greater calamity could befall the South or the nation than that, we do not know what it could be in this circial period of our history when we need harmony among all races and creeds in order to save ourselves from slavery.

Both Races Locked In Controversy

Rev. E. M. Wilson Threatens to Have Mortgage Foreclosed in Ouster Fight Raging Over Telegram to Governor of State.

SEP 5 1942

By JOSEPH BELL

GADSDEN, Ala., Sept. 3.—Rev. E. M. Wilson, leader of the eleven men here who sent a telegram to Gov. Dixon endorsing his race views recently, has flatly refused to resign and has threatened the members of Friendship Baptist church, where he pastors, with having the mortgage foreclosed.

In repeated warnings to his congregation, Pastor Wilson has envisioned dire consequences to the church if they did not leave him alone. Several of the officials of his church claim that, although they are extremely anxious for Rev. Mr. Wilson to resign, he has the upper hand because the white people of the city are backing him up and he has threatened to make the white mortgage holder foreclose on the church if they attempted to oust him.

A movement is under way to petition leading Baptists of the State to help the membership in getting rid of their pastor without losing their church.

The chairman of the trustee board has been threatened by irate whites by seeking to protect Rev. Wilson in continuing his charge at Friendship. In the meantime, Rev. Wilson is still active in trying to have the wages of Negro workers in local plants lowered because he is opposed to their throwing away so much money.

Two of Wilson's fellow-signers of the telegram to Governor Dixon (members of his church) are active in his behalf in retaining his position as pastor.

Southern Peace

The Governor of Alabama, the Honorable Frank M. Dixon declared last week that the Federal Government is adopting policies "to break down the principle of segregation under which the White and Negro races have lived in peace together in the South since reconstruction".

AUG 1 1942

Since reconstruction the South's segregation laws have caused hundreds of Negroes to be lynched. Thousands have been tortured, jailed and condemned to death. Segregation laws have denied Negroes the right to vote, have caused them to be brought up in ignorance under the South's poor system of education of Negroes. Segregation laws of the South have caused Negroes to live in squalor an to be economically exploited. There are many other evils that the system of the South's segregation has brought to bear upon the Negro since reconstruction, but let us bring the evils closer home.

The type of peace Negroes enjoy in the South is best exhibited by the following more recent incidents:

The Scottsboro Case
The Herndon Case
Waller's Execution
The Flagstaff, Arizona, incident
The Railroad Station incident in Houston
Willie Vinson's lynching
The attack upon Roland Hayes

56K

If these incidents represent "peace", then Negroes are asking for War.

AUG 1 1942

Governor Dixon, Governor Talmadge of Georgia, and the Governors and white residents of all other Southern states had better learn quickly that segregation based on race in all of its forms is on the way out.

Today a new world is being formed, and there are no plans in that formation to accommodate the expensive system of racial segregation. Segregation and all those who advocate it, are doomed to die just as hard a death as Hitler, Hirohito or Mussolini. These four will die together:

Fascism, Nazism, Militarism, Jim-crowism.

America is fighting this war on two fronts. It is fighting its enemies at home and abroad. Its enemies at home are all those who seek to promote disunity among the civilian population by setting up a system of caste based on race.
